Studying should be divided into casual reading for which Mr. Wensley earnestly advocated the objective reading of one's own company's house organ, the Life Underwriters' News and the Life Insurance Salesman, to which the most outstanding of the country's successful underwriters contributed from their knowledge and experience. For organized study he recommended the company's course of study and the course leading to the degree of C.L.U. Nothing the life underwriter could do would contribute more to his success.

"Everything we want," he concluded, "has a price tag. The price here is the sacrifice of time and energy necessary for study which will make us experts in our line."

Appreciation of the members was ably expressed by Mr. A. L. Burke, past president, who referred to Mr. Wensley's address as one of the most practical and informative heard in some time.

Creator of the Seeing Eye

Mrs. Dorothy Harrison Eustis, who died last week in New York at the age of 60, will long be honored for a unique service to her fellowmen. It was she who began in the United States training of dogs as eyes for the blind. She was founder of the nonprofit organization at Morristown, N.J., now celebrated as The Seeing Eye, Inc.

Here is another instance of a hobby assuming proportions undreamed of at the beginning. Mrs. Eustis early in life acquired a deep interest in scientific matters of various kinds. We are told that when but a child she conducted scientific farming experiments at Hoosick Falls, N.Y., in conjunction with the state department of agriculture.

Just after the First World War she began experiments in dog breeding on her estate in Switzerland, paying special attention to mental and working capacities. She observed that the German shepherd dog was losing its native intelligence by breeding for show purposes.

With the assistance of Elliott S. Humphrey, a geneticist, she began to retrieve the German shepherd by training it for police work, to patrol Swiss borders and to trail and find missing persons.

In the middle of the 1920s interest broadened out to include work done in Europe in training dogs as guides for the blind, and she wrote an article about it for the Saturday Evening Post. As a result of this article a young American who was blind went to her Swiss estate to be trained in the use of a guide dog.

The success of this experiment led to the establishment of The Seeing Eye. Here dogs are trained, first alone and then with the master. Only a part of the cost is paid by those who obtain the dogs, the rest by charity.

Our "Operations"

Wars always "enrich" the language, though there are many who hold to the opinion that they simply clutter up the vocabulary with new words of doubtful value. One is inclined to agree with this school of thought when consideration is given to this "operation" business.

The war established the fashion of labeling military undertakings with code names, says the Windsor Star, necessary for purposes of secrecy in advance, all following the same general pattern of "operations." We had "Operation Gauntlet," "Operation Overlord," "Operation Sledgehammer," "Operation Lion," and a host of others. Since the cessation of hostilities, but still connected with military strategy, we have had "Operation Muskox," "Operation Crossroads," "Operation North," and so on and on.

It was bad enough when the habit stayed within the military zone, but now it is showing signs of infiltrating into our ordinary civilian life. When the American O.P.A. swooped down on the huge black market in cars, for instance, the campaign became officially known as "Operation Circus."

Personally, we are growing a little tired of all this surgical chatter. If you will excuse us, we shall just wander off to "Operation T-bone," followed by "Operation Grandslam," and finally come to "Operation Mattress," where, we trust, we can forget the whole affair.

Onion Stew

(New York Times Edtorial)

The countryman is heartened by a recent report from the nation's capital. According to the usual formula an authoritative source urges that more Americans eat more onions. It was recommended that onion stew be considered seriously in view of its piquant flavor, aroma and deliciousness. This is excellent advice from the Department of Agriculture. The liliaceous Asiatic plant, Allium cepa, with its edible bulb of pungent taste and odor, has never had the recognition it deserves in our national economy.

Onion gourmets know the peculiarly satisfying goodness of onion soup, plain and creamed. Tender, small, new onions fresh from the garden are a favorite boiled or fried. But possibly the happiest use of late summer onions is in a co-operative amalgamation with certain other ingredients. Onion stew needs a foundation of a little beef, cut in small cubes and simmered a long period over a back burner in a quart of water. A half pound of meat is ample. To this add one-half cup of diced carrots, one young purple-top turnip about two inches in diameter, one freshly dug potato the size of a Barred Plymouth Rock's egg cut in pieces the size of large kidney beans and eight small onions the size of crab apples.

The secrets of first-flight onion stew are these: first, the flavor of onion must dominate the situation; second, the stew must be very thick; and third, after the stew is cooked it must be set on the back of the stove to cool before it is reheated and served. A heaping soup plate of this, piping hot and generating a fragrance that permeates the kitchen, lets a man know he has a supper of substance and authority. Topped with a wedge or two of cold, rich squash pie and a glass of milk a man faces a complicated world with equanimity.

Worshipping the Wrong Animals

Most of us are inclined to adopt a superior attitude and murmur about pagan stupidity and superstition when we read of the Chinese Emperor who conferred a dukedom on a dog, and of the Roman Emperor who had his horse "Incitatus" solemnly installed as a Consul of Rome. But let none of us think the days of animal worship have passed into history, comments the Ottawa Journal. With almost precise regularity come reports every few months of women — spinsters mostly — leaving large sums of money to their pet cats, of persons attempting to procure burial of dogs in Christian cemeteries, of people raising statues to horses. All in all it is harmless enough. But if one must go in for wosrhip of animals, why not pay homage to the ones of vital import — those which provide steaks, pork chops or crown roasts?

Crowded Kindergartens

One notes, for example, that first-grade and kindergarten attendance has increased enormously with the opening of school this fall. Looking for the answer one's thoughts go back five years to the preparedness program of 1941, to Pearl Harbor and to a flood of war marriages.

Very often the same dispatch which records the increased school attendance at the kindergarten level tells of declining registration in the upper grades, particularly in junior high schools. The answer in this case is quite as clear as in the other.

Because of widespread unemploment and protracted depression, marriages were postponed in the early 1930s and the birth rate dropped off sharply. These phenomena are clearly reflected now in the number of students of secondary school age.

Here is a problem for the educational planners. In order to train teachers in the right proportion for pupils from the lowest elementary grades to the last year of high school they must know well in advance not only when prosperity will give way to depression but when wars will come and approximately how long they will last.

Planning is intriguing. But intelligent planning in many fields requires more knowledge of future events than the Creator in His wisdom has permitted mankind to have.

—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Good-breeding is not confined to externals, much less to any particular dress or attitude of the body; it is the art of pleasing or contributing as much as possible to the ease and happiness of those with whom you converse.—Fielding.

RIGHT AND WRONG

If right and wrong were clearly shown,
And what will follow could be known,
Then anyone in health could lead.
The future anyone could read.

But it has been what seemed mishap
Has often led to fortune's lap,
And what has seemed the best at first,
Has proved in time to be the worst.

'Tis plain tha tall are born to grope
'Twixt good and ill and cling to hope;
Within our light to do our best,
And leave to God and Time the rest.

In vain to whine in discontent.
When harmful proves the good we meant
Do what seems best to mortal sight,
God knows we can't always be right.

Daughter Told Not to Warn Dad Says Witness

Whitby, Sept. 20. (CP)—The Crown case was still being presented today as trial resumed of George Bilton, 25, Oshawa welder, charged with murder in the rock-slayings of Mrs. Theresa Laurie, 23, and her four-year-old daughter, Patricia.

The bodies of the woman and child were found near the highway at Ajax, 25 miles east of Toronto, last June 16, three days after the woman and child had left their Ajax home. The head of both victims had been crushed by a large boulder, found near the bodies.

The crown case is being handled by Cecil J. Snyder, K.C., deputy attorney-general, with Louis Isaacs of Toronto representing the accused.

In opening his case yesterday the Crown Counsel said it would attempt to prove that Bilton was a frequent visitor to Mrs. Laurie's home while her husband was absent and that he had persuaded her to leave her husband. They were actually departing from Ajax, he contended, when "something happened on the way" and the slaying occurred.

Among witnesses called by the Crown yesterday was Barbara Laurie, the slain woman's 14-year-old daughter, who was asked whether Bilton ever had said anything to her about the girl telling her father Bilton was visiting the Laurie home. "He told me he'd smash my face if I ever told Dad," she testified.

Chinese Communist Negotiator Leaves Peace Discussions

(Written Especially For The Associated Press)

By BETTY GRAHAM

Shanghai, Sept. 20 (AP)—Chou En-Lai, Chinese Communist negotiator, announced in an exclusive interview today that he had walked out on the Nanking peace discussions.

He declared at his Shanghai home that he would return to Nanking only if Chiang Kai-Shek agrees to reconvene the military committee of three—Gen. Marshall and Chinese government and Communist representatives.

The committee was set up in January in an effort to effect a truce in China's civil strife but has been impotent since June because of Kuomintang (government party)-Communist difference.

Chou termed the Nanking negotiations "senseless" and said they were designed "to camouflage the true civil war situation and black out the truth from the American and Chinese publics."

He said United States policy in China has resulted in a military situation "of the full stature of nation-wide civil war." He reiterated that the Communists would fight regardless of the amount of United States assistance to the Kuomintang.

The Reds demand that Chiang Kai-Shek order a national armistice before they will sit down for political discussions; Chiang has insisted that political peace precede any militasy truce.

"The Communists do not ask United States help, they only ask that America help the Kuomintang establish peace in China — a peace creating a coalition government under which the Communists already have agreed to reduce their armed strength to one-sixth of China's total army," he said.

Chou said American policy in China already has resulted in "destruction of Chinese industry and small handicraft" through a program of dumping surplus United States war materials on the Chinese market.

He asserted that in Shanghai United States commodities are glutting the black market, frequently underselling Chinese products, and that bread is cheaper than rice.

Five Masked Men Steal Diamonds

Jerusalem, Sept. 20 — (CP) — Five masked men Thursday raided Tel Aviv's Diamond Export Union and stole some diamonds awaiting export to the United States. Reuters news agency said the diamonds were valued at £6,000 ($24,000).

News of the theft came as Palestine Jews pressed a campaign intended to stamp out bloody underground violence which has cost scores of lives in the Holy Land and brought reports of threats by Arabs "to fight Jewish terrorism with all our strength."

In Tel Aviv, motion picture programs were interrupted Wednesday night by speakers identified as members of Hagana, the principal Jewish underground organization, who condemned the violence of Irgun Zvai Leumi and the Stern gang.

HEAVEN ONLY KNOWS—THE DOCTOR DOESN'T

Interception of cough; or sneeze spray is "most important for the individual with the cold," says Dr. Albert D. Kaiser health officer of Rochester, N.Y., in a bulletin on "The Common Cold" published in Hospital News Service.

Dr. Kaiser does not define "the common cold"—for that matter, does any physician of health authority do so?—so, as in all such advice on how to keep well the reader or listener must make his or her own definition.

Now, hold your horses, old timers. I'm not trying to be funny nor am I trying to make people use another name for the familiar name people and doctors everywhere apply to heaven knows what illness in the early and more communicable stages. I'm merely trying to pound into your brittle senorium the fact that you never know and neither does your doctor what you may be coming down with when you guess you have "the common cold." Meningitis? Infantile Paralysis? Scarlet Fever? Mild coryza or mild sore throat? Measles? Influenza? Sinusitis? Diphtheria? I repeat, heaven only knows what is will prove to be—and I repeat again, no doctor can tell in the early and most communicable stage just what it will prove to be.

That is the idea I hope to convey—naturally not to you old fossils, for your minds have set like plaster of Paris and are no longer susceptible to new impressions—to the susceptible minds of young folk—and the young ones are my meat—when I suggest the term cri (kree) to apply to any such common respiratory infection in the earlier stage before a diagnosis can be made. The word is coined from the initial letters of that somewhat combersome phrase. So, when you say you have the cri, you imply that it is probably one or another common respiratory infection, so you warn every one to keep out of your spray range or approach you at his own peril. That's the golden rule of hygiene—and a rule that few doctors or people have the decency to follow.

While I'm uttering these animadversions on medical practice and popular custom let me emphasize that Dr. Kaiser mentioned only cought and sneeze spray. However important interception of cough and sneeze spray may be for the individual with the "cold", interception of the blighter's conversation spray is most important for the innocent—or I should say ignorant, unenlightened bystander, playmate, pupil, teacher, customer, salesman, dentist, patient, hair dresser, client, ticket-seller, patron, driver, passenger, etc. The only difference between cough or sneeze spray and conversation spray is that the latter has a range of less that five feet as compared with ten or twelve feet for the former—but conversation spray is just as deadly whether the conventions forbid mention of it or not.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why is Iowa called the Hawk-eye State?

"Hawkeye" as the nickname of Iowa was first formally proposed March 24, 1838, in the Fort Madison "Patriot" of which James G. Edwards was publisher. David Rorer, lawyer and legal writer who settled at Burlington in Des Moines County in 1836, claimed to have suggested the cognomen to Edwards. Later Edwards moved his paper to Burlington and changed its name to the Burlington Hawk-Eye, which accounts for the saying that Iowa received its nickname from a newspaper. The suggested sobriquet was immediately approved by many prominent Iowans and it was gradually adopted by common sense after it was used in a series of letters printed in the newspapers of Iowa Territory in 1839.

It is generally supposed that "Hawkeye" was derived from the name of the famous Sauk Indian war chief Black Hawk, who had lived in southeastern Iowa, who had led the Black Hawk War of 1832 and who died on the Des Moines River in Iowa on October 3, 1838, six months before Edwards had proposed the nickname in the Ft. Madison "Patriot." Edwards himself thought that the adoption of the nickname would "rescue from oblivion a memento, at least, of the name of the old chief."

Many reference works state that Iowa was nicknamed "Hawkeye" from a famous Indian chief so named who was a terror to the early voyageurs and traders who visited that region. There is, however, no positive evidence that Black Hawk or any other Indian chief answering the description was known as Hawk-eye. Black Hawk's native name was Ma-ka-tai-me-she-kia-kiak "Black Sparrow Hawk," and h may have been known to som of the whites as Hawkeye. Ther appears to have been an Indian legend of a great black hawk tha hovered over the Mississipp River and saw everything tha went on. This story of the all-seeing black hawk may have suggested Hawkeye as the nicknam for Iowa and as an appropriat name for his newspaper to Edwards.

"Hawkeye" as well as Leatherstocking and The Pathfinder wa one of the nicknames of Natty (Nathaniel Bumpo, the centra character in James Fenimor Cooper's series of novels know as the Leatherstocking Tal which were published betw 1823 and 1841. Natty Bumpo, called Hawkeye because of his alertness, is represented as a brav and resourceful pioneer an woodsman who possesses uncanny skill as a scout and Indian fighter. He is a romantic type o the hardy race who conquered the Western wilderness and prepared it for settlement. The Leatherstocking Tales were best-sellers when Iowa became a Territory, and when it acquired it nickname about 1838 Hawkey was one of the most famous literary characters in America. It wa in "The Prairie" (1837) tha Cooper finally left his great scou dead and buried, although late he fitted two other novels int the series. In all probability Edwards or Rorer, in suggestin Hawkeye as the nickname o Iowa, consciously or unconsciously borrowed the sobriquet fro the tales of James Fenimor Cooper, then at the height o their popularity.

CHUCK BARRIAGE SCORES 4-1 WIN OVER THE FLIERS

Swacos Win First Game in Semi-Final Series for League Title

Behind the six-hit hurling of the veteran chucker "Chuck" Barriage, the Saco baseball club went one up in their semi-finals series with the Trenton Flyers at the Alemite Field last night. The score was 4-1.

The game was the first of a three-of-five series for the right to enter the finals of the Belleville Senior Baseball League championship. The teams play again on Monday and Thursday. Other dates if necessary will be announced later

"Chuck" Barriage held the Trenton bats to six hits over the nine-innings route, one of them a two-bagger by White. The war-club manager coach Moose Matthews of the Flyers, one of the most potent in the league was silent. The "Moose" didn't get a hit. Barriage struck out five and walked one.

Al. Wade, Flyers righthander was touched for nine clouts including a triple by Genereaux. He whiffed nine and walked three.

Genereaux Gets Triple

Swacos scored one in the first innings when Genereaux the first man up lined out his triple and scored on Wade's error. They got two more in the third when they clustered three hits off the bats of Rowbotham, Gerow and Whitman, aided by an error on the part of the Flyers shortstop.

Fitzpatrick and Gerow hit safely in the fifth with the former scoring Swacos last run when Gill dropped a high fly.

Genereaux robbed Moose Matthews of a potential home-run when he made a brilliant running catch of the Flyer coach's towering fly. Lefty Whitman also staged a spectacular fielding play in pulling down a long fly, but injured his ankle in the attempt.

That's the cautious word of Dr. W. G. Hardy, veteran president of the International Ice Hockey Association, the body which controls world amateur hockey. The scope of the playoff depends on what arrangements can be made with European hockey organizations.

But even as things stand at present, the esteemed doctor says the I.I.H.A. is prepared to launch a world hockey championship with the affiliations it now has, which include most of the countries playing "important" amateur hockey.

Proposals have been sent to the Ligue Internationale De Hockey Sur Glace, a Belgian-controlled has long been recognized which has long been recognized as the hockey world on the continent.

These proposals were for a merger in which Canada's paramount position in ice hockey would be recognized and carefully safe-guarded and the Brussels organization has approved them in principle.

If the world hockey playoff comes off and includes the continental zone, it would, in effect, work like this.

There would be a European playoff involving teams from Britain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Switzerland, France and perhaps other countries where the game is played according to recognized rules. Meanwhile there would be another playoff in Canada and United States amateur circuits.

The two North American winners would play off with the two European semi-finalists with the winners meeting for the world amateur hockey crown. Hence you might find Canada vs the U.S. for the championship or you might find two European teams surviving to the finals.

The doctor said Russia doesn't recognize ruling hockey authorities, plays a mixup game resembling field hockey with unorthodox sticks and has not accepted offers already made to embrace her in the I.I.H.A. if she would change her rules.

Toronto, Sept. 20—(CP)—The yearly "kid line" dreams of Conny Smythe, the astute, little manager of the National Hockey League Toronto Maple Leafs, may not be getting better all the time but at least they still don't deter him from hoping another such famous combination of his can be developed eventually.

To Smythe and the club's faithful fans the memory of the fame and prowess of his first "baby face" line hasn't dimmed through the years. And Smythe, as wise as anyone to the drawing power of another fuzzy-faced attacking threesome, makes no secret of the fact he again would like to capitalize on one.

In the early '30s his initial kid line of Charlie Conacher, Joe Primeau and Busher Jackson was the bulwark of the Leaf team of that era and their efforts alone practically drew enough customers into Maple Leaf Gardens to make it a sound investment.

Ever since that unit broke up the head Leaf pilot has been shopping continually for another such line to take its place and add that dash of color to the team that somehow or other went with its presence. Smythe attempted to do it again a few years back when Art Jackson, Nick Metz and Pep Kelly made the jump to the Leafs direct from the junior Toronto St. Michael's club.

But as a pro line they didn't click so well together. Conny had high hopes again when Billy Taylor left the amateur ranks as a junior to make the Leafs in his first season in pro company. Billy was the youngster around whom the line was to be built but, although he clicked in the big time, the others whom Smythe had in mind didn't.

Conny hasn't given up yet that he'll hit on the right combination. This year is no exception and already he has his eye on the three who might come through for him — possibly in the 1948-49 season.

Time will tell whether they'll realize Smythe's hopes as will what he maintains now about Sloan. To wit: "One day Sloan will be one of the greatest hockey players of all time."

HAMILTON COACH NEW TO GAME BUT DOING ALL RIGHT

Picked Up Number of Rookies and Now Has Smart Team

Hamilton, Sept. 20—(CP) — Frank Gnup, 26-year-old United States-born coach of the Hamilton Wildcats in the Ontario Rugby Football Union, first saw a Canadian football game this season but he took to it so well that many observers look on his youthful team as a formidable force in O.R.F.U. senior race.

Gnup passed up a contract to play with the Buffalo professional team this season to take the Hamilton coaching job, which shaped up like a tough one because most of the Wildcats' veterans headed for other fields.

But that didn't discourage Gnup. He announced he'd rather have kids to whom he could teach the game anyway and went to work on a squad, 90 per cent rookies. A hard-driving coach, he chases his crew through a 90-minute practice every week-night and then heads for junior games at night to look over coming prospects.

His career started with Aliquippa High School in the Pennsylvania hills where he demonstrated his football generalship so capably that he was lured to Manhattan University in 1937.

He played quarterback and centre at Manhattan where he became an ardent student of football strategy on and off the field, as playing captain and Kodf's assistant. He was known as a triple-threat blocker, kicker and passer.

During the war he captained the Fort Monmouth team which won the championship of the U. S. Army Second Service Command and later played with the Third Air Force team in Florida.

The 152-pound coach has been at the quarterback position in the two-games the Wildcats have played.

He is popular with his charges and the Wildcats have great team spirit. He admits they have a long way to go before they'll be first raters but he is quite satisfied with the results so far.

WAVE OF KILLINGS BY SEX MURDERER SHOCKS JAPANESE

Pardoned Murderer Confesses to Six Killings and Several Attempts

Tokyo, Sept. 20 — (AP) — A wave of sex slayings — almost unprecedented in Japan — plus a wild, rusty jackknife plot against Premier Yoshida, unsolved kidnappings and a rising tide of robberies and assaults are keeping shocked Tokyo folk indoors at night.

A pardoned murdered with a grisly sense of humor, who paired bodies of recent girl victims with skeletons of earlier dead, confessed today to five sex killings.

Two skeletons and the body of a comely young nurse remained unexplained.

Police also sought vainly for two kidnappers, one of whom had vanished with the young daughter of one of Japan's richest families.

In custody was a man, believed a psychopathic case, who was arrested Wednesday night while climbing the fence of Premier Yoshida's official residence. Waving a rusty jackknife, he told officers that "my original plan was to kill the Premier if he did not agree with my ideas."

Ex-convict Yoshio Kodaira, 42, known to the Tokyo press as "the murdering devil," confessed five of the sex killings. Three of his victims were found beside skeletons in isolated spots, and a 4th beneath a parked automobile in the city. Kodaira claimed only one of the three skeletons among his victims.

Missing and the object of a wide search was Kuniko Sumitomo, 12, daughter of Kichizaemon Sumitomo, head of Japan's most powerful wartime industrial monopolies.

A second kidnap victim, Kiyoko Shimizu, 12, was freed dramatically in a darkened temple ground in Kyoto last night — after her mother, acting on mailed instructions, brought 15,000 yen ransom.

GENERAL COUNCIL

Practice Total Abstinence

Temperance—All members of the United Church were called upon to practice total abstinence from alcohol beverages, not to serve cocktails or other alcoholic drinks to guests, not to invest money in corporations engaged in the production or sale of beverage alcohol. Opposition was expressed to liquor advertising over the radio.

Immigration—The council asked the federal government to study the problem of bringing immigrants to Canada, to do its "fair share" in caring for displaced persons.

Manual—Several sessions were devoted, in whole or in part, to a study of proposed revisions of the United Church Manual.

Chaplains—A report by a Board of United Church chaplains analyzed the religious status of members of the armed forces, and its sponsor, Rev. W. Franklin Bannister of Toronto, recommended a post-war program for veterans in the church; friendliness and warmth in church services; more Biblical, doctrinal instruction; insistence on the relevance of the church to every phase of life.

Brisk Debate

A brisk debate on the advisability of preparing a hymn book other than the official hymnal enlivened the closing session of the general council last night.

Elmer Davis of Kingston, chairman of the publications committee, said consideration should be given to the fact that "there is a section of our church that does not find satisfaction in our hymnal."

Finally, the council voted in favor of an amended resolution proposed by Rev. Frank Milligan of Huntsville, Ont., "that the committee on church worship and the Board of Publications consider preparing a new book with evangelistic hymns without prejudice to the present hymnal."

During the immigration debate, a clause suggested that in the selection of immigrants care be given to maintain "the present ratio of Protestants and Roman Catholics in our Canadian population," was deleted in a vote by show of hands, following a motion by Rev. Harry Dodd of Lauder, Man., who told his fellow commissioners that "We don't want to give the people of Canada the idea that we're afraid of being swamped by the Roman Catholics."

No Fixed Ratio

Mr. Dodd said there was no fixed ratio between the two groups anyway, what with French-Canadian couples raising families of nine, 10, 11 and 12 children.

"Let us face the facts," he said. "It is not a matter of Protestant and Roman Catholic, it is a question of having children. Let us tell our Anglo-Saxon brethren to have larger families."

Women's Activities

HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH W.A.

The first meeting of the Fall season of Halloway Street Church Woman's Association was held on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. Reynolds, 58 College Street. Mrs. E. Shortt, the president, conducted the business meeting and heard the reports of the secretaries, which were very gratifying.

Mrs. A. Hitchon and her group had charge of the program. A worship service was given by Mrs. Jackson taking for her topic, "In the Beginning" and she based her talk on the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis. She then passed on some thoughts about the beginning of all things and urged her listeners to have faith and courage, using the hymn "My Faith Looks up to Thee", as part of the service, which Mrs. Jackson closed with prayer.

Mrs. S. P. Hagerman in keeping with the theme sang very feelingly "I Know Who Pilots Me". After the Mizpah benediction, Mrs. Hitchon and her group served dainty refreshments.

SODALITY MEETING

Some fifty, eager sodalists of the Blessed Virgin met on Monday evening, in Saint Michael's High School for the first generl meeting of the season. The meeting consisted of many interesting features, one of which was the talk by Miss Mary McDougall, the new president. By comparing each girl to a link and the whole sodality to a chain, she urged each one to do her utmost to keep that chain firm and unbreakable.

Each committee chairman was then called on to give a brief account of the purpose of her committee, after which the sodalists were given the opportunity to join the committees they wished to be on for the following year.

Of interest to the girls was the talk given by Miss Nellie Dorian, a past president, on the origin and history of the Sodality. At the suggestion of the social chairman, Miss Rita Frawley, plans were made to hold a wiener roast in the near future. Rt. Reverend Monsignor Nicholson, who was present at the meeting, spoke on devotion to the Blessed Virgin, whose life and virtues are the ideal and exemplar of the members of the Sodality. The members then retired to the Assembly room, where, while refreshments were being served, they enjoyed a piano solo by Miss Sheila Doyle and a tap dance by Miss Helen Cooper, accompanied by Miss Barbara Forhan at the piano.

Successful Tea, Sale Held By St. Andrew's Guild

Ladies of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Guild held a very successful tea, Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. H. C. Brown, 221 McDonald Ave., clear skies and September sunshine being conducive to the enjoyment of "the cup that cheers".

Mrs. J. G. Hornsby assisted Mrs. Brown in receiving the guests, while Mrs. C. A, Cameron and Mrs. G. Thorne invited the ladies to the tea room. Presiding at the table, attractive with a beautiful lace cloth, tall ivory tapers and an antique silver centrepiece filled with flowers in pastel shades, were Mesdames J. B. Boyce, W. Douglas, W. Mantle and H. Fox, assisted by Mrs. Hallam. Replenishing the tea table and plates were Mrs. E. Elliott, Mesdames N. Smith and R. Stiver; the serviteurs being Mesdames Lupton, Cournyea, W. McCreary, C. Maybee, A. Hill and F. Kelley.

Mesdames M. Ward, M. Barlow and J. Wilson presided over the home-cooking table which proved a decided attraction to everyone, the receipts from same being most satisfactory to the ladies in charge.

Friends Honor Miss M. Farrell A Bride-to-Be

The home of Mrs. James Ross, 23 Geddes Street, was the meeting place Thursday evening for a number of friends from Belleville and Stirling, of Miss Mary Farrell, bride-elect, when Mrs. F. Cowan and Mrs. Crement Cox were joint hostesses. The rooms presented an attractive appearance with numerous baskets and other containers of Fall flowers. During the evening bridge and euchre were played, the prize winners being Mrs. M. J. Callaghan and Mrs. J. Murphy respectively. Consolation prizes were also given, the winners being Miss Barbara Flurey and Miss McAvoy.

Miss Farrell was the recipient of a linen tablecloth and eight dinner-size napkins, presented by her niece, little Miss Judy Farrell, with best wishes for a happy future, for which she graciously expressed her gratitude.

Look around and you'll notice the tiered skirt on many of the new fashions—from sports things to evening dresses. Diagonal tiers mark a triple-tiered coat in pale green woollen made with a big cravat and enormous cuffs of nutria. Green and brown is always a lovely color scheme.

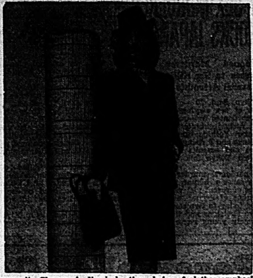
Can't Lose Weight? Then Dress to Disguise Poundage



Marguerite Chapman's discriminating choice of clothes emphasizes her slim lines

By HELEN FOLLETT

IF THE PLUMP woman hasn't gumption enough to delete some of her tonnage, she should, for the sake of better appearance, learn a few rules about dressing her overcurves. It is senseless not to do that little thing.

While the fashionable figure is no longer emaciated ,an excess of fat is no good looks bargain. Of course, for health's sake, she should limit calories, burn them up by healthy exercise. Usually she just hasn't the will to close her eyes to her diet enemies, fats, sweets and starches.

Badly Cut Skirt

An improperly skirt will call attention to bulging hip lines, as will a shirt that is a skin-tight fit. Rounded necklines call attention to the double chin, the thickened neck and full bust, while the long V-cut will be flattering.

Formals without sleeves show over-plump upper arms, give the impression of excess weight. Short sleeves or cape effects will prove becoming, will sheath adipose tissue.

Black is becoming to the heavy figure because it produces no definite silhouette. Tell that to some of the plump ones and they will protest, claiming that black makes the face look older. Well, what's make-up for? And the good looks of the feminine shape is as important as the attractive appearance of the face.

Vivid Colors Wrong

Red—all strong, vivid colors—should be worn only by very slender women of graceful outline. Plain fabrics are more slenderizing than figured ones. There's no reason on earth why a woman should make herself look fatter than the report on the bathroom scales, but one sees this mistake made quite often among friends and acquaintances.

With a diet list from the family doc, and a good dressmaker, any woman can get herself down to normal, be a lady of fashion. She'll not only look better but will feel better and will live a more active life.

Advice to the Lovelorn

The Husband Who "Stepped Out" While Overseas

A number of letters have come in to this column from women who have heard, or who have been told by their husbands themselves, that their men went out with girls overseas. "Stepped out", these wives and girls call it.

In reply to some of the letters that have been published here, some interesting answers have come in.

One of them, from a veteran, tries to make the girls understand how and why it was that their men sought feminine companionship while away from those they loved.

This, in part, is what he says; "Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I have read in your column a letter from a girl who is afraid to trust the man she is engaged to, anymore, because some of her so-called friends told her he had a love affair while overseas.

So what if the boy friend did go out with girls overseas? He might have been lonely. I know. I was there and I went out, too.

"It may seem strange to the girls at home that when a guy over there went out with a girl, he was lonely for his girl at home, and even when he kissed them—and we really did; I won't lie about it—we weren't really kissing those foreign girls, but you—the girl at home. Does that sound like a lot of hooey to you? If it does, then you have never been lonely.

So when people tell you something that doesn't sound right about the one you love, don't think all sorts of horrors have entered your life. Remember that none of us are perfect and even if such rumors are true, those affairs are past and should be forgotten. And, if you really love your man, stick by him and trust him more than your gossiping friends. "B. G."

There is a lot of common sense in what this veteran has to say and certainly it is worth thinking about before passing hasty judgments on what you may hear about your man's conduct abroad.

And now here's a word from a wife who read in this column some of those letters from disturbed wives and sweethearts. She refers, particularly, to the letter of a few weeks ago, signed "A Miserable Wife", in which a woman told how she had discovered that her husband had had dates with a girl while away from her and she felt she could never forget it.

Writing as "An Understanding Wife", this reader offers "Miserable Wife", her own point of view based on a similar experience she had with her husband.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I never have written a letter like this before, but I felt I might be able to help "A Miserable Wife".

"My husband left for sea a week after our marriage. He returned two years later. During his sea duty, he had an eight-day liberty in Australia and at a USO dance he met a young girl. She took him around town and even had him at her house for dinner where he met her folks. In return he took her to dances and movies. Six months later, he had another liberty there and they met again. He told me about it and said she was just a 'nice kid', and he enjoyed her company.

"I didn't 'blow my top' or anything. I just sat down and wrote to thank her for being so nice to my husband. I even sent her a gift of stationery, because she stid it was scarce there. I am looking forward to meeting her in person, for she is coming to the United States as the bride of one of our boys.

"My husband admires my attitude and I have made another friend."

More power to you, "Understanding Wife"! If more women had your commonsense, we'd hear much less about post-war marriage crackups.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Do You Weep Over Wrinkles?

Sometimes a woman's beauty sorrow is just in her eye. Her sorrow is just in her eye.. Her tells her family she looks perfectly terrible. Family is unsympathetic, says she's nuts, and that doesn't make her feel any better. Imagination gets busy, and she is something else again. Especially those first little ones that look like real danger signals. She visualizes herself with gullies in her face. It makes her feel old, all out of joint with life.

She may have inflicted them upon herself, but that is no consolation. Maybe she has robbed herself of needed hours of sleep. Perhaps she is a born worrier. Possibly she has paid no attention to the important subject of nutrition. Well, what she wants to know is this: Can something be done about them? By living according to the rules of health, by keeping a tight rein on unpleasant emotions, she can keep them from digging in deeper. Women who have kept healthy and cheerful all their lives have few facial furrows.

She must train herself to meet life bravely, to accept what comes with courage. She can talk herself out of boredom, dull spirits, self-pity. That is precisely what she must do. Otherwise the facial tissues will soften and sag, the lines will take on patterns that tell the world that she is cowardly, or a worrier, or boiling with ill feelings toward her fellow creatures.

An extremely dry skin may cause wrinkles. Theoretically the sebaceous glands secrete enough lubrication to keep the skin firm and smooth, without a sign of roughness. But, actually, this supply of oil is frequently inadequate. The glands may weaken because of poor circulation, or because of a fat-free diet.

The epidermal coat than is likely to shrivel; in the course of time, wrinkles will appear. Women with excessively oily skins stay younger in appearance than the members of the dry contingent.

Creams then come to one's aid. They should be used lavishly at the first sign of lines—in fact, long before there are any signs. Lubricants feed the cells, in a way. The friction necessary for their application will help to keep the underlying fibres firm; when they give way, the skin coat is too large, so falls into creases.

Have two creams, one of light consistency for removing makeup, the other a heavier emollient for application after the nightly face washing. Only a heavy cream will give the fingers a chance to get down deep enough to tone the muscles.

Start the application at the collar bones, sweeping upward along the jawline to the ear lobes, from chin tip over the cheeks to the temples. Be careful not to push the flesh up around the eyes. If turkey tracks are on the way, place the creamed finger on the eyelid close to the nose, sweep out to the temple, come back under the eye to starting point. Finish with an ice-cube friction.

Enter the big swagger hat on casual lines, not of felt, but of fur. Nutria is used for a handsome hat with high crown and softly manipulated brim that can be turned up or down and draped to suit. Finished with a draped crown band and back bow of gold embroidered brown satin.

War, and the trail of war, have posed new tasks for those who labor to rebuild wasted or frustrated lives.

The ex-service man, trapped by ill-luck or moral weakness . . . war brides struggling with domestic difficulties . . . war workers "in transition" . . . involuntary mothers . . . orphaned or neglected waifs . . . these need the human touch and helping hand of The Salvation Army.

The Army faces a "reconversion" job, too . . . the building up of physical equipment . . . the reconversion of human wastage to useful citizenship.

Completing 42 years' service to Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, Manitoulin and Lake Superior ports is the steamer Caribou of the Owen Sound Transportation Co. She is last of small wooden vessels which have plied this run for nearly a century.

300 Resolutions Before Congress Of Labor Party

Windsor, Sept. 19. (CP)—Delegates to the Trades and Labor Congress convention will get down to business today and start consideration of some 300 resolutions.

While yesterday's opening sessions of the annual meet were devoted largely to routine business there were developments throwing into bold relief the question of what action the T.L.C. should take towards "interference" by the American Federation of Labor.

This issue is expected to be one of the most important coming before the convention. Indications were that Percy R. Bengough, T.L.C. president, would have strong support in his battle for T.L.C. autonomy.

The position of the A.F.L. is likely to be explained by one of its top officers, Matthew Woll, of New York, who is third vice-president and who is coming to the T.L.C. convention as a fraternal delegate.

Consideration of resolutions—major job of the convention—is expected to start today and the convention will also receive some committee reports. The resolutions cover a wide range of subjects. One, sponsored by the Victoria Local of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, proposes banning members of the Communist Party from Union executive positions.

J. A. Sullivan, T. L. C. secretary-treasurer and president of the Canadian Seamen's Union, addressing delegates last night at a banquet given by the Windsor Trades and Labor Council appealed for unity in the congress ranks.

He said he intended placing before the convention evidence of tactics used by a private detective agency in an effort to smash the lake Seaman's strike earlier this year.

"We have these enemies outside; let's keep them out and have harmony within," he said.

Ontario's Farm Production Called "Very Satisfactory"

(By The Canadian Press)

With harvesting nearing completion across the country, the results generally are satisfactory despite declines in some crops and in some areas.

A survey by The Canadian Press today showed that the western grain crop on the whole is better than last year, and better than was expected earlier this season. Ontario's farm production is called "very satisfactory" although the position of late crops is spotty and lack of late summer rains hurt pastures with consequent important decline in milk flow.

Quebec's crops will be less abundant and potato yields in the Maritimes aren't as good as last year.

At the present it is impossible to gain any accurate estimate of the money value of the 1946 crops but an unofficial survey would indicate that improvement in some divisions more than offsets the decline in others.

Three fruits are generally satisfactory in Nova Scotia where 1,600,000 barrels of apples are being harvested, yielding $6,000,000, biggest crop in years. The pear crop will be somewhat lower at around 30,000 bushels.

Pastures on the whole are satisfactory in Quebec, the hay, clover and alfalfa crops are in, and harvesting of wheat, oats, barley and rye is nearing completion.

Bigger Crops

In Ontario, oats, barley and mixed grains all will yield bigger crops that last year. Fall rye will be higher too, but fall wheat will be reduced from 1945. The combined production of the five grain crops is estimated to be 22 per cent higher thanks to higher yields per acre; the acreage is a share lower than last year.

It is estimated Ontario will harvest 72,000,000 bushels of oats, 11,000,000 bushels of barley, 43,000,000 bushels of mixed grains, 16,000,000 bushels of fall wheat and 1,290,000 bushels of fall rye.

Of special crops in Ontario, cool weather and cold nights is slowing up the rich western Ontario tobacco crop and early September frosts killed important sections notably around Simcoe and Durham counties. Ontario however expects to produce 106,500,000 pounds of tobacco this year, an increase of 24,000,000 pounds over last year, with average yield slightly higher and total acreage up from 83,140 to 102,200.

Grain Crops Better

Grain crops are better in southwestern Ontario than in eastern sections where cool weather and sparse rainfall checked growth and cut yield. In some northern districts such as Sudbury much grain still is in stook.

Indications point to light to below average yield in eastern Ontario for late crops like buckwheat, late potatoes, turnips, mangels and fodder corn but the yield will be higher in southwestern Ontario.

Stands of seed timothy are generally good but alsike and alfalfa appear poor. Red clover seed promises good yield in parts of southwestern Ontario.

Surveys indicate the potato crop will surpass last year's but as a whole will be only fair. Fields look best in southwestern Ontario and some sections of eastern Ontario.

Lack of Help

Peak harvesting operations saw farmers hampered by lack of experienced help but, threshing over, the situation now has eased. Striking workers from industrial areas helped tend and harvest many Ontario crops. Wages were about the same as last year but above pre-war levels.

The Saskatchewan crop is generally better than last year, with wheat expected to yield 216,000,000 bushels. In the province as a whole the crops are estimated to be worth more than $450,000,000 compared with $303,000,000 in 1945.

Alberta expects to harvest 142,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, highest since the 171,000,000 bushel crop of 1942.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was reeding his paper and ma was reeding hers, saying, The atomic bomb, the atomic bomb, is there never going to be an end of it?

The end of it is just what everybody's trying to keep away from, pop said, and ma said, I mean an end of all the discussion about it for land sakes. I wish you'd tell me in a brief nut shell, William, just why a world full of grown up countries cant sit around a simple table and find a solution to a simple problem. Are there no such things as treaties any more? she said.

Well yes, they still exist, but they are practically berried under great piles of little scraps of paper which used to be treaties themselves, pop said, and ma said, There must be some way to enforce respect for a treaty. Where is this great wonderful international police force that I hear so much about? she said.

When last seen, it was on a blue print, pop said. It seems that an international police force would interfeer with a country's soverenty, and certain countries are so particuler about their soverenty that they cant bare the thought of an international police force walking in on them even if they happen to be breaking treaties, he said, and ma said, Well then why dont they get an ordnerry sensible woman on their board of advisers and let her settle the whole thing with one suggestion? she said.

Such as what for instance? pop said, and ma said, Such as having every country sign an honest treaty agreeing not to make a single atomic bomb, even for a playful experiment, and then once a year an international police force could march in and look around, but it wouldn't have to be necessarily called an international police force. I mean it could be known by some other name, and then their precious soverenty would be saved, she said.

Yee gods, pop said.

BUILT FOR 100 YEARS

Cheshunt, Herts, England, Sept. 19 — (CP)—Dr. Josiah Oldfield, a specialist, said today the normal human heart is constructed to beat about 2,500,000,000 times — which would mean a life span of 95 or 100 years. But most people, he added in a speech, race the heart by eating meat, drinking alcohol or taking strenuous exercise, thus causing it to stop sooner. Dr. Oldfield, who takes it easy and lives mostly on fruit, is 83.

"What about my new car?"

Your dealer would be a happy man if he could give you the exact delivery date of your new car. Even if that date were six months away, it would give you something definite to go on. But he can't because we can't tell him how many cars will be delivered to him this year . . . or even this month.

The main reason is shortage of materials. Not only our own, but those of 1,200 feeder plants from whom we buy. Our expediters are searching the country trying to keep our slender supply of materials from running out: "When can we get steel?" . . . "Where can we find tires?" . . . "How soon can we get textiles?"

In spite of all our efforts, this year's production looks like a child's sandpile against the mountain of urgent orders for new cars and trucks . . . more than a four-year accumulation of demand. Now and then, for short periods, our output resembled our pre-war production. Now dwindling stockpiles have already forced us to adopt a three-day work week. And by the time you read this, production of cars and trucks may have entirely ceased.

It isn't a bright picture, but we think Canadians would rather have cold facts. So the answer to your question about your new car is really out of our hands.

This problem can't be solved overnight. But whenever materials are available, our assembly lines will be moving—no matter how difficult or complicated the job may be.

Ted Williams Says Stan Musial Greatest Player in National League

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Ted Williams, Stan Musial's chief rival for the title of baseball's most dangerous hitter today, believes the St. Louis Cardinal clouter is the "greatest player in the National League."

The Boston Red Sox socker, who with his manager Joe Cronin, and others of the team's top-flight stars, were interested spectators at the Card-Braves game in Boston, got a large eyeful of Mr. Musial in action yesterday.

Musial, currently leading the National League batters with a mark of .373, slammed out five straight hits in as many times at bat and drove in the winning run in St. Louis' 5-4 victory with his final safety, a ninth-inning single.

The victory enabled the Cardinals to preserve their first place margin of 1½ games over Brooklyn Dodgers who whipped Pittsburgh Pirates 7-0 at Ebbetts Field.

The Dodgers combined lusty clouting and splendid pitching to grab the rubber game from the Bucanneers. They made nine blows count for 13 total bases while Hardrock Hal Gregg limited the Pirates to only three.

In the American League, Cleveland Indians defeated Washington Senators 5-1 for Bob Feller's 25th victory of the season. Rapid Robert whiffed five to boost his season's total to .320.

Scoring seven runs in one big inning and five in another, the Tigers outslugged Philadelphia Athletics 14-7 for their 17th victory in 22 meetings with the Mackmen.

After losing a 4-0 lead St. Louis Browns came back with two runs in the last of the ninth to defeat the American League champion Boston Red Sox 6-5 in a night game.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON JR.

New York, Sept. 20 (AP)—In a year of record-breaking baseball crowds, the attendance for the 1946 world series likely will be the smallest in a good many seasons...The Red Sox already have a sellout for the games at Boston, but the capacity of Fenway Park is listed as 35,000. Sportsman's Park in St. Louis seats 34,000...That means if the Red Sox and Cards should play seven games they'd draw only 241,000 customers. Last year the Cubs and Tigers pulled in a record 333,457 for seven games.

Paul Hilliard, who hits a ball far but infrequently, played for Galax and Radford, Va., in the early part of this season and then turned to umpiring in the same circuit when prexy Joe Ryan encountered a shortage of men in blue...At Radford, the left field fence is so far from the home plate that they claim "it's a good drive in an automobile", but Hilliard managed to drive the ball over it twice in one game for Galax. One day a major league scout asked Ryan if any of the players ever hit that far... No one but the umpire there," said Ryan, indicating Hilliard, officiating at the plate..."What sort of a league is this?" the scout demanded. "The umpire bats and he's the only one who clouts them over the wall."

CHAMPION ARGOS MEET OTTAWA IN CRUCIAL GAME

Alouettes Move Over to Hamilton and Beaches Play Indians

(By the Canadian Press)

A surprising lack of pre-game pronouncements was noticed today as the third Saturday of eastern Canadian senior rugby approached. The silence might almost be considered ominous for on this weekend's tilts could very easily depend several teams' chances of remaining in contention.

The Dominion champion Toronto Argos had an understandable reason for keeping mum. Up to now they have been enjoying the stalwart co-operation of quarterbacks Fred Doty and Billy Myers, but these two are students at University of Toronto and eligible for the Varsity team. This morning it still hadn't been officially announced whether Doty and Myers would be in Argo uniforms this weekend.

Argos believe they'll still have Doty and Myers at least for Saturday's battle against the Ottawa Roughriders, who stand a point ahead of Argos in the Interprovincial League.

The Alouettes of Montreal, meanwhile, travel to Hamilton to engage the winless Tigers.

Over in the six-team union one thing looks sure, and that is a breaking up of the fascinating five-way deadlock which sees everybody on top except Ottawa Trojans. The powerful, fast Toronto Indians clash with Balmy Beach tonight to start the weekend festivities, while Saturday sees Hamilton Wildcats travelling to Windsor Rockets, and Sarnia Imperials playing at Ottawa.

Brisk Scrimmages Mark Workouts At Hockey School

By ALAN VICKERY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Winnipeg, Sept. 20 (CP)—Brisk scrimmages marked the workouts at the New York Rangers' hockey school at the amphitheatre here on Thursday.

Frankie Boucher, boss-man at the school has found it impossible to keep tab on all of the players in one collective workout, so he has divided them into three groups. Two groups work out in the morning and the third in the afternoon.

Another trick that Boucher uses to keep track of promising players, is to post his 'lieutenants' at vantage points in the rink, where they keep 'score cards' on players who catch their eye.

Lynn Patrick, starry Ranger winger, has been assistant Boucher at the school and today referees will be used.

Threat of Strike By Soccer Players Is Dispelled

Manchester, England, Sept. 20—(CP)—Threat of a strike by British soccer players to enforce their demands for higher pay apparently had been dispelled today.

Following a player-owner conference arranged by the labor ministry last night, James Fay, players' union secretary, said:

"We all know it is illegal to strike under the Emergency Powers Act and the only course now is to go through the usual channels."

The union had asked that management join in submitting the question of pay increases to arbitration by an industrial board.

The players are asking salaries of £12 ($48) weekly in winter and £10 ($40) in summer, with contracts running 52 weeks. They want a minimum weekly pay for full-time professionals of £7 in winter and £5 in summer.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

Toar Morgan the dashing Marine and his pet aversion of the rassle-ring Karl "Krippler" Davis are all set and a rarin' to go for their main bout at the Hume Arena tonight. "The Louis-Maurielle bout will be a picnic compared to this one and about as brief." Davis growled this afternoon shortly after arriving in town. "Oh yeah?" came back the Marine, "that's what he thinks. I licked him before and can do it again either in the ring or with the dukes. I'm going to stop his parade of villainous tactics."

• • •

So there you have it. The boys are thoroughly mad and nothing but grips will appease their anger. Popular Pat Flanagan will met another arch villain of the ring, the famous or infamous Lee Henning. On the same card Frankie Taylor debonair guy from Hollywood tackles handsome Ben Sharpe and that bout should be the answer to the bobby-soxers' prayer.

• • •

Lefty Whitman's Swacos baseball squad took the first game of the Belleville Senior Baseball League finals at the Alemite grounds yesterday afternoon from the Moose Matthews Trenton Flyers troupe by a 4-1 score. Al Wade, Flyers righthander and "Chuck" Barriage, veteran Swaco hurler hooked up in a nifty hurling duel with the oldster coming out on top.

• • •

The Belleville Senior Baseball League executive at a special meeting the other night arranged playoff dates for the league. RCAF meets Swacos three out of five in the semi-finals series and the teams got the first game off their chests last night. They meet again Monday and Thursday nights of next week.

• • •

Meanwhile Batawa is awaiting the outcome of the games between Latta and Kiwanis juniors. The juniors have a game to play with Batawa in the league schedule and if the Shoemen take the kids the youngsters will be tied with Doc Empson's crew for fourth slot. And that will mean a replay of the game that was pigeonholed following the juniors' protest earlier in the season.

• • •

Meanwhile both juniors and Latta and also Batawa are in the throes of Ontario Baseball Association playdowns and definite dates for league playoffs cannot be set as yet. The semi-finals series between Batawa and Latta-Juniors will be two of three while the finals will be a three-of-five set.

• • •

The Kiwanis junior baseball team management announced today that some of their equipment was lost or stolen during the hectic excitement that followed the winning of the Belleville Wrightville game on Wednesday afternoon. Some mischievous kids, it is believed, helped themselves to gloves and other things during the melee. Semark, the right fielder lost his left-handed mitt and the glove is practically impossible to replace. The management hopes the equipment will be returned in time for Saturday's game. It requests parents or relatives who may know of the whereabouts of the lost gloves to return them to the club and no questions will be asked.

• • •

The Kiwanis juniors will not lack for support at their all-important third game with the Ottawa Wrightvilles at Kingston on Saturday afternoon. There are hundreds of fans planning the trip and such a baseball city as Kingston will likely send hundreds of the curious to watch the youngsters strut their stuff.

• • •

The Kiwanis management is keeping pretty mum as to whom their starting pitcher will be but it was learned that Allen Kelleher is going through some pretty stiff hurling workouts in case Coach St. Louis gives him the nod. It is quite likely the Wrightville team will send their ace lefthander Bobby Laurialt back at the Belleville crew. Laurialt, who is slated for the Montreal Royals next year, is the curving youngster who set our lads back on their heels with three hits in the first game at Hull.

• • •

He is a starry young chucker and has a fine style and delivery. His fast ball fairly smokes when it comes down the middle and he can curve the apple until it looks like a pretzel on a binge. However, he has been beaten before, and he may be again on Saturday.

• • •

Our youngsters are in the pink, according to reports from the Kiwanis camp and are ready to take on the foe again. They will leave the city shortly after one o'clock on Saturday and are determined to bring back that third slice of baseball bacon.

• • •

This week the first match of the two-ball mixed foursome tournament was held at the Bay of Quinte Golf Club. There were 17 entries in this event, the scores being quite good. The finals of this match will be held again this Sunday afternoon.

• • •

Yesterday afternoon, Wednesday, twenty golfers of the Cataraqui Golf and Country Club of Kingston, were entertained at golf and dinner at the Quinte Club. This was the first inter-city golf match held between Kingston and Belleville for the past several years. The Quinte Club emerged on top after the day's play by a score of 12½ points to 7½. A sweepstake was held during the afternoon and the prize winners were: Tommy Carruthers with a low gross of 78; Dick Green, Cataraqui Club professional, second low gross with 79; B. Tetro of Kingston with a first low net of 65; Ted Turkington of the Quinte Club with second low net of 66.

• • •

The final round of the Esquire Challenge Trophy, emblematic of golfing supremacy in this district, will be held on Sunday morning next at the Belleville Golf Club. As a result of the three previous matches that have been held, the leader of the series so far is the Trenton Golf Club. Trenton is the only club that hasn't held the trophy, since its inception four years ago. However, the Trenton Club is determined to win this year and will be in there on Sunday to garner all the points they can win. On Sunday the Low Gross and low net will be awarded suitably engraved trophies. So the scores should be low and the matches highly competitive. Although the Quinte Club is far behind in the scoring column they are fielding a strong team and hope to regain possession of the Esquire Trophy.

• • •

George Stirnweiss of the Yankees, who has been making it tough on American League pitchers by digging up dust on the base paths, once humiliated an International League moundsman by stealing second and third on consecutive pitches. Inexasperation, the pitcher called time, flung his glove on the ground, stuck the ball in his hip pocket and yelled to Snuffy: "Okay, kid, now steal home and get the hell off the field."

If Kiwanis Win They Enter Finals

The winner of the Belleville Kiwanis - Ottawa Wrightville game in Kingston tomorrow will enter the finals for the Ontario Baseball Association junior championship, it was learned here today.

Kitchener and Windsor start their two-of-three series in Kitchener on Saturday afternoon and play the second game there on Monday.

The winners of this series will meet the winners of the Toronto-Niagara Falls series and the winner in turn will meet either Belleville or Wrightville for the title.

MANY FAMILIAR HOCKEY FIGURES WILL BE MISSING

Dozen Better Known Players of Last 10 or 15 Years Will Retire From N.H.L.

(By The Canadian Press)

The National Hockey League returns to the same old stands this winter but fans around the six-team circuit will find many familiar figures missing from the ice and others appearing in unfamiliar uniforms.

A Canadian Press survey of player prospects shows that at least a dozen of the better known players of the last 10 to 15 years have either hung up their skates for good or have drifted back to the minors. Before the season opens Oct. 16 many others may be weeded out in training camp sessions which will be in full swing by the end of next week.

Veterans who have announced that they won't play pro hockey again include: Bob Davidson, Lorne Carr and Sweeney Schriner of Toronto Maple Leafs; Bill (Flash) Hollett and Syd Howe of Detroit Red Wings; Bill Cowley and Dit Clapper, granddaddy of them all, of Boston Bruins. Davidson stays with Toronto in a coaching capacity and Clapper is coach of the Bruins.

Even a younger player like Bobby Bauer from Kitchener, right wing for the Boston Bruins, is an unlikely starter. Bauer retired to devote himself to business at Kitchener. His retirement breaks up the long-famed forward line combination in which partnered centre Milt Schmidt and left wing Woody Dumart. The three returned to hockey last season after an interruption due to war service.

Call for Waivers

Veteran Herb Cain of the Bruins may go. Boston has called for waivers on the high-scoring left-winger but so far no deal has materialized. Earl Seibert and Mud Bruneteau of Detroit and Mel Hill of Toronto went down to the minors last season and are not likely to return. The Chicago Black Hawks have dropped goalie Mike Karakas.

But at the hockey camps, there is no dearth of talent. More players than ever before — some 350 — are hopeful candidates for the some 120 positions on the club rosters. Many are veterans but most numerous are newcomers, eager young aspirants up from amateur and minor pro ranks intent on hockey careers.

The Red Wings were the first club to start full-scale training, opening their camp for the Wings and minor league affiliates last Monday in Detroit. Both Toronto Maple Leafs and New York Rangers started hockey training schools for young prospects this week and open their main camps next Monday — Leafs at St. Catharines and Rangers at Winnipeg. Montreal Canadiens started training in Montreal yesterday. Boston Bruins report to Hershey, Pa., Sept. 25 and Chicago Black Hawks at Regina Sept. 26.

ADMITS STARTING FIRE

Hot Springs, Ark., Sept. 20 — (AP) — State Fire Marshal Lee Baker said Wednesday night a 39-year-old aluminum plant worker had admitted in a signed statement that a cigaret in his room caused the fire which burned the Great Northern Hotel last Friday night, causing three deaths and numerous injuries. Prosecuting Attorney Rurtis Ridgway said he had filed involuntary manslaughter charges against the man, whom he identified as Chester White Ellis, formerly of Shreveport, La.

SUSPECTS ARRESTED

Saskatoon, Sept. 20 — (CP) — Royal Canadian Mounted Police here reported Wednesday night that two men had been arrested in connection with the recent $39,274 bank robbery at Nipawin, Sask. The suspects were not named.

MOTHER OF FIVE FIGHTS SWIRLING CURRENT... IN SPECTACULAR RESCUE OF BOY!

Mrs. H. D. WILFORD wins Dow Award

THE DOW AWARD
is a citation for outstanding heroism and includes, as a tangible expression of appreciation, a $100 Victory Bond. Winners are selected by The Dow Award Committee, a group of editors of leading Montreal daily newspapers.
The DOW AWARD
DOW BREWERY • MONTREAL

Caught in the turbulent waters of the Otonabee River near Peterborough, a 7-year-old boy screamed frantically for help. He had been trying to swim to shore from a raft when the current over-powered him.

Mrs. H. D. Wilford of Lindsay, Ont., acted quickly when she heard the cries. Leaping into the fast-moving river, she struck out for the drowning boy. Desperately she fought against the current ...: edging closer and closer to the frantic youngster. When she reached him, he was in poor shape ::: and it was only after a considerable struggle that she succeeded in dragging him back to the beach.

This brave mother of five children deserves great praise. We are proud to pay tribute to Mrs. H. D. Wilford through the presentation of The Dow Award.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

An expert is a clever duck who knows his squeeze and cues. He seldom puts his faith in luck or phony ballyhoos. With combinations hard to take, he pays a special heed and plans a future spot to make the other fellow lead.

If you kibitz a bridge expert at play, you will frequently see him pick up an extra trick or two. Unless you are familiar with the operation, his gravy gain may look like a lucky break.

More than likely, however, the break was the result of a definite advance plan. And such a plan was influenced by his knowledge of what may be expected from certain card combinations.

Let me give you a picture of such a combination. In four hands of a deal are these hearts:

NORTH
WEST ♥Q 7 6
EAST ♥J 8 5 4
SOUTH
♥K 10 9

South is declarer. Whether he leads from his hand or dummy, he can take only two tricks. But a skillful player knows it is possible to take three tricks if an opponent leads from that suit.

So he schemes early to later force an opponent to lead that suit. This is done by stripping as many suits as possible before throwing either opponent into the lead.

At such a time, suppose west shoots anything but the queen. Dummy ducks and east goes with the jack. South pulls it in with the king. West is then finessed out of the queen.

Or suppose east is in and comes with anything but the jack. South covers with the nine and dummy's ace cops the west queen. East is then finessed out of the jack.

When thrown in, suppose west or east leads the facecard. Second hand wins it at once. After that the remaining low face is caught in a finesse.

Hollywood Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Sept. 20 — (AP) — Around Nov. 1 we may be reading of Susan Hayward huddling homeless in the snow with her 2 sons. If so, it will be just another chapter in her one-woman battle against inflation.

The red-headed Brooklyn actress and her actor-husband, Jess Parker, face their third eviction Nov. 1. She indicates she might be tenting in the street when the deadline arrives.

"I'm not trying to create the impression that we are poverty-stricken," she told me.

"We are making good money, but only 40 per cent is left after taxes. Then come the expenses. It's not easy bringing up 18-month-old twins. And I'll be hanged if I'll pay inflated prices to buy a house."

Susie said in her months of frenzied house-searching she has found nothing worth the price. One valley home, offered for $50,000, looked as though it would have been condemned on Tobacco Road. Prices naturally skyrocket when the prospective buyer is discovered to be a movie star.

"We're not going to dip into our savings to buy an overpriced house," she emphasized. "After all, a movie star's career is short and you have to save for the rainy day."

Susie's crusade against inflation doesn't stop with real estate. She is buying almost nothing. She is going to a premiere tonight in a dress she wears all day in the picture.

She's also saving on meat, — "I've never eaten so much tuna in my life," she remarked.

Jacobs Rejects Idea of Louis Going to London

(By The Canadian Press)

After disposing of Tami Mauriello with ease in the ring on the previous night, heavyweight champion Joe Louis yesterday had a strenuous 35 minutes at New York when he struggled with a crowd of 5,000 at the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. The fistic king sold handshakes for $10 and disposed of his necktie and handkerchief for $50 each in aid of the cause. During the day, Louis received $103,611.89 as his share of the latest fight purse while Mauriello accepted $38,854 for getting knocked out.

Promoter Mike Jacobs was already busy with an elimination plan for likely heavyweights to select a challenger for a title bout probably next June. Jacobs rejected the idea of Louis going to London for a fight with Bruce Woodcock and intimated the champion might make his next appearance at New York in January or February.

President Frank E. McKinney of the Pittsburgh Pirates said last night he wanted to talk to manager Frankie Frisch before deciding on the managerial appointment for 1947. McKinney admitted that Billy Herman of Boston Braves and others were being considered.

Harold Ruel, former American League catcher and now assistant to Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler, refused comment yesterday on a report he was in line for the managership of St. Louis Browns.

Dr. Spencer, four-year-old trotter, set a record for a half-mile track when he stepped a mile in 2:01 1/4 to win the $5,000 Four Bar Trot in yesterday's Grand Circuit card at Delaware, O. The previous mark, three-quarters of a second slower, was made by Austin Hanover last year.

The Harry Vardon Trophy of the British Pro Golfers Association for the competitor having the best average in major tournaments was awarded yesterday to A. D. (Bobby) Locke of South Africa with a mark of 73.16 strokes. Dai Rees, with 73.72, was second.

New York Yankees yesterday recalled infielder Bobby Brown from their Newark farm club and purchased three other players, including outfielder Frankie Colman, from the Bears. Brown finished second to Jackie Robinson of Montreal Royals in International League hitting with a .344 average.

Goodman Jrs. Play In Toronto Saturday

The Goodman Juniors, Belleville's representatives in the Ontario junior softball playdowns, take off tomorrow for Toronto where they clash with either the Toronto Lizzies or the Toronto Nationals in the first game for the provincial title. They have copped the Eastern Ontario crown and are hotfoot after the title they won last year.

The game is scheduled to start at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon but up to a late hour today, the team officials had not been notified which park the game will be played in.

The kids leave approximately at ten o'clock in the morning and all members are reported to be in good shape. Don Boyle will get the starting pitching assignment and he thinks he can come through with a win.

SEIZE 250,000 CIGARETS

Montreal, Sept. 20 —(CP)— Inspector Noel Courois of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment here, last night announced that R.C.M.P. constables operating in the Riviere Du Loup district near the Maine-Quebec border during the past week had seized 250,000 American cigarets on which duty had not been paid. Three men had been arrested in connection with the smuggling and would appear in court in the Riviere Du Loup area.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Well, why not? Why not take the children down to see her father? The plan sprang full-made into her mind as she idly dreamed the words of her excuse. Isabel had not seen her father for months—she had not seen him since an occasion, long before she had left Dennis, when Oliver Jordan had come to San Francisco doctor. He had lunched with Isabel and old Mrs. Hardisty, had had a delightful hour with his granddaughters, and had been affectionately persuaded by Isabel to stay in town for dinner; she had taken him downtown to one of the hotel restaurants, and afterword to a movie, putting him on the train at midnight.

"We'll do this often," she had said with a sudden warm kiss in parting, but it had not been long afterward when the complicated series of events that had led to her divorce and her second marriage had commenced, and since then she had heard from her father only once, and had seen him not at all.

Now she suddenly couldn't wait to see him. Nothing else mattered but that she should get to her father. She had always been fond of him, and he had been an adoring father to her. Oliver Jordan could not give his daughter many advantages, but he would have sacrificed anything in his own life to make hers brighter.

Isabel's mother had long been dead; the house was kept by an elder sister of Oliver's, Mrs. Mansie Dow, a twisted, sturdy, capable, abrupt little person who made no esthetic appeal to anyone. It was for Isabel to supply the light and youth and beauty of the household.

"I don't believe Aunt Mansie has ever seen the children Isabel thought, as she eagerly perfected her plans. They were plans that filled her small daughters with silent rapture. Mother was telephoning to cancel her luncheon engagement. Yelta wasn't to go with them, nor even Martin. Mother herself was going to drive the car.

This was a mother they hardly knew, a happy easy, chatty mother, who drove along comfortably into the sweet spring morning and encouraged them to talk. She had rarely heard them giggling as they giggled now; they were really amusing little persons, in their elfin way. She loved their clear little appealing "Mother."

"Yelta wanted to come," said Pussy. "Why didn't you let her come, Mother?"

"Well, you see Grandpa Jordan and Aunt Mansie live in a very little house, and they haven't any Yeats or any Martin to help them. So they might be rather embarrassed if Yelta came."

The spring day was singing and shining about them as she drove along. Leaves were coming out lavishly on the poplars and maples; orchards were seas of white bloom; lilacs nodded in the dooryards. Along the sides of the road varnished poppies glistened in the deep grass, buttercups spread their little glittering disks of gold. Larks rose into the blue air with their heartbreaking cry.

"Girls, this is fun!" Isabel said.

She wondered exactly what made it so much fun, what gave her such a sense of freedom. No servants—no questions—no troublesome adjustments of Avery's claims and the children's innocent jealousy. She could love them as much as she liked today!

It was inevitable, perhaps that Avery should be jealous of her children. Or perhaps not jealous, exactly, but not understanding, where their claims and their small rights were concerned. A reliable, highly paid nurse was the solution of all nursery problems, to Avery. "What's the matter with Yelta?" he would ask surprisedly if Isabel announced any plan for Pussy and Catherine that included herself.

"Yelta's marvelous, of course. But I thought it would be rather fun if we took them to the circus," Isabel argued on one occasion.

"Ix-nay on the circus," Avery countered lazily.

"Can't Yeats and Yelta manage them?"

"Of course they can. But they've never been and I'd love to see their faces. Never mind, I'll manage it some afternoon."

"What afternoon?" The circus stayed a week, and she suspected that he would have an engagement for every afternoon that week. So Yelta and Yeats took the little girls to the circus, and after all, Pussy and Catherine didn't enjoy it much. Pussy was frightened by the animals, and Catherine went to sleep in Yelta's arms.

But what left a real sting in Isabel's mind and heart on this circus matter was that one night when they were dinning at Toddy Maxwell's, suddenly everyone wanted to go to the circus, and wild little Patsy Maxwell, only a few weeks married, wanted to ride on an elephant, and all this was rapidly and smoothly arranged, with much loud laughter that presently disturbed earlier comers to the nearby boxes at the circus. Under certain circumstances, then, Avery would go to the circus, but not with his wife and his small stepdaughters. Isabel felt deeply hurt, disappointed; she did not let the feeling in last.

No, nothing of resentment or sensitiveness must be encouraged; not in a first marriage—emphatically not in a second. This venture must be all success. She had chosen deliberately between Dennis and Avery; she must prove to the world now that she had been wise.

"I love to do things with the girls," she said.

"Why do you bother? asked Avery. "They're too small to remember anything of this."

"But it's not that, Avery! It's such fun."

"Now listen it's not. Nobody has fun with two kids swarming over her all the time."

"Avery don't say you don't like children! Why, there might be a stocky little black-headed boy here someday—"

"Sure I like children. I hope we'll have 'em-everyone has. But I say if you have a good nurse, why—even the kids are better off!"

So the barriers grew slowly between her and the tar babies. They did not seem to feel it; Yelta was content, and as long as his plans were not interrupted, Avery was the absorbing, admiring, eager lover of the New York honeymoon days. That is until the fishing or duck or deer-hunting seasons occurred in their regular orders.

But there were no barriers. Today belonged to Pussy and Catherine, and Isabel's satisfaction in their delight was so deep as to be almost pain—if this felicity was so close to them, what a pity they should so rarely taste it!

"Mommy, can we drive on and on all day long?"

"Oh no—we're going to have lunch with Grandpa!"

"Will he like us?"

"He'll simply adore you."

The sixty-five miles seemed short to her joyous mood. It was not yet noon when they drove into the foothill town of Sutro's Mill. Isabel breathed deep of the piny sweet cool airs from the Sierras; she stopped at a glass-fronted grocery store whose windows were a panorama of bright fruits faintly framed in frost circles.

Inside, she gave each of her daughters a wire push basket to manipulate; the little girls were spellbound with ecstacy as they selected packaged dates and raisin bread, peanut butter and cookies in glazed envelopes.

"You see that big store over there?" she asked them, when they were getting into the car again. "That's where Grandpa works. But we're surprising him today, so we won't go over. You can go in there before we go home, and he'll give you something."

"What?" the girls demanded together.

"Well, he used to give me little padlocks with keys, or a funnel with a chain on it, or string, or a little egg cutter or perhaps a ruler. He always gives children something."

"I want a tin cup that slides together, like Daddy's," said Pussy.

Daddy. That would be Avery. She had taken some pains to get them accustomed to calling him that. Isabel had a fleeting moment of nervousness for fear that they would say it before her father.

"I want sump'n 'at has a top I can put on to it," Catherine announced.

Here was the familiar corner where the Butcher house faced the Higgins cottage and little old Mrs. Moore's shanty stood, or rather collapsed under a pall of honeysuckle and fuchsias and lilac. Here were the familiar maples, and the point where the the road stopped being paved and went comfortably into muddy ruts and grassy banks.

Only a few hundred feet more —and there was the gate sagging open, and the blistered porch and the weather-roughened shingles of the roof. A small white cottage with a row of three squared bedrooms n the right, and a bay-windowed room that was the parlor, on the left.

Sunlight spattered over it in friendly fashion, high pear branches rose over the low roof. It stood on a square corner lot with a windmill and fruit trees about it; buckets and ropes and ladders and odds and ends of machinery lay about in the old fashion under the trees; a cowshed was used as a garage; chickens came and went around a wired enclosure so broken down that they could wander anywhere on the place at will.

Home. Isabel's heart beat fast. She drove up the sprawling side road close to the kitchen door and called out "Aunt Mansie!"

Immediately the door opened, and the newcomers went into a bright hot spacious kitchen scented with good cooking odors. The apple-cheeked stocky woman who had admitted them knelt down to take off the children's coats. A younger woman was cutting out biscuits at the table.

"Well, these are never your children, Belle!" Mansie Dow said, returning the shy smiles of Catherine and Pussy with an admiring smile of her own. "I declare time goes too fast! You know Betty Lou Margens, don't you? You two were in High together. She's b'en helping me since her husband was took, at Bataan, and since your father's b'en s'sick."

Isabel smiled at the young woman who looked over her shoulder while she put her biscuits into the oven, but she did not speak. Her startled eyes went to her aunt's face.

"Yes, Oliver's b'en miserable just about since Christmas," Mrs. Dow said.

"Since Christmas!" This was March.

"Well, just about. Oh, he's b'en back at store, off and on. But he got coughing last Sunday and we talked him into staying in bed. I got your wire, but I didn't tell him you were coming, so you'll surprise him just the same. He's all right," Mrs. Dow went on carefully slicing the breast of a cold turkey. "He's b'en yelling in there for a half an hour to get dinner, but with this changey weather I thought bed was the place for him. I hope your children eat turkey, Isabel, this is one of our own hens. We had it Sunday, and if I do say it..."

"Not your oyster dressing, Aunt Mansie?"

"Well, yes, 'tis. Joe Pachelli had to go over to Martinez Saturday and he brought me back the oysters. You run into the bedroom, Belle, and tell your father his tray's coming right along."

Isabel stepped into a darkened room in which she could perceive her father's form, in the old double bed. He was propped up in pillows, eyeglasses on nose, thin gray hair neatly combed over his bald crown. She went over and kissed him.

"Pop," she said thickly, a great rush of love and gratitude and little-girl admiration flooding her heart.

"Well, say," he began, stammering. "Well, for Pete's sake! Where'd you drop from ,for Pete's sake!"

CANADIAN ENDS 4,000-MILE DASH

Carrying a huge bunch of chrysanthemums, Alfred Henderson, 24-year-old Canadian gold miner, from Du Parquet, Quebec, walked into a private ward at Brighton sanatorium, Eng. At first the girl he had flown 4,000 miles across Atlantic to see, did not recognize him. She was too ill. But later she rallied slightly and the couple sat for an hour holding hands. Mrs. Henderson, ex-W.A.A.F., who met her husband while he was in the Canadian forces in Britain, was to have sailed for Canada last February. She fell ill and for the past fortnight her condition has been serious. Her husband received a cable and within a few hours, with the help of the Canadian War Services Mission, he was aboard plane on way to Britain.

INTENDS TO SUE

Hallywood, Sept. 20—(AP) — Actress Ann Sothern said last night that she intended to sue Robert Sterling for divorce. "We have made two tries to make this marriage a going thing, but it just won't work," Miss Sothern said. "Bob has moved out and I intend to file for divorce, but I don't know just how soon." They were married in 1943.

STRIKERS RETURN TO DUTZ

Auckland, N. Z., Sept. 20—(CP) —More than half of the 1,200 ground crewmen who struck three days ago as a protest against being forced to work on Saturdays returned to duty with the New Zealand Air Force today. The government announced that the remainder are being dismissed from the service immediately. All the strikers are volunteers.

Survivors Due To Arrive At Hospital Today

By C. F. WARREN
(Canadian Press Correspondent)

Gander Airport, Nfld., Sept. 20 (CP)—The United States Army hospital at this huge air base prepared for the arrival of survivors expected early today from the crashed Belgian airliner, which plunged into the dense Newfoundland woodland, 22 miles southwest of here, early Wednesday with 44 persons aboard.

The first rescue party, led by Dr. Martin of the U.S. Army, from Argentia naval base, reached the charred wreckage of the giant airliner shortly after darkness last night.

The exact number of persons alive was not reported. However, Capt. Ray Jennins, Transworld Airlines pilot who spotted the wreckage, said seven survivors had been sighted, three at the crash and four others walking about four miles away. The U.S. coast guard said its North Atlantic patrol had reported survivors included two men, two women and a child, all "very active".

A seaplane had taken the rescue party from Argentia naval base to a small lake about eight miles from the point where the airliner tore into the brush.

Then in small rubber boats its members travelled down a small river to the scene, making faster time than the large rescue party of 30 to 40 men in 10 river boats heading up the main southwest Gander river. The latter route led within a mile of the wreck, from where they faced dense underbrush to the crash scene.

May Be Worst Crash

All American airlines and the U.S. Army Air Corps bases at Argentia, Stephenville and Gander co-operated in rescue operations in what was feared might be the worst crash in commercial aviation history. Previously, the highest number killed in one crash was 27.

This area was blanketed with low hanging fog when the aircraft, carrying 37 passengers and a seven-man crew, made an instrument approach to the field at 3:37 a.m., E.D.T. Wednesday morning.

Ceiling was about 500 feet when it flew over the field and then disappeared.

Capt. Jennings, who sighted the crash after a concentrated search, reported the plane completely burned through except for the tail assembly. The trees had been smashed flat for 500 yards where the plane ripped along the ground after apparently attempting a belly landing.

Aircraft flew over the scene of the wreckage and dropped food and medical supplies for the survivors until the ground party arrived.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Sept. 20 —(CP)— Industrial issues registered a considerable recovery today in the early session on the Toronto Exchange. The golds were down nearly a point in the morning market but they gathered strength in the early afternoon along with the base metals. Western oils were slightly weak at mid-day. Trading continued comparatively light at 727,000 shares for the first three hours.

The gold group trade was featured by an advance of about 50 cents for Duquesne on news of a new discovery on the property. Quemont gained a point or more and East Sullivan added 20 cents.

Sherritt was active and stronger by 15 cents or more, Hudson Bay gained ¾. Other base metals showed little change.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, Sept. 20 — (AP) — Stocks rallied, dipped and recovered in today's somewhat erratic market.

Initial advances running to 3 or more points were reduced or cancelled as proceedings slowed. A burst of purchasing orders then followed the announcement that President Truman had asked Secretary Wallec to resign. The recording machine once more fell behind actual floor transactions for a lengthy period. Plus marks of 1 to 8 points or so were widely distributed near the fourth hour. A number of minus signs persisted.

Canadian stocks joined in the mid-day upswing with Dome ahead 1 1/8 and Hiram Walker forward a point. Seagrams and Canadian Pacific advanced fractionally.

A Healthy Industry

The manufacture of pharmaceutical products in Canada has shown consistent gains in recent years; today the industry ranks as a soundly established and substantial factor in Canadian business.

Intensive research, improved laboratory facilities and a universal recognition of health and dietary needs have combined to build a wide and increasing demand for pharmaceutical products of all kinds. In Canada alone there are over 4,000 drug stores distributing the industry's products while Canadian pharmaceutical companies have developed a substantial export business in many countries throughout the world.

Earnings record in the past, together with current sales, lend considerable promise to the future prospects of this healthy, progressive industry.

Posse Combs Bush For Suspects In Foiled Holdup

Otterville, Sept. 20 (CP) — Police, assisted by a posse of 50 residents, started a wide-spread search today for three armed men who unsuccessfully attempted to hold up the Royal Bank of Canada branch here yesterday.

The black sedan in which the bandits made their getaway was found soon after by townsfolk who followed the men on foot from this village 14 miles south of Woodstock.

A bystander who saw the men enter the bank said they looked like farm workers. One of them, he said, wore dark blue coveralls while another wore khaki coveralls. A pair of khaki coveralls was found 40 feet from the ditched car.

The holdup attempt occurred just before 3 p.m. yesterday while the bank was empty of customers. One of the men started for the manager's office, another moved towards the ledger-keeper and the third approached the teller and said "this is a hold-up."

The manager, Claude Morrison, saw the armed men and pulled a revolver. He tussled briefly with one man, but the trio lost their nerve and fled.

On duty in the bank were Mrs. Wilma Butler, teller; Leona Swartz, ledger-keeper, and Patricia Davis, to whom the manager was dictating when one bandit tried to enter his office.

A search was quickly organized by Provincial Constable Tom Morkin from Tillsonburg, assisted by Provincial Constable Walter Marsland of Woodstock, who captured the man who held up the Hickson branch of the Bank of Commerce last Tuesday.

Never Drink Again Says Cecil Harris

Whitby, Sept. 20 — (CP) — "I feel like I have been carried on a magic carpet into Heaven," 22-year-old Mrs. Lorne Harris said Wednesday night after her husband was acquitted on a charge of murder in the strangle-slaying of Mrs. Audrey Lyons at nearby Ajax last November.

"To me it was a matter of life and death. Life had been given to me again as it had been given to my husband."

Harris himself, in a bylined story in the Toronto Star, said: "No one really knows how wonderful is the feeling of freedom—freedom from the shadows of grey walls, jail guards, bars and the gallows."

He added: "This trial taught me a lesson — a lesson I should have learned when I was younger. It taught me never again to associate with doubtful company. I will

William Callahan Given Ten Years For Manslaughter

Guelph, Sept. 20—(CP)—The trial of William Callahan, 45, on a charge of murdering his roomer, William Norrish, 58, was concluded yesterday when a Supreme Court jury brought in a verdict of manslaughter and Mr. Justice G. A. Urquhart sentenced Callahan to 10 years in penitentiary.

Counsel for Callahan called no witnesses but asked for a manslaughter verdict on the ground there was provocation for the attack on Norrish.

During the trial two statements made to police were admitted as evidence. In them Callahan was quoted as describing events on the night of March 30, culminating in the slaying of Norrish. The statements said the men quarreled, that Norrish slipped to the floor and Callahan picked up a shovel, hit Norrish two or three times and then "finished him off" with an axe.

The statement continued that he buried the body in the basement where it was subsequently found Aug. 17 by Norrish's two sons, in search of their father's First Great War medals.

The jury returned the manslaughter verdict after 2½ hours deliberation and after having been instructed by Mr. Justice Urquhart he did not see how "12 reasonable men . . . could bring in a verdict of acquittal."

Callahan and other witnesses had testified that Norrish was of "an argumentative and quarrelsome temperament," when drinking.

Body of Boy Found in Lane

Winnipeg, Sept. 20 — (CP) — The partially clad body of 13-year-old George Smith was found lying in a lane in West Winnipeg early Thursday after the boy had been missing from home since early last night. He had been shot through the shoulder.

The boy had gone to a Boy Scout meeting at a nearby church early last night and was reported missing by his family at 1:30 a.m.

Although the body was stripped to the waist when found and there was evidence of a struggle, Deputy Police Chief Charles MacIvor said the boy had not been criminally assaulted.

CHURCHILL GIVES V-SIGN

Zurich, Switzerland, Sept. 20. (Reuters)— Winston Churchill, driving through crowded streets to make his speech at Zurich University today, repeatedly gave the familiar V-sign—but it was an old sign with a new meaning.

He explained it no longer stands for the victory of one group of nations over another, but for the victory of personal liberty over tyranny.

'Headless Valley' Mystery May Have Been Solved

Whitehorse, Y. T., Sept. 20 — (CP) — The mystery of the legendary Indian Valley of Nahani—known to the tribesmen of the north as "Headless Valley"—may have been solved by three Americans, including a woman, who today are safe at Watson Lake.

James Watts, a school teacher-prospector, his wife, Beatrice, and her brother, Edward Rose, left Watson Lake in mid-August, lured by reports of gold and undaunted by the stories that 13 white men had disappeared in the Nahani country in the last eight years.

A deadline for Watts return was set — Sept. 17 — and at almost the exact hour when the police patrols of the far northern region would have been set in action, the trio came out of the "mystery country" Tuesday night.

However, only a brief message was sent to the Whitehorse division of the R.C.M.P., and no details of their adventurous journey were known here.

For years, Indians have told the stories of the mystery land where white men enter but never return, and now Watts may know the fate of many traders, trappers and prospectors reported lost in the almost inaccessible wilderness.

R.C.M.P. patrols have often heard the stories, many of which were discounted by authorities, but always the Indians shunned the valley, to them a country of death.

New Forestry District Formed In Haliburton

Lindsay, Sept. 20—(CP)—Provincial Treasurer Leslie M. Frost, addressing the annual field day gathering of the Victoria County Council Committee on soil conservation and reforestation, at Burnt River Wednesday declared that the government appropriation for lands, forests, fish and wild life this year totalled $6,000,000 double that of 1945.

"In connection with the announcement of recent months concerning a new approach to the forestry, fish and wild life problems in the province, important changes and development are being made in the counties of Victoria and Haliburton," Mr. Frost said and outlined them as follows:

1. A new forestry district known as "the forest district of Trent" has been created, with headquarters at Lindsay.
2. The fish and game division of the Department of Lands and Forests will have a similar district with changes in officers and organizational set-up.
3. The new forestry school in Haliburton will work closely in co-operation with the above organization, which extends across Ontario, and in co-operation with Toronto, Queen's and Western universities, in scientific matters relating to forests and fish and wild life.
4. The county forestry area has this year been increased by a further 2,200 acres at normal cost to the county with the appointment of two county forest caretakers, employed and paid by the department, to stations at Burnt

RUMOR DENIED

Toronto, Sept. 20. (CP)—Rumors that tea rationing is to be re-introduced were branded by a Prices Board official as "talk on the part of irresponsible persons".

He said the Board has no intention of rationing tea. Shortages were caused by increased purchasing by rumor-believing persons. A normal seasonal shortage would end next month when shipments for northern India arrived.

"FOREST FIRE"

Based upon a picture painted for Carling's by William Book.

This is one of a series of illustrations on the subject of the Conservation of Canada's natural assets designed to emphasize the fact that the beauties of unspoiled nature that we enjoy today are a precious birthright which we must protect for tomorrow.

† COPYRIGHT BY CARLING'S, 1946

"Forest Fire—The Common Enemy"

The scream of a rabbit pierces the hissing roar of the forest fire as a tall spruce bursts into flame like an oil-soaked rag. A deer, wild-eyed with terror, bursts from the undergrowth and makes for the protecting waters of a small lake where other creatures of the wild, forgetting all lesser fears, stand huddled together, shivering with fear of fire—their common enemy.

Crackling and hissing, its advance-line of windblown sparks reaching far ahead, the forest fire takes its terrible toll of wild life and forest wealth. In its wake nothing is left but blackened tree-trunks and desolation.

A lurid picture? Yes, but a true picture, and one that is seen all too frequently in Canada's forest lands. Statistics show that out of 6,000 forest fires in Canada every year, only one in six owes its origin to natural causes (lightning, etc.) The rest are caused by human agencies, and can be prevented.

As a shareholder in Canada's natural wealth, every Canadian has a vital interest in conservation. And conservation is the concern of all who are interested in the continuance of our national economy and our future prosperity, rather than the concern of a chosen few. The success of conservational measures depends upon the full support of all Canadian citizens.

ELEVEN KILLED AS GALES SWEEP GREAT BRITAIN

Batter Shipping In English Channel, Many Ships Sunk

100-Mile-an-Hour Winds Strike the Southern Coast

London, Sept. 21 —(CP)— The Air Ministry said today that the 100-mile-an-hour winds which struck the south coast of England yesterday, killing at least 11 persons and battering shipping in the English Channel, probably would be followed by another "big gale" today.

At least 22 were reported injured by yesterday's hurricane-force wind which caused devastation from Lands Ends to Dover and was adjudged the worst September storm in 37 years. Four of the deaths occurred in shipping accidents.

Three Channel Islanders, bound for London for a belated celebration of the liberation, were washed overboard when the steamer, "Isle of Jersey" was virtually swamped by a 60-foot wave which hit her at noon yesterday, 20 miles off the Guernsey coast.

The 2,000 vessel limped into Southampton last night and debarked with 22 others who had been injured by falls and flying furniture.

Seven deaths which occurred ashore included three killed by falling trees, one by electrocution and two by drowning in flood waters caused by torrential rains in parts of Yorkshire and Lancashire. One man was killed when a train was derailed by a washout near London, which was hit by 60-mile-an-hour winds.

A plane bringing Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, home from his visit to the United States, circled for two hours over Bovingdon airdrome and was finally diverted to another field where it landed without incident.

The Earl of Jersey's 40-ton yacht was smashed against the rock at Yarmouth, Isle of Wight. The Earl and six companions clambered to safety.

The storm broke up the 7,176-ton American freighter Helena Modjeska, which had been stranded on the Goodwin Sands off Deal since the night of Sept. 12.

Name of Brazilian President Poison To Rio Showgirls

By CHARLES LYNCH

Rio de Janiero, Sept. 21. — (Reuters)— Mention the name "Dutra" to a Rio showgirl and you will see one of the finest displays of fireworks this side of Bikini.

The long-legged, hip-swaying glamor girls of Rio's once-famous night clubs and casinos have fallen on evil days since President Enrio Gaspar Dutra closed the gambling rooms from which the girls did their stuff.

From these shows rated among the most elaborate in the world, came such famed entertainers as such top-flight native talent, Carmen Miranda. Along with stars like Jean Sablon, Josephine Baker, the Mills Brothers and a host of other international entertainers were featured.

For weeks the unemployed girls lounged around the famous Rio beaches, pawning their bracelets and their mink coats to buy food. At first they were confident that public opinion would reopen the casinos, but finally they got together to consider a plan of action.

The result is a show in downtown Rio called Sonho Carioca—Carioca Dream—and it is a sad spectacle. The casino costumes are tarnished and tattered after weeks of disuse. The once trim ladies have put on a strategic inch or two around the waist.

Blame it on Dutra.

Anti-Gambling Club Takes Swipe At Soccer Pools

By JACK SULLIVAN

London, Sept. 21 (CP)—Millions of Britons who take a fling on horses the dogs and soccer games as regularly as they haunt the local pub, are drawing the attention of "down-with-betting" organizations, the government and newspapers. But they're wagering five to one much will come of it.

As the first big-league soccer season in seven years began the Churches' Committee on Gambling took a healthy swipe at the "shameful" football pools.

Peculiarly, the phenomenal rise of greyhound racing and the attendant tote figures aren't mentioned specifically. Many sports writers say the game has "gone to the dogs," with dog-doping, track riots and "mussling in" by racketeers. Hoodlums have shown a tendency in recent months to start a free-for-all if the judges' decision doesn't jibe with theirs.

The Churches Committee statement said "everything points to the conclusion the country is heading for the biggest (football) pool deluge ever known" and that "a mad scramble for clients (by promoters) has already begun with a spate of advertising."

It said total expenditure in pools during the 1945-46 season was "apparently well over" £25,000,000 ($100,000,000) by about 4,000,000 persons who regularly staked three shillings sixpence (70 cents) weekly .

The gambling instinct can't be eradicated, said the Daily Mirror, and any attempt to stop the practice "would be an intolerable challenge to the liberty of the subject."

"It seems reasonable," said the Mirror, "that the man or woman who enjoys the pleasure and excitement of a 'flutter' with possible heavy gains" should forfeit something to the state, much as the person who goes to a movie pays a tax for his entertainment.

KILLED NEAR OSHAWA

Oshawa, Sept. 21 — (CP)—Collision of two automobiles on Highway No. 2 about ½ mile east of Dumbarton today took the life of Otto Schroder of Toronto and sent four others to Oshawa hospital.

Police said a truck driven by Ted Outwin of Whitby apparently skidded on west pavement and crashed into an eastbound automobile in which Schroder was a passenger.

Documents Released Citing Nazi Experiments in Freezing Human Beings

Washington, Sept. 21 — (AP)— Nazi experiments in freezing human beings in a study of "the behavior of organisms at great heights" were cited by the United States War Department today in releasing a volume of secret documents seized after the conquest of Germany.

One of the documents, written by a German air force physician, Dr. S. Rascher, to Gestapo Chief Himmler, incongruously discussed the cold-blooded experiments after first thanking Himmler for sending "flowers on the birth of my second son . . . a strong boy."

In a letter dated Feb. 17, 1943, Dr. Rascher wrote to Himmler that "up to now" he had "cooled off" about 30 human guinea pigs taken from concentration camps, by stripping them and exposing them to winter air.

Dr. Rascher also reported on subjecting humans to ice baths with water reduced to temperatures ranging from 12 degrees to 2.5 degrees.

The report concluded that when the body temperature dropped to 28 degrees the victims invariably died.

"Rewarming by animal bodies or women's bodies would prove too slow," it added, "because after removal from the cold water the body temperature continued to sink rapidly."

In another document marked "secret" in capital letters, Himmler declared he "personally assumed the responsibility for supplying social individuals who deserve only to die from concentration camps for these experiments." Himmler said the experiments were needed to learn how to combat the conditions encountered by high-flying German bombers and "frost injuries" suffered by Nazi troops fighting on the winter-frozen Russian front.

RUMPUS-RAISING WALLACE RESUMES ATTACK ON POLICY

Within Twelve Hours Of Dismissal From Cabinet He Gives Radio Address

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Sept. 21 (CP) — Rumpus-raising Henry Agard Wallace, relieved of his Commerce Secretaryship by President Truman, today is the enigma of United States politics.

As a private citizen he was free to resume his attacks on United States foreign affairs, to stump for the Democrats in the Congressional election campaign, or to form a new Liberal party. Or he can remain silent.

What he will do is a matter of grave concern and considerable apprehension to many Americans, and his influence may be felt seriously in foreign capitals.

The bushy-haired Iowa farm boy, who narrowly missed beating Harry Truman for the vice-presidential nomination at the Democratic convention in 1944, is letting people guess for awhile.

Yesterday, after it appeared he had made his peace with the President by promising to make no more public statements or speeches until the critical Paris peace treaty conference is ended, Mr. Truman suddenly asked for his resignation.

Forthcoming at Once

The resignation was forthcoming at once and Mr. Wallace was relieved of his self-imposed gag. Within 12 hours he was addressing the country over a National Radio Network, and again he attacked the present foreign policy.

He spoke only a few words, displayed no rancor and promised not to abuse his freedom to speak out. But he did take a last crack at the policy being administered by the President and State Secretary Byrnes, in these words:

"I feel that our present foreign policy does not recognize the basic realities which led us to two world wars and which now threaten another war—this time an atomic war."

He removed any doubt that he would battle on for his "go-easy-with-Russia" ideas which brought him into conflict with the State Department and led President Truman to dismiss him from his official family.

"The success of any policy," Mr. Wallace said, "rests ultimately upon the confidence and the will of the people.

Must Know Issues

"There can be no basis for such success unless the people know and understand the issues—unless they are given all the facts—and unless they seize the opportunity to take part in the framing of foreign policy through full and open debate."

In his radio speech he said he did not want to say "anything tonight which might interfere with the success of the Paris conference."

Program Designed to Put War-Torn Europe Back On Feet Economically

By MAX HARRELSON

Lake Success, N.Y., Sept. 21—(AP)— The United Nations sub-commission on the economic reconstruction of devastated areas proposed today a broad program designed to put war-torn Europe back on its feet and help formulate a long-range European economic plan unprecedented in scope.

The proposals were contained in a 450-page report which detailed economic conditions in Europe and pointed out problems which require an immediate solution before recovery can be complete. A similar report on Asia will be ready next spring.

The sub-commission found that Europe is emerging rapidly from the period of devastation, largely due to the help of U.N.R.R.A., but that most countries still are faced with serious shortages of food, fuel, housing, manpower and raw materials and that financial assistance is badly needed to restore industry and international trade to a normal level.

Chief proposal of the 21-power group was that the economic and social council at once create an economic commission for Europe to foster co-operation in the expansion and integration of European economic activity.

Other Recommendations

One of the tasks of the Commission would be to assemble and exchange information to enable the individual countries to plan more effeciently for the future.

Other recommendations included:

1. Creation of a permanent international housing organization.
2. Establishment of an agency described as an international commission to study and prepare plans for the co-ordinated development of European power resources and the construction of hydro-electric plants.
3. Approval of an UNRRA suggestion to establish or designate an agency to review the needs in 1947 for financing urgent imports and make recommendations for financial assistance required to meet foreign exchange difficulties.

FEIGNED ILLNESS OF THREE WOMEN FOILS HOLD-UP

Two Masked Bandits Stay in Agincourt Bank During the Night

Agincourt, Sept. 21 — (CP) — Feigned illness of three women today helped to foil an attempted holdup of the Bank of Nova Scotia branch here by two masked bandits who spent the night in the bank.

Police said the men confronted a cleaning woman and two friends who entered the bank before opening hour. They herded them into a back room.

There the women pretended to faint and acted as though they were extremely ill. Police credited the women's antics with "getting on the nerves" of the would-be holdup men who decided to abandon the robbery attempt and fled.

As soon as the alarm was sounded, police cruisers from all directions converged on the bank. One cruiser was reported in collision with another car in the pursuit.

The gunmen — one described as extremely good-looking and nattily dressed, the other as thick-set and ugly — escaped in a large sedan which police say was stolen in Toronto.

C.I.O. Mariners Return to Work As Strike Ends

New York, Sept. 21 (AP)— C.I.O. Mariners filed back to work on ships in New York harbor today after membership meetings there and in other United States' east and gulf ports voted an end to their Maritime strike on the basis of an arbitration award establishing an industry-wide principle of wage parity.

Joseph Curran, President of the National Maritime Union, said that the country's costliest sea stoppage was "officially over," but actual end of the strike elsewhere depended on acceptance of the settlement by all seamen involved.

It also must be concurred in by MNU members in all other ports, the C.I.O. Marine Cooks and Stewards, and the Independent Marine Firemen, Oilers, Wipers and Watertenders—West Coast Unions—before the country-wide strike would be ended.

The United States Maritime Commission last night ordered its agents in all ports to pay all seamen the same rates as had been awarded A.F.L. Mariners, meaning wage increase of $5 to $10 monthly.

ITALY, AUSTRIA AGREEMENT ON TYROL APPROVED

Local Autonomy Granted to German - Speaking Residents of the South Tyrol

By JOSEPH DYNAN

Paris, Sept. 21 — (AP) — The Italian political and territorial commission of the Paris Peace Conference approved today an agreement between Italy and Austria on the Tyrol.

By a vote of 13 to 6, the commission decided to insert the accord into the proposed Italian peace treaty. The negative votes were cast by the Slavic Bloc, which argued that the agreement was not pertinent to the present treaty.

Under the agreement which was signed here recently by Austrian Foreign Minister Karl Gruber and Italian Premier Alcide de Gasperi, Italy granted local autonomy to German-speaking residents of the South Tyrol, guaranteed the right to speak the Tyrolese language and pledged that German-speaking persons would have equal opportunity to hold public office.

The two countries also promised to work out mutually satisfactory rail, transit and trade facilities.

Col. W. R. Hodgson of Australia replied to criticism from Slav delegates by saying that "some delegations" were "apparently opposed to guarantees of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

Virtual completion yesterday of work on the political and territorial aspects of the proposed treaty with Bulgaria left the delegates free to concentrate on the Italian and Hungarian pacts. The political and territorial phases of treaties with Finland and Romania previously had been fairly well outlined.

Armed Hold-up Of Concession At Fair Reported

An armed hold-up of a concession of the Queen City Shows playing at Picton Fair was reported to provincial police at an early hour Saturday morning with police being alerted at strategic exit points in an effort to prevent the escape from the county of the persons responsible.

Stolen as result of the hold-up was a quantity of concession prizes such as clocks, radios and lamps, but police reported that about three-quarters of the goods had been recovered this morning about one-half mile from the concession where it was stolen.

Provincial and county police in Picton are continuing their investigation into the matter.

TYPHOON SPREADS HEAVY DAMAGE THROUGH GUAM

Big United States Naval Base Receives Full Fury of 100-Mile-An-Hour Wind

By DOUGLAS LOVELACE

Guam, Sept. 21 — (AP) — A treacherous typhoon veered unexpectedly and roared today across this big United States naval base and three more fortified Mariana Islands to the north, leaving heavy military damage.

Huge sheets of corrugated steel from quonset huts were whipped through the air in 100-mile-an-hour gusts.

Rear-Admiral Charles A. Pownall, commander of the Marianas, issued a statement in mid-afternoon that first, fragmentary reports indicated there were no serious injuries among naval or marine personnel or civilians.

Wives and children of military men were removed from small quonset huts to stouter buildings and military personnel were confined indoors as word spread that the typhoon was shifting course.

Admiral Pownall said there was extensive damage to buildings throughout Guam, including the naval hospital. Many hangars were reported levelled at Harmon Field — from where B-29s used to take off for Tokyo.

Army airfields on the northern end of the island, closest to the typhoon centre, were reported damaged extensively.

In Guam, a huge quonset hut was lifted into the air and settled piggyback astride another.

Most installations were on battle rations and power had not been restored. The naval radio went out at the height of the storm and Guam was cut off from the world for hours.

50,000 Employees Of Western Union Intend to Strike

Washington, Sept. 21—(AP)— J. A. Payne of the A. F. L. National Co-ordinating Board said early today that the bargaining committee representing 50,000 employees had "broken off negotiations" with the Western Union Telegraph Company and would file a notice of intention to strike "within a few days."

Mr. Payne told a reporter the committee broke off negotiations late yesterday after representatives of the company refused to accept the union's request for a 16½ cents an hour increase for all employees except messengers, who asked a 10 cents an hour increase.

Company representatives were not immediately available for comment.

Mr. Payne said the committee of which he is a member represents the Commercial Telegraphers, the Telegraph Workers Federal Labor and the Telegraph Employees unions, all A.F.L. affiliates.

WALLACES DISMISS etc . .

London, Sept. 21 —(CP)—The dismissal of Commerce Secretary Henry Wallace from President Truman's Cabinet was greeted with relief in varying degrees today by Britain's Conservative press, but the pro-Labor Daily Herald was silent and there was no official comment.

A Foreign Office spokesman said Foreign Secretary Bevin learned of the Wallace ouster from press dispatches last night, but added that neither Mr. Bevin nor anyone else in the Foreign Office would make any comment on the action.

"You wouldn't expect the State Department to make any public statement on a change in the British Cabinet, would you?" the spokesman inquired.

The Conservative Daily Telegraph voiced perhaps the strongest approval of the President's action, declaring that State Secretary Byrnes' foreign policy had been restored "unambiguously."

The Times agreed, calling the "unequivocal affirmation" of the Byrnes' foreign policy the "outstanding result" of Mr. Wallace's resignation.

The Liberal News Chronicle headlined the story of Mr. Wallace's dismissal: "Truman sacks Wallace at Byrnes' demand," a view reflected in almost all the other morning papers. The Daily Mail speculated on whether Mr. Wallace, together with Senator Claude Pepper, (Dem. - Fla.), might attempt to form a third party, and the Herald's Washington dispatch described Mr. Wallace as "the spiritual leader of the American Left."

Eighteen Still Alive Unable to Get Out Of Bush Unaided

Flying Boat Drops Supplies, Equipment For the Marooned

Gander Airport, Nfld., Sept. 21 —(CP)—Two Army Skymasters, each carrying a Coast Guard helicopter, landed at Gander Bay today for an attempt to rescue 18 survivors marooned at the wreckage of a Belgian airliner in the wilderness 22 miles southwest of this base.

The first transport arrived from the United States at 6:49 a.m. E.D.T. The second 31 minutes later. Workmen immediately began unloading the dismantled helicopters so they could be assembled for the hazardous pickup of the survivors — 14 of whom were injured seriously.

Lieut. August Kleish, Cincinnati, Ohio, one of the two Coast Guard helicopter pilots who arrived in the transports said it would take at least eight hours to assemble his helicopter. The other helicopter pilot was Lieut. Walter Bolton, Milton, Mass.

Land on Plateau

Lieut. Kleish said the machines probably would be landed on a small plateau about a quarter of a mile above the crash scene. Previously a plan to hover over the survivors' camp in the dense chill wilderness and lift them by emergency litters and hoists had been considered.

The helicopters, with mechanics, were flown from New York and Elizabeth City, N.C.

Meantime, a Coast Guard Catalina flying boat took off for the scene to drop a small power plant, two floodlights, sanitary equipment, splints and crutches. The latter items indicated some of the survivors had suffered broken arms or legs in the crash of the Sabena airliner Wednesday morning.

Marooned 72 Hours

The survivors, marooned more than 72 hours in a chill spruce forest, were cheered by the news that the helicopter rescue operations might begin before nightfall.

Lieut. Fletcher Brown, Jr., of Gloucester, Mass., co-pilot of the Catalina, talked with Lieut. James J. Christian at the rescue camp by walkie talkie.

"We told them that the helicopters were here and they were sure tickled," he said.

Lieut. Brown said Capt. Samuel P. Martin, leader of the rescue party reported everyone getting along fairly well except that they were miserable from the cold and damp. Six or eight could walk or get around on crutches, but the rest of the survivors were unable to move because of broken bones and burns..

The weather, while sharply cold, was bright and clear and Lieut. Kleish said he hoped to take off in one of the helicopters by 4 p.m., E.D.T., Eastern Daylight Time.

Five Statements Given by Accused Admitted in Court

Whitby, Sept. 21. (CP)—The supreme court jury under Mr. Justice Keiller MacKay today had before it five separate statements alleged to the confessions of guilt by George Bilton, charged with murder in the boulder-slayings of Mrs. Alex Laurie, of Ajax, and her four-year-old daugher Patricia. Only the charge of murder in the slaying of the woman is being proceeded with.

The jury was excluded for six hours yesterday while counsel argued before Mr. Justice MacKay finally ruled the evidence was admissible.

The bodies of the woman and child were found last June 16 near the highway adjacent to Ajax, 25 miles east of Toronto. The woman and child had left their home three days previously.

J. D. G. Sutherland, Governor of the Whitby jail, testified that Bilton told him he had had an argument with Mrs. Laurie when they left the Laurie home where Bilton, according to crown evidence, had been a frequent visitor during absence of the slain woman's husband.

"He said he'd knocked her down," Sutherland said. "There was a large rock nearby and he'd picked it up and struck her with it several times."

According to one of the statements attributed to Bilton, a disagreement which ended with Bilton knocking the woman down occurred when she threatened that if he would not take her with him she would tell the police that she had a child by him.

60,000 More "Walking Sticks" Are Needed

Toronto, Sept. 21 (CP)—More than 40,000 "walking sticks" insects used for cancer research, have been received at the Banting Institute here since an appeal was issued last week by the Red Cross.

John A. Marsh, Commissioner of the Ontario Division, said the response was "very gratifying" but that 60,000 more of the insects are needed.

Children in Delhi, Ont., collected 15,000; the Kinsmen Club of London, Ont., 10,000, and a drive organized by Elsie McCallum of Grand Bend, Ont., netted 10,000.

Mr. Marsh urged citizens to send the "walking sticks" in ventilated cartons express collect to the Banting Institute, 100 College Street, Toronto.

Salvation Army's Appeal for Funds To Carry on Welfare Work is One Which Should be Heeded by Everyone

Actual outlay on social service operations in Canadian territory by the Salvation Army came to nearly $3,000,000 last year according to the 63rd annual balance sheet just issued. Of this, costs exceeded income by nearly $1,000,000 and this was met from funds subscribed during the 1944 national Home Front appeal.

Largest individual item in the outlay of funds received from the public, $410,887.51 was expended as grants-in-aid toward maintenance of more than 300 centres for investigation and relief of problem cases, visitation of the sick and need and human reclamation work, all this being done by Salvation Army field officers.

Next largest amount, $270,181.38 went to meet deficits on costs and maintenance of 53 social institutions including children's homes, emergency and rescue homes for girls, maternity hospitals, men's shelters and food depots, homes for aged men and women, relief of distress, police court and prison gate work, support of the League of Mercy which carries on hospital visitation and other welfare activities.

Third largest amount, $139,862.83, went for rehabilitation work which covered assistance to civilians and service men and women, including temporary help with rent, clothing, meals, travelling etc.

• • •

All Salvation Army institutions under the direction of the Women's Social department are operating at full capacity and many far beyond normal capacity. Costs for operations and administration of the 29 institutions across Canada in 1945 were $1,746,657.95. Much of this was met by revenue from the institutions. The deficit was covered by funds raised by public subscription.

This year's total operating outlay will be substantially higher because of the increases in costs of commodities, services, medical supplies and staffs.

In an effort to raise $2,000,000 for maintenance and expansion of facilities next year, the Salvation Army launched its campaign at the beginning of this week. Belleville's share of this amount is set at $5,000.

Every resident of this city is fully aware of the splendid work done here by the Army. Many local residents are grateful to the "Sally Anne" for their generosity and willingness to help when days were dark. Its representatives here spare no time or effort to help the less fortunate and many a person who has fallen foul of the law, or has been sent to prison recalls the warm cheery smile and the hand of friendship and hope extended by officers of the Army.

• • •

By assisting the Salvation Army you are not giving your money away. You are making an investment in human lives which will pay dividends not measured in dollars and cents. The Army is merely a clearing house for love and happiness and many a sorrow-darkened home has been brightened by the warm rays of friendliness and cheer that arrives with the Salvationist.

Any donation, no matter how large or small will be cheerfully accepted by the canvassers.

Give now and give generously.

Officers Named for Community Service Chest Drive Sept. 30

Organization of the Community Service Chest campaign for Belleville and district has now been completed with Clare B. Morgan named as chairman for the drive which will get underway on September 30th.

Vice chairman for the campaign will be W. H. Finkle, N. E. Edwards and T. D. Ruston, with J. E. Shortt as campaign director. Treasurer is I. G. Hefkey and secretary Helen Lancaster.

An objective of $12,000 has been set for the campaign, the money to be raised jointly for the Children's Aid Society, the Victorian Order of Nurses and the Young Men's Christian Association. In keeping with the procedure adopted during the war years the joint drive is being staged instead of three separate campaigns.

Although the general canvass will not get underway until the last day of the month, the special names committee will begin their campaign on September 23rd. This decision was reached by the committee in charge following a meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. on Friday afternoon when canvassers were designated their respective canvassing areas. John W. Deacon is chairman of the special names committee and has a number of local business men who have volunteered to assist in the campaign.

Cream Producers Hold Meeting For Organization

Preliminary work toward the organization of cream producers within Hastings county was seen at a meeting held in Stirling last week when the advantages of such an organization were outlined by W. A. Wood of Alliston, Ontario.

Charles Rush, president of the Hastings County Federation of Agriculture, and Ralph Campbell, secretary of the federation, were in charge of the meeting.

Mr. Wood stressed the fact that every agricultural commodity should have a strong organization to negotiate a fair and equitable price. Following Mr. Wood's address it was decided that a committee of three should be appointed to attend provincial meetings of the proposed cream producers' association and also to complete the organization of a Hastings County Cream Producers' Association.

Col. R. Vanderwater, Foxboro, was named as chairman of the committee with E. J. Pyear of Stirling and Charles Rush as members.

Provisional directors appointed to assist the above committee included Messrs. Irwin McCoy, Marmora; Vincent Farrell, Stirling; Kenneth Caskey, Madoc; J. C. Sills, West Huntingdon; Seldon Homan, Corbyville; Earl Whiteman, Shannonville, and W. J. Davis of Maple Leaf.

It is expected that the organization of a provincial cream producers' association will be sufficiently advanced this fall that a vote of procedure will be taken to determine whether cream will in future be marketed under the Farm Producers' Control Act.

DON'T LIKE SPELLING

St. Catharines, Sept. 21 (CP)—Residents are proud when St. Catharines is called the Garden City and they don't object to St. Kitts, but when it's spelled "St. Catherines"—with an "e"—they don't like it. Chamber of Commerce today decided to try publicity to eradicate the "e" after a circus plastered billboards and windows with signs announcing its impending arrival at "St. Catherines."

County Officials Meet City Fathers On Industrial Site

Question of the city acquiring part of the Hastings County Farm which lies south of the highway was discussed at some length Friday evening by members of the Belleville Industrial Commission and a representative gathering of county officials. The county officials were guests of the commission at the dinner meeting held at the Queen's Hotel.

According to Chairman of Industries, Alderman Lorne McDougall, who presided over the meeting in the absence of Industrial Commission Chairman Robt. Pringle, the land directly south of the highway and across from the county home is wanted by a large industry which would like to locate in the Belleville district. The industry would employ about 125 persons to start and would eventually provide employment for upwards of 1,000 persons, it was stated.

County officials made no decision regarding the matter during the meeting and although speaking of their desire to be co-operative with the city in regard to any possible industrial expansion seemed reluctant to dispose of what they claimed was the most productive part of their county farm. Erection of industrial buildings south of the highway would detract much from the beauty of the present scenery from the county home.

Attending the meeting were Mayor Frank Follwell, Alderman McDougall, Chairman of Commerce Secretary J. Badgley, Harry Rollins, Alderman F. E. Follwell and Warden James Nickle, Elmer Post, Harry Coulter, Elmer Sandercock, county farm superintendent, and Erle S. Denyes, representing the county.

Mrs. M. Desmeules Sentenced to Hang On November 26

Port Arthur Sept. 21 —(CP)— Convicted of the murder of her elderly landlady in Fort William last June29, Mrs. Marie Desmeules was sentenced to be hanged Nov. 26 by Mr. Justice D. J. P. Kelly as her five day trial was ended in Fall Assizes here late yesterday.

Mrs. Desmeules had been charged with the murder after she summoned police to a boarding house operated by Miss Susan Thoms, where constables found the body of Miss Thoms in her bed with her skull broken in, apparently by some heavy object. Mrs. Desmeules occupied rooms adjoining those of Miss Thoms.

Several gasps were heard from the crowded court room as the jury announced its decision, prompting Clarence Colleran, clerk of the court, to call for order. A dead silence followed immediately as the Justice prepared to pass sentence.

Mr. Justice Kelly asked the convicted woman if she had anything to say before he proceeded. There was an almost inaudible "No."

Mrs. Desmeules, who had sat through five days of examination of witnesses, walked from the court room behind a jail matron in the same steady manner and with the same quick step that she had used many times during the week. Pronouncement of sentence had left her completely unaffected.

Report Exonerates Principal, Teacher

Toronto, Sept. 20 — (CP)—The Toronto Board of Education at its regular meeting last night presented to the press complete reports submitted to the board in connection with the 'crying room' incident at Wilkinson public school Sept. 4, when four-year-old John Viger, a new pupil in kindergarten, leaped through a window of the cloakroom where he had been sent by the teacher, and broke both legs.

Before releasing the reports however the Board defeated by 8-6 a motion that its discussion of the case, which lasted for more than an hour, should be held in public. It was after the private discussion, that the reports were released.

One report was from Dr. C. C. Goldring, director of education, and the other from Z. S. Phimister, director of public schools. Both reports had exonerated Charles E. Manning, principal of the school, and Miss Ruth Wicksey, the kindergarten teacher, of any blame in the incident. Dr. Goldring's report said that the child had been "kicking and screaming" before he was removed from the rest of the class.

Election Time in the 'Sixties'

Elections in the early days were interesting beyond measure. Feeling ran high in the "sixties" in this community and riding as may be judged from stories which have been handed down from that time and from newspaper reports of meetings at the time of federal and legislative voting. There has been handed to The Ontario Intelligencer some verse which was printed for distribution back in those hectic days. The ballad is "The Quinte Election" and in it appears names of the leading men of the day. The verse runs as follows:

"THE QUINTE ELECTION"
—A New Song
Air:—"The Tight Little Island".

Quinte's sons, Quinte's sons;
The political guns
Are firing in every direction;
And Tories and Grits
Are exchanging hard hits
On the great Legislative Election.

Chorus:
Hurrah for the Quinte election,
The great Legislative election,
Read is the man,
Deny it who can,
Who can shine in the Quinte election.

Lawyer Lew, Lawyer Lew,
Though your blood may be blue,
It don't help you on with your speeches:
You'd be better employed
'. assist Turner Boyd,
Or to help John Lavine to make breeches.
Hurrah for the &c.

Brother Frank, brother Hank,
Brother Billy so lank,
While like Shylock you grind debtors' noses,
Stick up for each clause
Of the Usury Laws,
Which the South Riding member proposes.
Hurrah, &c.

Brother Cam, brother Cam,
Young innocent lamb!
When for North Riding votes you go sparking,
Whate'er your success,
Be it more boy or less
I hope you won't met with Priest Larkin.
Hurrah, &c.

Billy Flint, Billy Flint,
What harm is there in't
If a fellow should sometimes get frisky,
Any more than to buy
Those cargoes of Rye
For "Bob" to convert into whiskey?
Hurrah, &c.

Abe Diamond, beware!
Editorial care
May your legal acumen unsettle.
It would be but bad taste
To put gold around paste,
When brass is the true native metal.
Hurrah, &c.

Dr. Hope, Dr. Hope,
With the best you might cope
If votes could be counted by kisses,
But you never must roam—
But remain safe at home,
To attend the young wives and old misses.
Hurrah, &c.

But your steed you should change
Ere again forth you range,
Nor your patients thus hold in terrorem:
As you drive through the street
In your buggy so neat,
Like Death with his pale horse before him:
Hurrah, &c.

Robert Read, Robert Read,
Push your canvass with speed
If you want to secure your election,
And manfully fight
For our QUEEN and our RIGHT
And our glorious old British Connection.

Chorus:
Hurrah for the Quinte election,
The great Legislative election,
Read is the man,
Deny it who can,
Who will win the great Quinte election.

Written for the Legislative election some time early in the sixties the "song" in its details may be not very clear to readers of today. In explanation therefore, some data is given as to these personalities who were household names in early Belleville and Hastings political life.

"Read" refers to Robert Read, candidate in the election who later became a member of the Canadian Senate. He was one of the outstanding men of the time in this district and was deeply concerned with the problems of agriculture. He was instrumental in establishing the first cheese factory in this part of Ontario. He operated a large farm in Sidney.

"Lawyer Lew" was a prominent citizen, no other than Lewis Wallbridge, a native of Belleville, who practised law here, became the Speaker of the last Legislature of Upper Canada and afterwards Chief Justice of Manitoba.

'Brother Frank", "Brother Hank", "Brother Billy" and "Brother Cam", were members of the same prominent Wallbridge family, leaders in Belleville in that era.

'Billy Flint", was the Hon. Senator Billa Flint, who was head of the first council of Belleville in 1836, his office being then known as "President". In those times the head of the council was elected from the members of that body and in event of a tie in the council as to president the people were called upon to vote. The Hon. Senator Flint's name is associated with much of early history and many institutions in Belleville. In this connection it may be mentioned that George Benjamin, who was the first clerk of Belleville, started the Intelligencer newspaper.

Abraham Diamond

"Abe Diamond" was a very prominent barrister and solicitor of the town and afterwards became magistrate. The "song" refers to editorials which he wrote. He also indulged in writing poetry, it is said.

Dr. Hope lived on Pinnacle Street, and the residence he occupied is still standing. He was mayor of Belleville at the time of the visit to Canada of His Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, who later became King Edward VII. Dr. Hope later in life became sheriff and his son, George followed him in the sheriff's office.

People of the sixties had time to think on politics, and they made elections warm. They took contest very seriously, this often leading to blunt and very outspoken words.

This "song" which was addressed to the voters recreates something of the spirited atmosphere of those days which seem so far off.

Union Designated Bargaining Agency For Textile Local

Valleyfield, Que., Sept. 21. — (CP)—The bitter industrial dispute between Montreal Cottons Ltd., and the United Textile Workers of America (A.F.L.) appeared to be near its end with the Union designated the legal bargaining agency for employees of the Valleyfield Textile plant.

In government-supervised balloting yesterday, the textile workers association which the international union had dubbed a company-sponsored organization.

In Montreal, G. Blair Gordon, president of Montreal Cottons Ltd., said the vote indicated "a clear majority" for the U.T.W.A. and that as soon as it was officially confirmed by the Quebec Department of Labor the company stood ready "to open negotiations with the successful union within 48 hours in accordance with our promise to the Minister of Labor."

"With the settlement of this dispute the company looks forward to a period of industrial peace in Valleyfield with none of the bitterness, maliciousness and violence which has marred the past few months," Mr. Gordon said.

The textile workers went on strike in June for higher wages, better working conditions and a union contract. The strike dragged on until early September when a provincial government plan calling for the secret ballot was accepted.

Attend the Fair

On Monday Belleville Fair opens for a three-day show and if the weather is anything like it has been this past week it should be a factor in a record attendance. Everything is in readiness and a splendid program has been laid out that should please all comers, both young and old. Conditions in the district have been very good despite the dry season and the exhibits should reach a new high in quality and number.

Secretary Erle Denyes has announced that a good card of harness racing is in prospect, and that in itself is sufficient attraction to draw a large crowd. Any fair would be a poor thing without this feature and it can be depended on the races next week will be exciting enough to satisfy the lovers of this sport. There is also a good number of entries in for the horse show which is expected to be outstanding.

The feature attraction on Monday, of course, will be the Hell Drivers under the leadership of "Lucky" Lott and anyone who has seen this kind of sensational stunts at the Toronto Exhibition before the war can vouch for the remarkable performance these men go through with skill and daring. This is one group of performers who really live up to advance notices and who have to be seen to be believed.

The Conklin Shows midway is a time-tested attraction which has appeared here different times before and they never fail to have a good bill of midway features. The Garden Brothers who put on the grandstand performances are, also, offering a splendid line of acts.

A fair after all is primarily for the display of prize livestock, swine, poultry, grain, vegetables and fruit along with handicraft and many other products of the home and farm. It serves by keen competition improvement in all the above which in turn results in more revenue for the agriculturist and livestock breeders.

In normal times there are always displays of the latest in farm machinery for the modern man is interested in new devices which will quicken his work with less labor. If young people are to stay on farms instead of gravitating to the city then farm work must be made more attractive with less drudgery and fewer hours of labor. Modern machinery can help in this regard and so fall fairs should hold more than the usual interest for the up-to-date farmer.

The directors of the Belleville Fair have spared no time, effort or expense to make this year's edition of the Fair a real event and this deserves the support of all country and city residents. By giving encouragement to this group of enterprising men in large attendance each day our Fair will prove a big asset to the whole district. PLAN NOW TO ATTEND.

National Immunization Week

National Immunization Week will be observed in Canada during the week of September 29th. Again, as in previous years, the Health League of Canada, in co-operation with Department of Health and Education and with the assistance of press, radio and a great variety of voluntary associations will call attention to the urgent necessity of immunizing against those scourges of childhood — diphtheria, whooping cough, scarlet fever and smallpox. It is a tragedy that these diseases, so largely preventable, still exact their toll of death and disability from Canadian children.

The present increase in the number of cases of poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis, has attracted nation-wide attention. The maximum number of cases of this disease in any one year since, and including, 1940 has been 1,881, with 68 deaths in 1941 — the average, 760 cases per year. Over the same period there have been 628 deaths from whooping cough alone in a single year — on an average there have been yearly close to 17,000 cases of whooping cough, nearly 3,000 cases of diphtheria and over 17,000 cases of scarlet fever. Vaccination fortunately has diminished the ravages of smallpox and in numerous years there have been no cases reported.

The above figures, however, should give us something to think about. To prevent the spread of poliomyelitis we have only ordinary public health measures. There is no way of creating an immunity. In the case of the other communicable diseases of childhood named above there are specific means of prevention says Health Magazine. National Immunization Week is designed to call special attention to the urgent need for action by parents. Diphtheria, whooping cough, and scarlet fever could be banished from our country if only parents would see to it that their children are immunized.

Whooping cough vaccine provides protection in more than 80 per cent of those treated and, in cases where the disease occurs even after immunization, the attacks are less severe.

Scarlet fever toxin is scarlet fever's immunizing agent. It has not been perfected as has diphtheria toxoid, but it gives 80 per cent protection.

Physicians and health officers throughout the country are only too glad to co-operate in giving all Canadians needed protection against these diseases. Therefore, it would seem that public apathy or ignorance, or a combination of both, is responsible for the continuing attacks which these preventable diseases are making on the health and lives of Canada's children. This apathy and ignorance must be overcome.

A Drink or a Smoke Won't Hurt Your Heart

It was at a special conference on a section of internal medicine held during the recent meeting of the American Medical Association's convention in San Francisco that Dr. William D. Stroud of Philadelphia, Pa., one of the country's foremost heart specialists and a former president of the American Heart Association advised his colleagues against making invalids out of heart patients.

In the absence of strong reasons to the contrary, let them play golf, and swim, let them smoke or drink in moderation, let them be happy, said the doctor.

Dr. Stroud frowned upon the advice which many physicians give to patients suffering from high blood pressure or any heart disease — the advice to stop drinking. Said Dr. Stroud:

"Personally, I see no reason why patients with those conditions should not drink in moderation. Many patients with angina of effort secure as much relief from brandy or whiskey as they do from nitroglycerine (a standard prescription for certain kinds of heart disease.) I see no reason why they should be deprived of the pleasure of drinking unless there is some evidence that alcohol is injurious."

—Trades and Labor Congress Journal.

A forest fire which has destroyed two million feet of standing timber and has been menacing five million feet of felled and bucked timber, has been raging in the Campbell River area, says Vancouver News-Herald. According to officials of the Elk River Timber Company, the fire was started as a result of smoking on the job in defiance of orders.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What was the Gadsden Purchase?

James Gadsden (1788-1858), whose name the purchase bears, was a grandson of Christopher Gadsden (1724-1805), a South Carolina Revolutionary soldier and statesman who was captured by the British at Charleston and confined as a prisoner for ten months at St. Augustine. James Gadsden soldiered for many years under General Andrew Jackson and it was he who seized the papers that led to the trial and execution of Robert C. Ambister and Alexander Arbuthnot in Florida in 1818, an incident that strained British-American diplomatic relations.

Gadsden was appointed by President Monroe as the commissioner in charge of placing the Seminole Indians on reservations. While living as a planter in Florida he championed nullification and lost the patronage of President Jackson. He had long been interested in promoting railroads and upon his return to South Carolina in 1839 was chosen president of the South Carolina Railroad Company. His pet dream was to knit all Southern railroads into one system and then to connect the system with a southern transcontinental railroad to the Pacific to make the West commercially dependent on the South instead of the North.

After engineers advised Gadsden that the most direct and practicable route for the southern transcontinental railway would be south of the United States boundary, he made plans to have the Federal Government acquire title to the necessary territory from Mexico. Through his friend and fellow empire dreamer, Secretary of War Jefferson Davis, Gadsden was appointed U. S. minister to Mexico with instructions of his own design to buy from Mexico enough territory for a railroad to the Gulf of California.

It was a perfect setup. The territory desired was a sort of no man's land, continually terrorized by Indian raids. The United States wanted to make certain "boundary adjustments;" Mexico needed money and wanted a settlement of her Indian claims against the United States, and Gadsden and his friends wanted a route for their railroad. In 1853 Gadsden agreed to pay Santa Anna $10,000,000 for a strip of territory south of the Gila River and lying in what is now southwestern New Mexico and southern Arizona. The Gadsden Purchase has an area of 45,533 square miles and is almost as large as Pennsylvania. This tract of nearly 30,000,000 acres cost Uncle Sam about 33 cents an acre.

The deal was so unpopular in Mexico that Santa Anna was unseated as dictator and banished. Gadsden was recalled as minister to Mexico for mixing in Mexican politics and domestic affairs and did not live to see the Southern Pacific Railroad build through his purchase. When the inhabitants of Arizona in 1854 asked Congress for a Territorial government in 1854 one of the names suggested for the new Territory was "Gadsonia," a Latin adaptation of the surname of James Gadsden.

50 STITCHES REQUIRED

Springfield, Mas., Sept. 21 — (AP) — It required 50 stitches to close a dozen wounds suffered by Mrs. Waneta J. Slaughter, 37, when she was attacked by a man in an alley near her home early today. Police said that the wounds, apparently caused by a small pocket knife, were not deep and her condition was not serious.

Capital Closeups

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Sept. 21 — (CP) — While Prime Ministerial press conferences may never return to their pre-war frequency, the opinion is widely held here that Mr. King and his fellow members of the parliamentary press gallery will meet more often in future.

When Mr. King accepted honorary membership in the gallery, he apologized for not being able to meet newspapermen as often during the war as he would have liked. But he said he intended to call a press conference whenever he had anything important to announce and he hoped he would be able to hold frequent peace-time conferences.

Meanwhile Mr. King, like everybody else, is probably interested in what President Truman is going to do about future press conferences. The United States president has already made his conferences less frequent than those of his predecessor — Mr. Roosevelt. And his recent press conference advance sanction of Henry Wallace's foreign affairs speech, has caused some speculation that he may further curtail the meetings or restrict them to written questions and answers.

He has claimed that reporters misunderstood this sanction as approval of the message of the speech instead of sanction of the right of Mr. Wallace to give it.

A curb on presidential press relations would be a bigger blow to the United States press than similar action would be in Canada for under the British parliamentary system the cabinet is constantly available for questioning from the floor of the House during parliamentary sessions. Members of the American cabinet are not so available. In Canada, too, newspapermen can and do get members of parliament to ask questions in the House on problems of the day.

Mr. King also made a peace-time rule of holding regular press conferences following important cabinet meetings so that the public could be kept in touch with government action and so he could keep his ear to what the public wanted to know.

Mr. King's last two conferences were a year apart and were packed with news. In August, 1945, he announced a cabinet shuffle and last month he announced a diplomatic shuffle.

Mountie's Mountie: Canada's new second mountie — Deputy Commissioner Royal Gagnon — was appropriately enough born in a police barracks.

His father was Supt. Severe Gagnon, one of the original officers of the old Royal North West Mounted Police, and the superintendent was stationed in Regina 53 years ago when the deputy commissioner was born.

Commissioner Gagnon's grandfather was Hon. Joseph Royal, third Lieutenant-Governor of the North West Territories.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

(Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease, diagnosis or treatment, will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Letters should be brief and writtin in ink. Owing to the large number of letters receivd only a few can be answered here. No reply can be made to queries not conforming to instructions. Address Dr. William Brady, care of this Newspaper.)

PREVENTION OF C R I

Among the diseases I call cri (kree) or, if you prefer, C-R-I, (meaning, of course, Common Respiratory Infection, just as T-B means pulmonary tuberculosis—although it was originally used by doctors to denote tubercle bacilli) is acute anterior poliomyelitis—acute inflammation of front horns or projections of gray matter in the spinal cord, infantile paralysis. This, like several other serious illnesses, may masquerade in the early hours or days as a "cold"—if you are gullible enough to believe there is any such illness or complaint—and, as Boyd states (Preventive Medicine), "the evidence available indicates that the virus enters through the nasal mucosa rather than the gastro-intestinal tract."

A group of physicians who limit their practice more or less to diseases of children agreed that the following suggestions should be given the public in reference to the prevention of poliomyelitis:

1. Avoid extreme fatigue from strenuous exercise.

8. Avoid sudden chilling, such as from a plunge into extremely cold water on a very hot day.

3. Pay careful attention to personal cleanliness, especially washing hands before eating.

4. Avoid tonsil and adenoid operations during epidemics; careful study has shown that the danger of contracting severe forms of poliomyelitis is enhanced by such operations.

(And that ain't the half of it.)

5. Use the purest milk obtainable. Keep flies away from food ....Flies have repeatedly been discovered as carriers of the virus.

(We may suspect flies of carrying poliomyelitis, but nobody has proved it.)

(Incidentally, the purest milk obtainable, in the opinion of Ol' Doc Brady, is Certified Milk, if you can get it. If Certified Milk is not available then my second choice would be Grade A Raw Milk from tuberculin tested herd. If that is not available, then my third choice would be any fresh milk—but scalded, that is, brought to a boil for one minute only—to make any milk perfectly safe for infant, invalid, child or adult. Only as last resort would I take Pasteurized milk)

6. Do not swim in polluted water.

(That is wise whether there is a polio scare on or not.)

7. Maintain community sanitation at a high level at all times.

(Well, that sounds nice—I'm for it, although I don't know what it means.)

8. Avoid all unnecessary contact with any one who has an illness which might possibly be poliomyelitis.

(I, Brady, would advise you to be even more squeamish about that—avoid getting within range of any one who purports to have a "cold.")

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Hemorrhoids

I inclose stamped self addressed envelope. Please send me your pamphlet "It is Stupid to Suffer From Piles." I must be very stupid indeed. (Mrs. F. J. R.)

Answer—That's what I said. Even if the "piles" really are piles stupid people suffer needlessly, take remedies or even blind "treatment" for "piles" when in fact the trouble may or may not be piles. If on proper examination the trouble proves to be piles then it is always amenable to painless treatment. I repeat, it is stupid to worry along suffering from piles.

Heart Tonic

I am taking B complex as a heart tonic, as you suggested, and with fine results. (Mrs. W. G.)

Answer—Anyway it can never do any harm. It is the only real heart tonic I know. I believe any one taking digitalis or other medicines purporting to tone the heart should take B complex along with it, and continue the B complex after the drug is stopped. Particulars in booklet CVD (cardiovascular degeneration—heart and artery failure) mailed on written request if you inclose ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope.

Govt. Sponsors Dominion-wide Housing Contest

Ottawa, Sept. 21. (CP)—Approaching the housing shortage from a new angle, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced a "Canadian small house competition" with prizes totalling $15,000 for winning architects.

The competition, which closes Nov. 26, "seeks to bring to light new low-cost housing ideas for Canadians by providing "the largest cash award ever offered the architectural profession in a Dominion-wide competition", a corporation statement said.

Because of varying climatic conditions, it has been divided into five regions—the Maritime Provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairie Provinces and the West Coast.

In each region there will be a $1,500 first prize, a $700 second prize and five honorable mentions of $100 each. Competitors, who must be Canadian residents and architects, architects' assistants or students at recognized schools of architecture, may submit any number of designs in any region or regions.

The problem is to house "Mr. and Mrs. Canada and their two children, a girl age five and a boy age two". Mr. Canada has "just enough cash to make the down payment on a house costing about $6,000 under the National Housing Act".

With Harold Lawson, Montreal architect, acting as professional advisor, the winners will be chosen by a board of eight Canadian archiects meeting in Ottawa Dec. 12 and 13.

Jap General Dies Violently After Gulping Poison

Tokyo, Sept. 21. (AP)— Lt.-Gen. Tatsumo Kusaba, scheduled to be a leading witness for Russia at the International War Crimes trial, died violently Friday. Russian army officers said Kusaba had gulped poison in the downtown room where they held him under armed guard.

American Intelligence officers said Kusaba arrived yesterday with two other Japanese prisoners the Russians plan to use as key witnesses against former Premier Tojo and 26 other warmakers.

A Russian spokesman said Kusaba insisted on wearing the uniform in which he was captured last Summer in Manchuria. He said the poison presumably was secreted in the uniform.

At dinner last night with the other two Japanese prisoners and several Russian officers, Kusaba drank several glasses of wine. He ate a hearty meal, then retired, explaining "I would like to be alone."

"There is unmistakable evidence he took his own life," the prosecution reported officially. "In his notebook he mentioned certain failures in the performance of his military duties in Manchuria as the reason for his suicide."

United States investigators said they culled this phrase from Kusaba's notes: "Give up for lost and forced to commit suicide". There was no explanation.

Because Russian officers refused to talk, it was hours before even Americans in the Allied prosecution section could get details on even Kusaba's arrival or his military record.

Kusaba was commander of the Kwantung defence army from November, 1941, to February, 1944, then was attached to the general staff in Tokyo.

Western Province Pushes Its Plan for Hospital Aid

By NORMAN ALTSTEDTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Regina, Sept. 21. (CP)— The drive is on to acquaint Saskatchewan citizens with the benefits and terms of Canada's first province-wide "free" hospitalization scheme which does not go into effect until Jan. 1, 1947, but is already the subject of a controversy.

In effect, the plan calls for compulsory co-operation of the province's 840,000 inhabitants in the matter of basic hospital care.

Today, enumerators for civic elections are also registering every man, woman and child under the plan. In October registration will be general and by Jan. 1, every resident must pay $5 to the provincial government. Top payment for one family is $30.

Benefits of the plan include public ward accommodation, meals and special diets; ward nursing care; operating room service; surgical dressings; necessary drugs and medicines; laboratory service; physiotherapy; and hospital maternity care.

Financing of the scheme—third phase of an over-all health services plan—is explained by the Health Services Planning Commission. The commission discovered that the average hospital bill for the 105,318 patients in Saskatchewan last year was $45.48. Dividing the total hospital bill by the number of people in the province, the commission bills were divided evenly among the population.

To the $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 the government hopes to collect in $5 taxes, will be added about $1,500,000 from general provincial revenues.

The $55 fee is in part the result of the breakdown of Dominion-provincial tax agreements. The federal government originally indicated it would pay 60 per cent of the cost of a provincial health scheme but when the conference broke down the aid was withdrawn. Federal government aid under those terms would bring the tax down to $2 a person. Saskatchewan has the plan geared to be amalgamated with any Dominion program.

Acommadation Problem.

Although all the province's 454 medical practitioners would like their patients to receive all the hospital care necessary, hospital administrators fear an overloading of wards, already strained by record number of patients.

With the high wages and good crops of the war years, more people are seeking hospital care. Administrators say even more will demand hospital care under the new scheme, overflowing the 4,039 available beds in provincial hospitals. New hospitals planned however, are expected to bring the total available beds to 5.188 or 6.1 beds a 1,000 population. The latter figure regarded as a good average.

Another group who would feel the pressure of hospital 'flooding' are Saskatchewan's estimated 1,500 registered nurses. But there are 969 nurses in training in the province—more than ever before—to staff 81 hospital and 10 Red Cross outposts.

The proposed hospital care program is only part of the health plan for the province. Other phases already in effect include; free care for tuberculosis, cancer, mental and venereal disease cases and for recipients of old age and blind pensions and their dependents, mothers' allowances and indigents and their dependents. The completed plan aims to give all health services including diagnostic and dental treatment as well as care outside of hospitals.

For administrative purposes, the province was divided into 14 'health regions". Two of these areas — Estevan-Weyburn and Swift Current—instituted part of the health program last year following a local vote. The taxes they now pay for services will be dropped with the institution of the province-wide scheme.

C. N. R. REVENUE SHOWS BIG DECLINE

Montreal, Sept. 21 —(CP)— Canadian National Railways system today reported net revenue in August at $2,741,000 compared with $8,112,000 in the corresponding month in 1945, a decrease of $5,371,000.

Game Association Protests Open Partridge Season

Peterboro, Sept. 20 — (CP) — Contending that the partridge hatch this year and in 1945 was extremely low, members of the Peterboro Fish and Game Association are protesting an open season on partridge in Peterboro county this year.

A telegram of protest was sent today to Prof. J. Harkness, head of the fish and wild life division of the Department of Lands and Forests. The department has decreed that an open season be held from Oct. 4 to 15 with a season bag of five per day or 20 for the season.

DID YOU EVER WALK UP 20 FLOORS?

● Any time you have walked up even three or four floors you have probably grumbled at the lack of elevator service. But have you realized just how impossible a modern city would be without vertical transportation . . . or how impractical and costly elevators would be without electric power? Elevator service is just one example of countless taken-for-granted ways in which electricity serves in daily life.

The home washer, electric range, refrigerator, and vacuum cleaner all take a lot of muscle-testing toil out of maintaining a home. Imagine one cent running a washing machine or a vacuum cleaner for a couple of hours, or giving refrigeration for a whole day! But that is what one cent's worth of electricity can do at average Ontario rates.

On a farm, any time you see men pitching hay into a loft you can figure that the job is worth approximately 1c per ton. Anyway, that is about what it would cost for electricity to do the same work at average Ontario rural rates. More and more farmers are learning that electricity is the cheapest labor they can hire. And your Hydro is doing everything possible to extend rural services as rapidly as the supply of materials will permit.

Whether you live in town or country, whether you work in skyscraper or barn, Hydro works for you in Ontario at a cost much lower than obtainable in most other parts of the world. Make the best use of it.

No. 6, Belleville, became the bride of Douglas Stewart McLean, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. McLean of Lindsay, with Rev. Fred Payne, a friend of the bride's family, performing the ceremony. Mr. Kaye Martin presided at the organ.

CLARK—CLARKE

The Church ot St. Thomas, decorated with white gladioli, asters and baby's breath, was the scene of a very beautiful wedding on September 19, the anniversary of her parents' wedding, when Margaret Grace Clarke, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. M. J. Clarke, became the bride of William Donald Clark, son of Mrs. W. E. Clark.

The ceremony was performed by Reverend Arthur Smith and the wedding music was played by Professor Ernest Wheatley. During the signing of the register, "O Love Divine", was sung by Miss Barbara Joan Houston and Mr. Gordon Bankier.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was radiant in a gown of ivory crepe back satin, fashioned with a shirred bodice having leg o' mutton sleeves edged in handmade lace and ending in points over the wrists, and a full bustle back skirt with train. Her full length veil fell in a mist of sheer silk tulle and her only ornament were a pendant and ear-rings worn by her mother on her wedding day. She carried a cascade bouquet of pink roses, swansea and freesias.

Mrs. Harold Kellar in American Beauty velvet was her sister's matron of honor and her bridesmaids were Mrs. Donald Manchester and Miss Barbara Clark, sister of the groom, both in turquoise blue velvet. Their gowns were fashioned alike with draped front, modified bustle and train, and all wore matching full blown rose doll hats and mitts. The matron of honor carried a cascade bouquet of orchids and gladioli in coral and American Beauty shades and the bridesmaids' bouquets were of orchids and gladioli in shades of pale mauve and purple.

Dr. A.W.G. Ewing and Mrs. Ewing Given Reception at the O.S.D. On Completion of Their Visit

There is situated on the western outskirts of Belleville one of the most worthwhile branches of the Ontario system of education known far and wide as the O.S.D.,—namely, The Ontario School for the Deaf.

To the staff and friends of this provincial school has been given this week an unprecedented opportunity—the visit of Alex. W. G. Ewing, M.A., Ph.D., and his very talented wife, Irene R. Ewing, O.B.E., M.Sc., educators from the University of Manchester, England.

Delivered Lectures

During the forenoon and early afternoon of Friday, Dr. and Mrs. Ewing delivered lectures to the teachers and supervisors of the children of the O.S.D., on several phases of Residual Hearing in relation to the education of a deaf child. In England very young infants are referred by their physicians to Dr. Ewing for "oral" examination and many of these who might otherwise be classed as "deaf and dumb" are being enabled to enter life speaking normally.

In Belleville with her husband on the invitation of the Ontario Department of Education is Mrs. Ewing, who, in Manchester University has the important task of contacting the mothers of children found by the clinic to lack hearing, and to aid these mothers in training their tiny tots until they are three years of age, when they enter a nursery school for deaf children.

Evolves Testing System

Through a testing system evolved by Dr. Ewing the degree of deafness in a child is revealed and the mother is then instructed upon the distance she should be from her child when speaking, and how loudly her voice should be pitched so that the child may hear, and in hearing learn to speak as normally as do other infants.

Reminding parents that the detection of deafness at an early age is immensely important, and should not be neglected, Mrs. Ewing points out that it gives these handicapped children an opportunity to learn how best to manager their lives without the aid of hearing, "although", she says, "lack of hearing is something for which there is no compensation."

Reception Held

At the close of the final lecture, about four o'clock, p.m., those attending, and several other folk interested in the children of the O.S.D., were given the rare privilege of meeting these two outstanding educators at a reception arranged in their honor by Mrs. Quinn, the very efficient matron of the school and Mrs. W. J. Morrison, wife of the superintendent.

Guests entering the main building remarked on the outside beauty of the edifice with its ivy-covered walls; the flower-bordered walks and the large well-arranged flower bed, directly across the driveway from the front entrance.

Mounting the wide marble stairway to the spacious hall above, an air of gracious hospitality was everywhere prevalent in the beauty of the many colored Autumn flowers and the more delicate tints of gladioli displayed in every nook and corner.

Guests Received

Guests were received in the teachers' living-room by Miss Hegle, social convener for the school; while in the library, with its glass-doored book-cases and beautiful paintings by artists Allen and Donna Cameron, displayed to advantage against the soft toned ivory of the walls, tea was poured by Misses M. I. Cass and E. Nurse. The long oak refectory table, covered with an ivory colored linen cloth of almost silken texture, was more than usually attractive, centred with a silver basket holding gladioli in pastel shades, flanked by tall rose-pink tapers in silver holders.

Assisting in the tea-room and serving the visitors everywhere were Misses C. Ford, H. Evans, G. Dillon, B. O'Connor, K. B. Daly, L. J. Burnside, E. Leverance and B. Hanley.

Speaks Well of Canada

Being introduced to the guests of honor during the tea hour the "Ontario Intelligencer" had the privilege of an interview and found both Dr. and Mrs. Ewing gracious and entertaining. Asked what her impressions of Canada were, Mrs. Ewing said, "I have often heard of the beauties of Canada, but nothing I have ever heard does justice to this wonderful country. Niagara Falls is beyond description, the wonderful texture of that huge mass of water tumbling over its high precipice into the vast gorge beneath; the swiftness of the broad river below the Falls, with the bright sunshine upon it—its power and majesty, was the most inspiring sight of our lives. And the blue water of Georian Bay was the bluest we have ever seen, while the islands scattered about "Go Home Bay" were a sight quite unique in our experience.

"A voyage up the Great Lakes to Port Arthur was one long panorama of loveliness; and above all your great, wide, open spaces stretching farther than eye can reach, with gorgeous trees everywhere. All these beauties have made our visit to Canada one never to be forgotten. And we think your people match the country in their breadth of vision and outlook, in the extent of their hospitality and the largenes of their generosity.

Helped By Canadians

"All through the war the British people have been tremendously helped by Canadians. It seems to us you have refrained from criticism, even when we in England may have deserved it, and you have concentrated on helping us in every possible way. Canada made our war her war, and Britishers shall never forget it.

"Visiting schools for the deaf in Ontario, we have been both inspired and delighted by what we have seen of the children and their teachers. For four months we visited schools for the deaf in the U.S.A., lecturing to interested groups, but nowhere have we seen a better or more beautiful campus and buildings than here at Belleville. We have spent three delightful days in this city and we have been deeply impressed by the happiness of the children in this school, by the graciousness and charm of the teachers, by the wisdom, kindness and far-sightedness of Mr. Morrison, the superintendent.

Hope to Come Back

"We hope to come back again some day and to be able to stay longer," and, turning to her husband she asked, "Is it not so?" Dr. Ewing replied—"Indeed yes, I heartily concur with all Mrs. Ewing has said. You know we have lived in the school here. We have seen the children at work, and at play on the campus; we've been with them for meals, yet from beginning to end we have never seen one pupil's face which has not shone with happiness and good health".

Dr. and Mrs. Ewing have visited since last April and lectured in schools and clinics of the United States on the educational treatment of deafness and are now enroute to the Atlantic seaboard where they will embark for the return voyage to their native English shores.

Christ Church Junior A.Y.P.A. Holds Dance

The Christ Church branch of the Junior A.Y.P.A. held its opening party last Wednesday in the parish hall which was nicely decorated with streamers of school colors. Included with the evening's program, as arranged by Lorraine Gladwell and her committee, was a fifteen minute scavenger hunt in which teams were chosen, to produce excellent competition.

Each team received a slip of paper on which was written a letter of the alphabet. In fifteen minutes the teams had to obtain all the articles they could find beginning with their assigned letter. Assorted articles of all sizes and shapes, ranging from stray cats to watermelon, appeared, twenty-five of which belonged to the winning team.

When the excitement of the scavenger hunt passed the members turned to dancing, which included several novelty dances, until refreshments were served. There was something rather striking about the refreshments. While everyone was enjoying the sandwiches, cake, and coffee provided by the members, several other members and their friends were enjoying with these a nice ripe watermelon, provided of course by the scavenger hunt.

V.O.N. News

Keen interest is being shown by mothers in the plans for toxoid clinic which have been completed by the Victorian Order of Nurses under the direction of the Medical Officer of Health, Dr. G. S. Cronk. The first clinic will be held in the Kiwanis Community Centre on Sept. 26, at four o'clock and is for all children under school age. Dr. Cronk will be in charge.

With today's mothers following modern trends in health development the importance of seeing that their children are immunized against the most dread diseases is fully realized. For this reason the number of those who are planning to bring their children to the toxoid clinic is gratifyingly large.

Also beginning on the same date is the dental clinics. The first will be held on September 26th., at three p.m. Dr. Jack Marshall will be in charge of this clinic for pre-school age children.

Grandmothers Honored By Members of League

Marmora. — The September meeting of the Catholic Women's League held in Sacred Heart School on Wednesday evening, was largely attended. The meetin took the form of "Grandmothers' Night" and thirteen grand mothers were present.

The President, Mrs. J. Black, welcomed the members after the Summer recess, and especially welcomed the grandmotthers present. The roll call showed 94 paid members, which the president hoped would reach 100 before the next meeting.

It was decided that the League would supply the flowers for the decoration of the altar for the Forty Hours Devotions, which begins on Sunday next.

Hold Banquet For Veterans

The president asked the co-operation of the members for the banquet to be held by the Community for returned war veterans. Mrs. C. Crawford gave a report on the joint meeting of the Legion and local societies held on Tuesday evening.

At the request of the President,, Rev. H. J. Farrell gave a brief synopsis of the picture "The Eternal Gift", a religious picture, which is to be shown in the Town Hall soon and sponsored by the League. The conveners of the different groups were asked to be responsible for the selling of the tickets.

A letter was read from the convener of the League Magazine, expressing thanks for five subscriptions sent in by Mrs. T. J. Reid and a letter of thanks was read from the Sisters of Service for literature sent to families in the West. Other correspondence was held over until the October meeting.

Appointed Delegate

It was decided that the President, Mrs. Black, be appointed delegate to the Diocesan Convention to be held in Picton in the first week of October. Mrs. E. D. O'Connor was named alternate.

The Treasurer's report was then given by Mrs. C. Crawford, showing a substantial balance on hand over $300 having been handed in by the several groups during the Summer months.

It was decided that the members would again sell tickets on a pair of wool blankets, to be drawn for at the coming bazaar in November.

Rev. Father Farrell then addressed the meeting. Referring to the Forty Hours Devotions he urged the members to pray for an enduring peace. eH congratulated them on their success in their Summer activities and wished them success in the coming months. To Kenneth Sheridan was presented the scholarship prize for obtaining the highest marks in the parish in the Entrance examinations. The presentation was made by Rev. H. J. Farrell, and Kenneth expressed his appreciation and thanks.

A draw was then held for a centrepiece donated by Mrs. Black and Mrs. C. V. Wallace was the holder of the lucky ticket.

Mrs. Black, Mrs. H. Auger, and Mrs. C. Brady read poems paying tribute to the grandmothers.

Mrs. Black then gave a reading entitled "When Grandma Was a Girl".

Gifts were presented to the grandmothers as follows:

Oldest grandmother—Mrs. H. Auger; Newest grandmother, Mrs. H. Auger; Youngest grandmother—Mrs. F. Johnston. One with the most grandchildren—Mrs. E. D. O'Connor.

A contest was then held to guess the amount of money under the patches sewn on to an apron which had travelled around among the members for the past few month. The prize was won by Mrs. Richard Maloney, who guessed $30.

Lunch Served

Mrs. Dan Shannon entertained the members with a pianoforte solo after which a delicious lunch was served by the committee in charge.

A surprise was then accorded the President, Mrs. Black, when the Past President, Mrs. E. D. O'Connor, called the members to order and presented Mrs. Black with a set of silver salt and pepper shakers, it being the occasion of her 25th wedding anniversary. An address was read by Mrs. C. Brady.

A bouquet of gladioli was then presented to Mrs. M. Clement of Detroit, a guest grandmother, who was also the oldest grandmother present.

Pair Split First Two Falls and Battle Savagely Till End of Time Limit

Karl "Krippler" Davis wore a grim smile of satisfaction when Referee Cliff Fox raised his arm in token of victory over Toar Morgan in their grudge main bout at the Hume Arena Friday night. The pair had split the first two falls, the third went the required time limit and the referee awarded the bout to Davis while the faithful shrieked its disapproval.

The main event was a Battle of the Tapes. "Adhesive milling" as one fan put it. Davis appeared with his left hand taped and Morgan strenuously objected. In fact he refused to start the bout at first but finally went in and took some terrific taking before he appeared in the ring in the second fall with his own hand taped.

Fox had the tape removed after the marine had dusted the Davis eyes gently but firmly with the added weapon — and later forced Davis to remove the sticky but effective stuff from his wrist.

Little Love Lost

There was little love lost between the pair and Davis used all the unorthodox tricks in his war-bag in the first fall to inflict some severe punishment on Morgan. He used his head as a battering ram; and applied his devastating cobra hold on numerous occasions to subdue the enemy. The first fall was clearly Davis' although the Toar came back at intervals to deal out some savage elbow smashes to the Davis jaw.

Davis had the marine in a bad way after twenty-two minutes of rough-and-tumble wrestling in the first fall and the referee awarded the fall to the Texan after Morgan was apparently out on the canvas.

Morgan however, came back strongly in the second fall and handed some stiff punishment to the Krippler. He again objected to the tape on Davis' wrist and caused roars of laughter as he refused to enter the ring. The referee counted up to nine and Morgan would hop back into the squared circle; then as quickly jump out again. He did this three or four times while an excited fandom howled its approval.

Gained Upper Hand

Morgan after taking some severe punishment finally gained the upper hand and smashed and slapped the Krippler all over the ring after nine minutes of the second fall. He chopped and slapped, then slapped and chopped, throwing in some still punches for good measure. He finally floored the Krippler and fell on him for the count.

But the third fall was practically all Davis. He secured a punishing armlock on the marine and played for it throughout the fall. He treated the marine to several cobra holds but in the main devoted all his attention and tactics to the Morgan left arm. He kicked and he pummelled it; twisted and punched it until it hung at the Morgan side like a limp rag. Came the timer's gong and the referee awarded the fall and bout to Davis. The crowd milled angrily around the ring and it looked for a minute or so as if the referee was in for a rousing reception. But nothing untoward happened and the crowd gradually disappeared.

A Fast Bout

Lee Henning and popular Pat Flanagan staged one of the best bouts seen here in some time. Flanagan, who spotted the foe twenty-five pounds tore into the Iowan from the start and flung him willy-nilly all over and out of the ring. It was fast aggressive action with plenty of footwork, flying tackles and drop-kicks.

Henning had his two-finger gouge working to perfection and had the agile Flanagan in a bad way at times. But the popular Pat's speedy footwork and clean offensive tactics had the crowd in an uproar. Henning, however, finally subdued him with a body smash.

Frankie Taylor, Hollywood, won a referee's decision over Ben Sharpe, Hamilton in the preliminary that went the limit. The bout was slow and sometimes draggy.

Ralph McCabe, former baseball star of this city who has been recalled from Oklahoma City by the Cleveland Indians who purchased him outright last Spring. Mac saw service with the Baltimore Orioles and later with Oklahoma City in the Texas League where he won ten and lost six. McCabe hurled his first game for Cleveland against Washington the other day but was taken out after four innings.

Bill Stukus' Accurate Passing and Line Weakness of Beach Accounts for Big Score

Toronto, Sept. 21 — (CP)—The strong front line that Toronto Balmy Beach accumulated to wage its 1946 grid battle, fell apart last night before the charging Indians, as their traditional rivals pasted Beaches 14-1 before some 6,000 fans under the floodlights.

Jumping to a commanding 12-1 lead in the first half of the game as a result of Bill Stukus' accurate passing, Brian Timmis' team reversed to defensive play and held the rallying Beaches scoreless in the last half while they added two singles themselves.

The Beach effort was almost one-man, that man being quarterback Bob Cunningham. But Cunningham's attempts were invalidated by the line weakness and the young Port Credit lad was smeared time and again while doing more than his best.

Stukus, always a sharp thinker on the grid, picked his passes with cunning last night and the Indians' aerial attacks were good seven times in 17 tries for 143 yards and two majors. His first touchdown toss was to Dick Harrison from the 31-yard line with Harrison racing half-dozen more to score. In the second stanza Stukus picked out Jack Gray's hands as the youngster was standing on the goal-line.

Without the services of their star kicker of last season, Fred Kijek, Indians again relied on the booting of Jim Cumming who accounted for a single in the last stanza. Annis Stukus kicked the other single in that quarter.

SUMMARY

First quarter—
1. Indians—Touchdown (Harrison)
2. Indians—Concert (McKelvey)

Second quarter—
3. Beaches—Single (Lake)
4. Indians—Touchdown (Gray)
5. Indians—Convert (Durno)

Third quarter—
No scoring

Fourth quarter—
6. Indians—Single (Stukus)
7. Indians—Single (Smythe rouged on Cumming's kick).

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

Ralph McCabe, who has been recalled from Oklahoma City of the Texas League where he won ten games this season, by the Cleveland Indians was not given a very good reception on his first mound appearance against the Washington Senators. Mac lasted four innings and the Nat sluggers touched him for three homers, a double and a single. Besides this he walked two batters and hit another. He was followed by Joe Krakauskas who was tagged for another homer and Charlie Gassaway.

Ole Marse Joe McCarthy, who gave failing health as his reason for chucking the job of managing the New York Yankees back there when the Summer was young, now says he's feeling chipper again and he'd be pleased to receive bids for his managerial services next year. "Nobody's askin' me" cracks Waldo the wizard copy boy, "but, if somebody should, I guess I'd have to say that Mr. McCarthy had nothin' more than McPhailin' health."

The thud of leather on leather will be heard in the vicinity of Bridge and Bleecker streets over the weekend when some of the bigger lads who have a yen for punting the pigskin are going out to get themselves a little practice. 'Tis reported by our scouts that Eddie Schrieder, Vern Goyer, George Haggis, Jerry Sharpe, Forrester, and others of international calibre are endeavoring to get some sort of a team together so they can toss exhibition challenges up around Oshawa, Peterboro and Cobourg way. But that's still in its infancy. The grapevine reports there is good intermediate football ivory in this man's town and all that is needed is a sponsor and some honest-to-goodness equipment. Any offers?

While it is not known at time of going to press today who will do the hurling for the Kiwanis juniors in Kingston this afternoon, Bobby Bunton told us yesterday that his army was in good condition, and that he hoped to get the starting mound assignment. Coach St. Louis was mum on the matter and the choice will not likely be made until game time. Bunton had some special vibratory treatment given his arm thanks to big-hearted Timmy Sullivan, he of the Front St. tonsorial emporium, which shouldn't do the flipper any harm.

Just about now the Goodman softball juniors are bowling right merrily along the highway headed for Toronto where they meet the Queen City junior champions at 5:30 this evening. The joust is slated for Acorn Park, corner of College and Shaw streets with the return date still in abeyance. The kids left shortly after noon and may get in a part of the Argos-Ottawa Roughriders pigskin rodeo.

Comes a note from a new acquaintance down Hull way thanking the management of the Belleville Kiwanis baseball club for the fine after-game treatment of the Wrightville juniors. "We appreciated the fine gesture in treating our boys to sandwiches, cake and other refreshments after the game. While we didn't relish that fourteenth innings treatment, we are grateful for the nice reception."

• • •

Manager Jack McVeigh not only filled the visiting baseballers with sandwiches and stuff but placed a generous basket of food and a case of soft drinks in the Ottawa bus for consumption during the long safari Hullwards. The gesture was made in appreciation of the fine treatment accorded the Kiwanis team in Hull after last Saturday's game. The boys were given sandwiches and coffee—and that helped offset the 36 cents you pay for cigarettes in the province of Alphonse and Gaston.

So there ain't no Santa Claus? Ask Mrs. Helen McMahon of Cambridge, Mass., and she'll tell you that there is.

Although she never saw a professional baseball game and never had any desire to do so, one of the first two applications for World's Series tickets honored simultaneously by the Red Sox, September 10, went to Mrs. McMahon who had even applied for them. She didn't know who put in the application and paid for the tickets in her name.

However, Mrs. McMahon, with her husband, George, former Army second lieutenant bombardier in the Pacific, plans to see her first game, with thanks to an unknown Santa Claus.

Club officials were deluged by applications for World's Series tickets. As a result, the following instructions were issued: "Reject all applications coming from outside New England."

• • •

Although sometimes called the "All-American Out" as a player, scrappy Leo Durocher participated in two World's Series and two All-Star games while an active performer.

As a member of the 1928 Yankees, Durocher finished each of the four games of the World's Series at second base in the New Yorkers' sweep over the Cardinals. Tony Lazzeri, the Yankees' regular second sacker, was bothered with a sore arm in the Series and could scarcely get the ball to first base. So, after the Bombers took big leads, Manager Miller Huggins sent Lippy into the game in the closing innings. He appeared at bat only twice, without a hit. However, he caught hold of a Grover Alexander pitch at St. Louis and drove an apparent homer toward the right field stands, only to see a last-minute gust of wind cause the ball to drop into the hands of George Harper, backed against the stands.

Playing shortstop for the 1934 Gas House Cardinals against the Tigers, Durocher collected only two hits in 18 times at bat in the first five games. However, with Detroit needing the sixth game to bag the series. The Lip broke out with a double and two singles, all vitally important as Paul Dean defeated Schoolboy Rowe, 4 to 3. Leo contributed a triple and single to the 11 to 0 rout of the Tigers in the seventh game and closed with a batting average of .259.

He played in the 1936 All-Star game as a Cardinal and in the 1938 event as a Dodger, compiling a .333 batting mark for his appearances in the midsummer classic.

Three-Game Post-Season Playoff if Cards and Brooks Tied at End of Schedule

Dodgers Gain Half-Game When They Defeated Reds by a 5-3 Score

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

What was mere conjecture a week ago has taken on aspects of probability as National League president Ford Frick announced today in the event that Brooklyn Dodgers and St. Louis Cardinals finish the regular season in a tie for first place, there will be a three-game post season play-off between the two contenders.

Naturally such a situation would involve the setting back of the world series, perhaps a full week, probably back to Oct. 9.

Hanging on for dear life, the battling Brooks today were only one length behind the Cards. Following yesterday's playoff of the recent Dodgers-Reds 19 inning scoreless tie, each has only eight games left and each has five more at home.

Brooklyn came from behind to defeat the Reds 5-3 yesterday. Trailing 2-0 in the last half of the fifth, the Brooks garnered their first run off Jonny Vander Meer in 29 straight innings on Joe Medwick's run-producing poke, and then Dixie Walker came through with a three-run homer to climax a four-run inning.

The Reds kept pecking away, sending Hank Behrman, who had relieved starter Art Herring in the fifth, to the showers in the eighth when they filled the bases. Hugh Casey came on to end the threat and after giving up a run in the ninth, fanned Ray Meuller for the final out to leave the potential tying runs on the base-paths.

Detroit Tigers took advantage of Cleveland's use of almost an entire rookie squad to scalp the Indians 15-1. Third baseman George Kell paced the Tiger barrage with six hits in seven trips to the plate to tie an American League record held by numerous players. Wilbert (Uncle Robbie) Robinson set the Major League mark of seven in the '90's.

NEARLY ALL BILLS RECOVERED

Madisonville, Tenn., Sept. 21 — (AP) — Some 50 school boys and girls had joined hangers-on to watch the Louisville and Nashville Railroad streamliner speed by when, as one spectator described it, "Everyone went crazy and started running after the train." Hundreds of $20 bills fluttered from the train, blowing along the track and clinging to bushes. The money, postal inspector R. C. Hornsby said today, was being sent from a Chattanooga bank to a Madisonville bank yesterday. The inspector said 70 per cent of the bills were recovered.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By GEORGE RONALD
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 21 — (CP) — Seven thousand fans who saw Joey Bagnato edge Li'l Arthur King in a featherweight eight-rounder here the other night may have witnessed more than just another good boxing match.

Everybody agreed it was a sorely-needed top-notcher for the wavering Toronto fight game. But most students of the ring are going a step further — they see it as the possible start of a "new era" in the city's boxing.

Tommy (Globe and Mail) Munns heralded the scrap as "exactly the right tonic for what had been until then an ailing fight game in Toronto."

The question now is what sort of tussle the promoters will present as a follow-up to the Bagnato-King crowd-pleaser.

Dumb Ducks?

Some of the Kawartha Lakes nimrods have swallowed their pride to admit they need help—from the deceased cousins of the birds lined up in the gunsights. Dead ducks as decoys are the answer. Hunters who used the new wrinkle this week said it's far superior to the accepted wooden "stool."

The carcass is mounted on a 10 x 16-inch board. At one end the legs are pushed through two small holes and a wire is used to hold the head in a natural position.

The duck looks perfectly normal — and the bag is bigger, hunters claim.

Duck-hunters' skeptical wives have a supporter in the Timmins Daily Press. Hinting at "inaccuracies" in the tales of the "deadly demons with the deadly aim," the newspaper suggests editorially this survey of the nimrods' yarns:

"Check each one; find out what their total bag was and how many they saw; knock off 50 per cent as straight prevarication; figure 25 per cent were shot before they started to fly; half of those remaining were lucky shots; the remainder can be divided into conquests that were legitimate and those that were accidental; perhaps some of the victims were either ill, feeling tired and loggy that day, or even suffering an attack of acute indigestion from bolting a decoy."

How many, again, please?

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

This is not the forecast primeval. We are turning back to the bridge lessons for beginners. Not for long. Not for much. Only for a quickie look at the elementary needs of a beginner.

You may have come in late after this kolm got started. If so, you will enjoy the basic training as much as I do in bringing it to you. And it is good for what ails your bridge game.

If you are one of my early customers, the review will please you. The innocent-looking important links may have slipped from your mind. It is a joy to fill in these gaps for you.

If you are a know-it-all expert, wipe that smirk off your puss. There are a few primary items that could improve you, too. Many an expert gets tussle-bound by never looking at the ground.

Four players are in a bridge game. They sit south, west, north, east. The two players opposite each other are partners. South and north are partners; west and east are partners.

The 52 cards in a pack are shuffled and cut and dealt. Each of the players picks up and sorts his 13 cards. By words known as bids, each player tries to tell his partner what his hand contains.

What is the first aim of partners? To tell each other how many tricks they can take together and what they both like for trumps, if any. They do so by means of the bidding words.

The entire bidding vocabulary is made up of only 15 words. No more, no less. The 155 words are: One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, clubs, diamonds, hearts, spades, no-trump, pass, double, redouble.

Suppose you and your partner hold this pair of hands:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠ A Q 9 6	♠ K 8 5 3
♥ A Q 6	♥ K 9 4 2
♦ K 7 3	♦ A 8 6
♣ 9 6 2	♣ Q 5

South tries to tell north that he has five tricks and would like spades as trumps. North tries to tell south that he has five tricks and agrees that spades should be trumps. Tell it to beem.

By BOB THOMAS

Real reason for the "Forever Amber" fiasco was not Peggy Cummins' performance (which was commended by the rest of the cast), but fear of censors. The first eight weeks shooting contained no sex, no humor, no adventure, so it was called off. The new scrip will make a less timid attempt at sex.

When Joan Fontaine finished "Emperor Waltz", she'll weekend in Bermuda, then return to Warners. She'll do "Voice of the Turtle" or "Victoria Grandiolet", whichever is ready first.

Clark Gable won't be working until December, if then. He'll probably enact "Return of Ulysses", a modern doctor story, not "The Hucksters".

Pals Henry Fonda and James Stewart are serious about doing a play together. They're accepting no commitments after Hank's "A Time to Kill" and Jimmie's "The Magic City".

Orson Welles' Columbia picture will be called "Lady From Shanghai". Rita Hayworth may be in it, if the studio likes the part.

Purely Personal. . . finishing "Trial Town", Anne Jeffries will sing "La Tosca" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Maureen O'Hara and Will Price plan to leave for Erie October 23, taking their young child. . . . .Nan Sunderland, Mrs. Walter Huston, comes out of retirement for a role in "Unconquered" . . . . Bob Hutton's divorce becomes final this week.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

University of Western Ontario Mustangs travelled from London to Buffalo, N.Y., to absorb a 34-3 trimming from Canisius College last night to open their respective 1946 college gridiron campaigns. The duration champions of the Canadian Intercollegiate Rugby Football Union failed to hold their own against the power-packed Buffalo squad coached by Earl Brown, formerly of Dartmouth.

The international exhibition match was played at Buffalo Civic Stadium before an attendance of 10,119 fans.

Formal announcement is expected today of the appointment of Herold D. Ruel as manager of the St. Louis Browns at an annual salary with a reported minimum of $20,000. Ruel, former Chicago catcher, has been assistant to Commissioner A. B. Chandler.

The Batavia, N.Y., Clippers last night re-possessed the Governor's Cup, which they had captured a year ago, by defeating Jamestown Falcons, this season's pennant winners, 11-4, at Buffalo in the final of the playoffs of the Pony Baseball League.

Pittsburgh Steels handed Chicago Cardinals a 14-7 setback in the U. S. National Pro Football League last night and New York Giants defeated Green Bay Packers, 35-21. Conference, New York Yankees and Chicago Rockets played a 17-all tie.

Chris Spencer, four-year-old son of Spencer, proved an easy two-heat winner over Spencer Jane in the $2,500 2:11 Bar Trot yesterday on the closing day card of Grand Circuit racing at the Delaware, O., Fair. His best time was 2:06¾.

AT THE BELLE — Claudette Colbert happily dresses for a party as her second husband, George Brent, watches her every move adoringly in "Tomorrow is Forever," one of the strangest romances ever to come to the screen. Complications ensue when Orson Welles, as her first husband, believed to be dead, returns under an assumed name.

AT THE CAPITOL — Two on the run — Veronica Lake is forced into a flight at gunpoint by Alan Ladd, who flees police seeking him for murder, in the exciting Paramount thriller, "This Gun for Hire," which comes next to the Capitol Theatre for a return engagement. Robert Preston is co-starred, with Veronica Lake. Featured is Laird Cregar. On the same program the comedy scream "Nothing But the Truth," starring Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard.

OTTAWA SQUAD CONFIDENT THEY CAN BEAT ARGOS

Rough Riders Hold Point Lead Over Toronto Team for Lead of Loop

(By The Canadian Press)

Mr. Golab and a number of other gentlemen arrived in Toronto late last night from Ottawa, and as this quiet company strode purposefully along, no one would have guessed that here was a crew ready at least to manhandle Toronto Argonauts, Canadian rugby champions of 1945.

But the visitors were confident and they were determined; whether they'd accomplish their purpose was something else again.

Their game was the highlight of the day's senior rugby card. Ottawa holds a one point advantage over Argos in the Eastern Provincial Union, and their fixture at Oakwood Stadium in Toronto's north-east section this afternoon should go a long way towards deciding the group's contender for the Canadian title later on.

While all this is going on at Toronto, the Montreal Alouettes will be playing the Hamilton Tigers at Hamilton. The winless Tiger's haven't shown much but enthusiasm, but the Hamilton Civic Stadium will be jammed with people who want to see for themselves.

The eastern schedule also has two games in the senior Ontario rugby union—Sarnia Imperials at Ottawa Trojans, and Hamilton Wildcats at Windsor Rockets. The Imperials, carrying a famous name back into senior rugby after several years' absence, were favorites over the Trojans at Ottawa but the Hamilton-Windsor game was a toss-up.

The O. R. F. U. loop actually started its weekend warfare last night at Toronto, where the fast and powerful Toronto Indians walloped the Balmy Beach Club by 14-1. The game gave the Indians undisputed lead in the six team circuit.

The Indians more or less relax today with an exhibition game against Toronto University, which is preparing for the start of the Eastern Senior Intercollegiate scedule two weeks hence.

CHAPTER NINE

"Here you need light in here. What d'you mean by reading in this light!" She was at the windows, the fresh spring air and brightness poured in. Isabel went back to the bed and knelt down, possessing herself of his lean old speckled hands. "So you thought you'd get sick, Pop?" she smiled shakily.

"But looky here, Belle, Mansie didn't send for you!"

"Oh no, no, this was just a surprise." She told him all about it, and saw his face brighten and his eyes begin to shine again. They had hardly started talking when his lunch was brought in by Betty Lou, trailed by the small girls. "I've got to do this oftener," Isabel told herself, when she saw his hands actually trembling with joy and his eyes filling as Pussy and Catherine climbed up to sit beside him on the bed.

She had never seen her children eat with the appetite they showed for cold turkey and hot baked potatoes, for biscuits and homemade preserves, for cookies and creamy country milk. Afterward they were persuaded to lie down in what once had been "Mother's room," and Isabel had what her aunt called a real good visit with her father.

"Shame those little fellers aren't as pretty as you were Belle."

"Oh, all girls are pretty now. Dressed right, and with the right hair-do, any girl can be smart. Catherine's going to be lovely," Isabel said, unperturbed.

"Yes, and rather like Uncle Ross. Remember him coming down from the junctin with venison every winter?"

"Yep, so he did. So he did," Oliver Jordan said, laughing.

"That kinder takes me back."

"Pussy has a look in her eyes sometimes that always makes me think of Uncle Ross."

A pause. Isabel felt fright spreading slowly through her soul, like a creeping tide. She knew what was coming.

"Ross was my mother's brother—they say he was like his mother," Oliver Jordan said. "Poor feller, he got froze in, that winter and I don't s'pose we ever will know just what happened to him." And then suddenly. "Belle, what did you have against Dennis Hardisty?"

"Against him? Nothing." she said quickly. "No. We never quarreled. It was just—he was away, of course, and I met Avery."

"But 'tisn't like you to flick a feller out when he's off on the country's business," the man said slowly. Isabel felt her color rising.

"There wasn't any question of kicking him out, Pop. I met Avery, and—well, we fell in love with each other. I wrote Dennis quite honestly about it, and said that I would abide by whatever he decided. It wasn't easy, I knew how badly he would feel, at first anyway. I felt badly, too But it seemed silly to sacrifice all of us."

"No, I don't mean that. I'm not speaking of the children. I mean have me unhappy, and Avery unhappy, and Dennis—well, certainly not happy. No, as far as the children go, I'm ready to do anything to make up to them for what might be—might have been —unfair to them," Isabel said, uncomfortable, hot-cheeked. "Dennis is to have them whenever he likes, and as long as he likes."

"That don't mean anything to a man, he can't take care of little fellers like these," Oliver said.

"Don't make it so difficult!" Isabel protested, between laughter and tears. Her father noticed once again the velvet quality of her eyelashes, framing the blue eyes; the faint tracery of blue veins on the warm olive of her temples, the shape of the dark gold waves that framed the beautiful line of her head. The whole woman breathed and radiated charm; every tone of her voice, every change in the mobile line of her mouth underscored it. She had her eagerly interrogative expressions; her round-eyed childish aspects; her little proud lifts of chin and shoulders. He knew them all; he had known them since her exquisite babyhood, although perhaps he could not have come nearer to describing them than to say in his thoughts, as he said now, "Isabel certainly is a pretty girl."

"I never saw much of Dennis Hardisty, and I never saw Mr. Latimer at all," Oliver Jordan presently said, somewhat hesitantly. "But I don't see just why you changed round, myself."

It was a beautiful serious look she gave him in answer, and when she spoke it was gently, simply, with an unusual sincerity.

"Dennis was away," Isabel said. "I went to New York with this friend of mine—Nancy Strait. She's a woman who—well, she's been divorced twice, she's rather what Aunt Mansie would call fast, I suppose. That is, she gambles and she plays poker and bridge with men, for high stakes, and she drinks a good deal, and likes to go about to bars and places. It sounds so much worse than it is!" Isabel interrupted herself, seeing his face assume a scandalized look. "In lots of other ways she's completely all right," she added. "I mean dainty and smart and charitable, too—she'll do anything for anyone. But anyway, I went to New York with her. I can't tell you what New York's like." She paused, biting her lower lip, staring into space with smiling eyes. "It was glamour," she said, half to herself. "Sun shining along fifth Avenue, and the shops all glittering. You never saw such shops, Pop, nor such people, all walking along with their heads up—so smart and so gay! We plunged right in, Nancy and I—all three of us did, for Avery was with us every day and we had plans evening. I went to Twenty-one and the Stork Club and danced. He kept our rooms filled with flowers—he sent me a ' clip, when my old three-dollar clip broke, and it wasn't until after we were married, when he gave me the insurance papers for it, that I knew what it was worth. It seemed to me like a dream, I acted like a person in a dream. He can be—he is—a perfectly charming person; he knew how to do everything, and everyone knew him. You don't know how that impresses a woman—a woman like me, anyway. I mean to have a man know how to order a dinner and tip a headwaiter and wear the right clothes. And when he wanted me to marry him it seemed as if I hadn't any choice."

"Just because he was a rich feller," her father said, watching her closely.

"No, not that!" Isabel laughed, to cover a little hurt. Although I suppose a lot of people think that," she conceded. "No, you have to like Avery. Everyone does. And that atmosphere was his atmosphere. Nothing seemed to matter except having a wonderful time—the fun of it. Nancy and I having flowers, and breakfast upstairs in our room, and Avery coming in with presents—asking us if we'd like to go to the races, reminding us that tonight was the big Russian ballet—oh, Pop, nobody ever had such a good time! And always big cars waiting, an dfront seats for opening nights. Of course I lost my head."

"You mean that afterward you found out you weren't so crazy about him?" her father suggested shrewdly. "You mean that you don't love him after all?"

"Oh no, no, no. You have to love Avery, Pop. He's like a nice kid. He's just a sort of happy, busy boy." She hesitated for terms. "Everybody likes him," Isabel protested, for the second time.

"But you arn't the sort that that wants to live with a man who isn't nothing but a rich boy," her father argued in his turn, his expression troubled and puzzled.

"I am not, indeed," Isabel said evenly, patiently, suddenly weary. There was no use in trying to make her father understand.

"So you threw Dennis over and got a divorce? I never could somehow fit that onto you, Belle."

"It's done every day."

"Yes. S'pose 'tis." His voice sounded vaguely dissatisfied. "But you were always such a good little thing, Isabel," he said. "You wouldn't hurt a fly, when you were little. You'd bring home some poor sick kitty—"

She was silent, the set smile still lingering on her face, but a slow red creeping up to her cheekbones.

"There needn't necessarily be any ugly feeling about a divorce," she said presently.

"I suppose there most always is, though, ain't there?"

"Well, often," she conceded unwillingly. "But as far as I know, Dennis didn't feel ugly about it. He wrote me that I must do as I thought best. Talking about it this way, with you, who don't know what the circumstances were, nor what the personalities are, makes it seem like a whimsical thing to do—the freak of a moment. It wasn't like that at all. I seemed to have gotten into a world that simply—left Dennis behind. Perhaps it isn't as good a world as his mother's —I don't say it is. I was horribly lonely, living in the dark house with only his mother and the babies for company. I'm affectionate, I needed—well, I suppose I needed a husband."

"But there's lots of other women—millions of 'em—who are lonely now, Belle. Ain't they supposed to wait for their hus-

"Well, that isn't what I mean, either. Avery sort of swept me off my feet, I suppose."

"What'd you and Dennis quarrel about? I should think nothing would be important, with him going away so soon."

"We never quarreled," Isabel said in a low tone. She held it low because her throat felt thick and dry.

Her father said nothing for a moment, and, eager to change the trend of the conversation, she cocked her head, as if to listen for a child's call Little Catherine did indeed call "Mummy!" a moment later, but in that moment Isabel's father said one more thing, a thing that was to stay with her for a long, long time.

"Don't you love folks any deeper than that when you love 'em, Belle?"

The little girls were weary with sheer felicity after their unexpected outing; they entertained their mother with the demure sort of small-girl chatter for which she often hungered, and upon which Yelta's constant presence placed an inevitable check.

"Mommy," Pussy said presently, "was that our Grandfather that got up and dressed and let get the eggs and went up the windmill with us?"

"Yes, that was my father." with Grandma?"

"'Cause he lives in the kunkree," explained Catherine.

"No it isn't only because he lives in the country. It's because he's Mommy's father, and Grandma is Daddy's mother, and they don't even know each other."

"Daddy, or my Daddy?" Pussy

"How do you mean 'Daddy' or 'my Daddy,' Pussy?"

"Well," said Pussy, who talked a great deal, dragging out syllables with relish. "Wal-il, we and our other Daddy 'my Daddy.'"

"Your other Daddy?"

"Who wented to war," prompted Catherine.

"Oh—you remember him, don't you?"

"I 'member Little Black Sambo," said Catherine.

"He used to read that to you."

"An' we call him 'my Daddy,'" Pussy finished it. "An' he's a soldier and he's fixing 'lectricity."

'He told you that?"

"An' Catherine wiped his eyes with her handkerchief."

"He knelt down," said Pussy, "an' Catherine had on her dress with the guimpe, an' he put his face down in her neck like he did, an' she had a little handkercher in her pocket and she said 'Don't k'y, Daddy.'"

"I said 'Don't cry,'" corrected it, in her deep hoarse voice.

"You dinnot. You were only a baby, wasn't she, Mommy?"

"Yes, she was only a baby." This pain at her heart would stop presently. This was just a passing thing.

"My dress had silver buttons," Catherine boasted.

"My dress had silver buttons, too," said Pussy. Gran gave us those dresses, din she Mom?"

"Yes, she did. For Christmas. Those were darling dresses."

"Mommy, when my Daddy comes home can we go and live with him again?"

"I don't believe we will, Pussy."

"But you said we would."

"Did I?"

"Yes, you said it that day when we went away. You said before we knewd it he'd be home and we'd all be happy again."

"But your happy now darlings?" It was said after so long a pause that Pussy's attention had wandered to the ravishing sight of sheep in a field. Isabel repeated it.

HENRY LAFORTUNE AGAIN HITS HEADLINES

The name of Henry Lafortune, escaped convict from the Kingston Penitentiary, and the "little man who is never there" has once more made the headlines.

Lafortune, or a man answering his description, has bobbed up once more, this time in the Loughborough Lake district.

Yesterday, officers from the Kingston Penitentiary were dispatched to the area and although a thorough search was conducted the Pimpernel of Escapees again eluded the pursuers. Lafortune has been at large since August 2.

He is said to have been seen in the Huff's Island area and again in the Wellington district. Officers returned to their headquarters after a futile search and are awaiting the next lead.

St. Catharines Wins Senior Lacrosse Title

St. Catharines, Ont., Sept. 21—(CP)—The St. Catharines Athletics defeated Mimico Mountaineers 17-10 last night to win the seventh and deciding game of the best of seven Ontario Senior Lacrosse Association final series. St. Catharines thus won the right to meet the Quebec winners in Quebec for the eastern title.

The final of the Ontario title was a deadly struggle all the way, with the teams starting deadlocked at three victories apiece. The Athletics, eastern champions last year, had a home crowd of 4,200 on edge as they trailed until the middle of the third period.

The score was tied five times in last night's contest, until the fourth period when the Athletics grabbed the lead and coasted to the finish.

The Athletics will leave Monday for the eastern final in Quebec. The Athletics came from behind to tie the score a 9-9 at the end of the third period. Starting the fourth, the Athletics broke the hearts of Mimico supporters with eight consecutive goals which put them ahead 17-9 with 36 seconds to go, when Mimico got their last counter.

TORONTO LEAFS CLOSE HOCKEY TRAINING SCHOOL

Six of Those Attending Will be Given Tryout With the Main Squad

By FRASER MacDOUGALL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

St. Catharines, Sept. 21 —(CP)—The Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League closed their week-long preliminary training camp yesterday and managing director Conny Smythe announced that six of the 25 hockey students, most of them aspiring youngsters from minor professional or amateur teams, will get tryouts with the Leafs who start full scale pre-season training here Monday.

Of the other 19, six go to Pittsburgh Hornets of the American Hockey League, seven to Tulsa in the United States Hockey League, four to the Hollywood Wolves of the Pacific Coast League and two others to minor teams in the Toronto farm system.

Students ticketed for Pittsburg include leftwinger Armand Lemieux of Coniston, Ont., who hit camp today and made a quick impression with two quick goals; and defence man Gus Morton of New Liskeard, Ont., moving up from Tulsa.

Smythe gave a glimpse of the possible shape of things to come when the team starts workouts next week.

He said his forward line combinations are: Langelle, Syl Apps and Bill Ezinicki; Johnny McCormack, Meeker and Lynn; Bud Polle, Gus Bodnar and Gaye Stewart; Bily Taylor, Ted Kennedy and Joe Klukay. The latter is a leftwinger from Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., who played with Pittsburgh last year.

MONTREAL WHIPS SYRACUSE CHIEFS TO EVEN SERIES

Weird Game as Royals Came from Behind 10-2 Score to Win 14-12

(By The Associated Press)

The International League Governors' Cup final series between Montreal and Syracuse is now tied at one game apiece.

The Royals behind 10-2 in the fourth, rallied to whip the Chiefs 14-12 in last night's game at Montreal. The scene of the best of seven series now shifts to Syracuse, where the third game will be played Sunday.

Pitcher Chet Kehn won the game for Montreal with a three-run inside the park homer in the eighth with the count knotted at 10-all. Third baseman Lew Riggs, drove in seven runs, four on a bases-loaded round tripper that featured the Royals' six-run fourth inning.

The Chiefs appeared to have the game sewed up when they were in front 10-2 in the fourth. But the Royals came back with two big innings, scoring six runs in the fourth and five in the eighth.

Kehn, going to the mound in the sixth as the Royals' fourth pitcher, was credited with the victory although lifted in the ninth. Syracuse used four hurlers with Len Bobeck being charged the loss.

The hectic contest featured five home runs. The Chiefs' three were delivered by Dutch Mele, Al Rubeling and Van Harrington.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Sept. 21 (AP)—As an aftermath of the recent National Boxing Association convention, the N.B.A. is distributing to boxing commissions and other interested parties a scholarly circular pertaining to a change in the weight limits of boxing classes...The circular and adds: "Vital statistics indicate that boxers, like the race in general, are getting bigger. One medical authority attributed it to the attention paid to vitamins, diets, improvement in hygiene, sanitation, medical care and greater number of hours spent out of doors."....Wonder how come all those things haven't produced even one heavyweight who can give Joe Louis a tussle?

SURVEY SHOWS LITTLE HOPE FOR CHEAPER HOMES

Howe Reports Building Materials, Wages Will be Up

Housing Target of 60,000 Units Objective of 1947

Ottawa, Sept. 23 — (CP)—Canadian industry, wrestling with the acute housing problem, today was equipped with a comprehensive report on the manpower and materials needed to build 50,000 housing units and an analysis of the effect of such a gigantic construction job on the nation's economy.

But, the report, prepared by the reconstruction department's economic research division and released Sunday, held out little hope of reduced costs to Mr. Canada who wants to build a house.

"Not until efficiency in building operations increases over present levels can any substantial reduction of war-inflated building costs be expected," said the report.

Reconstruction Minister Howe, who released the report, said it showed that "a housing target of 60,000 units during 1946-1947 is well within the production capacity of this country." The report had been made primarily for the guidance of industry — "to assist it in the responsible task of providing the tools needed . . ."

The investigators reported that 47 to 62 per cent rise in building costs from 1939 to 1945 was due to two factors:

1. Increases during the same period of 42 per cent in building material costs and 31 per cent in the hourly wage rates of construction workers.

2. A lowering of efficiency in the house-building industry which had boosted cost by 10 to 25 per cent. This was due partly to dilution of skilled labor by untrained men and partly to delays on the job caused by material shortages.

Overall Estimates.

The report gave staggering overall estimates of material and manpower needs for programs on a scale from 50,000 to 80,000 units. It estimated that a 50,000-unit program would involve:

1. New homes for approximately 200,000 people.

2. Jobs for one year for 134,000 to 162,000, with 62,000 to 75,000 working directly on building sites and the remainder in supplying materials.

3. A total annual payroll to construction workers of $103,000,000 to $125,000,000.

4. Orders of between $144,000,000 and $175,000,000 to supply industries.

5. Contractors and builders earnings of at least $28,000,000.

6. Total construction expenditures of between $275,000,000 and $334,000,000.

7. Real Estate transactions of $27,000,000 to $33,000,000.

Difficulties to Face.

Apart from the direct effect of the housing program, the report said, "very substantial indirect effects will result . . . contributing to increased economic activity among a great number of trades and business in practically every part of the country."

There were "formidable" difficulties to be faced and the "key to success of a national housing program lies in regional and local co-operation."

The report suggested regional "stock-taking" by community organizations "to assess the resources of their area to see what portion of the housing needs of the locality can be filled . . . (which would) indicate how much can really be done with existing facilities . . . (and) where expansion is justified by the long-term building prospects . . ."

U. of D. Negro Football Star Held for Rape

Detroit, Sept. 23 (AP)—County Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien today authorized a warrant charging the University of Detroit's Negro football star, Guy Brown, 21, with the rape of a second white woman.

The new charge relates to an attack on a 23-year-old woman Sept. 18.

The Manhattan, Kans., Negro, a three-sport star at the university, has denied the charges.

The third-year sociology student, selected as "athlete of the year" at the University of Detroit in 1945, is held without bail. He was arrested last Friday night on a purse-snatching charge, a few hours before he was to have participated in the Detroit-Wayne University football game.

Five Cleared Of Suspicion

Winnipeg, Sept. 23 (CP)— Detective Inspector Dave Nicholson of the city police force announced last night that five men taken into custody in connection with the slaying of 13-year-old George Smith have been cleared of all suspicion.

Police admitted that with the erasing of suspicion from the five men, they could give citizens no hope of an early solution to the crime.

Young Smith was found shot to death in a west-central lane early Thursday after he had failed to return home from a Boy Scout meeting. Some of his clothing had been torn off and an attempt had been made at criminal assault. The slaying was almost a duplicate of that of 13-year-old Roy McGregor in Winnipeg last Jan. 4.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Sept. 23—(CP)—Synopsis: East of the Mississippi, Lake Michigan and Eastern Lake Superior there is a strong southerly flow of warm moist air over the eastern half of the continent in which temperatures yesterday were above normal reaching maximum 80 in several points in Southwestern Ontario. South of Lake Erie there is widespread intermittent rain in this warm air. Cooler air covers the western half of the continent and this cooler air mass will move eastward over our forecast regions during this afternoon and extend over all of the province by Tuesday night. Showers and scattered thunderstorms occur along the leading edge of this cooler air. Although there will be a marked drop in temperature, frost is not expected in any of the regions tonight.

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington, Sept. 23 (AP) — Yugoslavia, it was learned today, has sent the United States a counter proposal to the American indemnity demand of almost $400,000 for the shooting down of two army transports and the deaths of five fliers.

State Department officials have the Yugoslav reply under consideration. It is expected to be made public early this week.

While no official information has been given out, indications are that Marshal Tito has rejected the American insistence on payment for the property damage suffered in the loss of the two planes, while expressing specific willingness to make compensation for the lives lost.

The planes were shot down Aug. 9 and 19. The passengers and crew of the first craft, which crash-landed after being hit by Yugoslav fighter fire, escaped death but all five aboard the second unarmed transport died.

The American indemnity demands were presented to the Yugoslav government by Ambassador Richard C. Patterson after Tito's government had yielded to American ultimatum and released the crew members and passengers seized after the first crash.

FUTILE ATTEMPT MADE BY JEWS TO ENTER PALESTINE

Nearly a Hundred Leap Overboard And Try To Swim Ashore At Haifa

By CARTER L. DAVIDSON

Jerusalem, Sept. 23 (AP) — Nearly a hundred Jewish refugees on the illegal immigrant ship Palmakh leaped overboard and tried to swim ashore at Haifa today. They were rounded up within two hours by the British army and navy.

Some 800 to 900 Jews attempted to slip into Palestine aboard the 200-ton schooner yesterday, but were stopped by the Royal Navy in a fight at sea that cost one of them his life. The army and navy planned to transfer them to H.M.S. Empire Heywood this afternoon for deportation to Cyprus.

Army officers tried to persuade the refugees aboard the Palmakh to send a delegation to talk over arrangements for their trans-shipment. They refused and almost 100 attempted a desperate dash for the promised land.

Police and navy launches picked up swimmers between ship and shore, and six British soldiers dived into the water, fastened ropes to some of the swimmers and towed them to the launches.

Runs Into Missile Shower

The minesweeper Rowena sighted the Palmakh Sunday about three miles off Ras En Naqura, near Palestine's northern frontier. The government said the sailors who tried to board the schooner ran into a shower of missiles and stout resistance. After firing one shot and warning the refugees in English, French and Italian, they used tear-smoke bombs and fire hoses to quell the refugees and one immigrant was killed.

Hagana's illegal radio station, Voice of Israel, charged the boarding party with brutality but said this would not stop immigration.

Jerusalem meanwhile still experienced bomb alarms. Six times in two days, telephoned warnings of explosions have brought evacuation of the general postoffice.

Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish Extremist organization, said Sunday night through its illegal radio station, Fighting Zion, that its members had bombed the Haifa railroad station Friday night because it was among the most important British army communication centres between northern Palestine and the Egyptian border.

Urged to Demonstrate.

Haifa, Sept. 23 —(CP)— The Jewish population of Haifa was urged today by secret-radio broadcasts to stage a mass demonstration protesting the deportion of some 800 Jewish refugees now in Haifa harbor aboard the ramshackle schooner Palmakh.

All Jewish stores closed and residents converged on the Hadar Hacarmel section for a meeting.

Military security tightened and a cordon was thrown across the city near the port area in an obvious step to prevent a possible march on the docks.

"IKE" SAYS GOODBY TO "MONTY"

W.A. HARRIMAN WILL SUCCEED HENRY WALLACE

Official Family More United on Policy Toward Russia

By WILLIAM T. PEACOCK

Washington, Sept. 23 (AP) — W. Averell Harriman's addition to President Truman's official family edged it further away today from domestic issue views espoused by Henry Wallace and united it on policy toward Russia.

The present Ambassador to Britain, tapped by Mr. Truman yesterday to replace Mr. Wallace as Secretary of Commerce, is widely credited, in fact, with having had a major hand in framing the present policy of firmness toward the Russians.

Mr. Harriman gained his ideas of how to deal with the Russians first in handling lend-lease aid to them and later in more than two years as ambassador to Moscow. In personal relations, those ideas worked. He was highly popular.

Politically, the new secretary-designate is, like Mr. Wallace, a Republican turned new dealer. Now 55, Mr. Harriman was born to wealth and became a Wall Street banker. He and a brother inherited some $100,000,000 from their father, E. H Harriman, the railroad (Union Pacific) magnate.

Far Away From Wallace

Despite this new dealish background, Mr. Harriman is far away from Mr. Wallace on many social and economic issues. There is no tinge in the appointment of any bid to the C.I.O. Political Action Committee and other groups which follow Mr. Wallace.

Mr. Truman now has a cabinet almost entirely of his own selection, with Naval Secretary Forrestal, appointed in 1944 on the death of Frank Knox, the only appointee of the late President Roosevelt.

In the changes, the general appraisal among politicians is that the cabinet's political complexion has shifted to the right a bit from what President Roosevelt used to call the "left of centre" course of his administration.

Reaction Favorable

Initial comment from legislators was uniformly favorable.

Asked for his reaction, Mr. Wallace said: "I am sure that this appointment will be received with the greatest enthusiasm by the business community."

First British reaction indicated the appointment would go far to wipe out any lingering resentment arising from Mr. Wallace's references in his New York speech to "British Imperialis."

An article distributed by the British Press Association described Mr. Harriman as "always a very close friend of Britain." It said, too, that he was the only American to have attended every international war conference, starting with the Atlantic Charter meeting and included Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam.

There was little inclination to speculate on a successor in Mr. Harriman's London diplomatic post but Gen. Mark W. Clark, American Commander in Austria, was one mentioned.

U.S. LIEUTENANT STABS WIFE WITH COMMANDO KNIFE

Plunges Knife Six Times Into Her Back After Talking Over Reconciliation

Philadelphia, Sept. 23 (AP)—A 28-year-old ex-army lieutenant killed his estranged wife with a commando knife today, plunging the five-inch blade six times into her back and chest after throwing her to the sidewalk when she attempted to flee, police reported.

They said the slaying of Mrs. May Brock, 26-year-old blond from Hackensack, N.J., occurred shortly after she apparently had changed her mind about a reconciliation with her husband.

Gerald Rightley, a private detective, told police he saw the couple struggling on the pavement and thought it was two men fighting.

Getting closer, Rightley said he realized it was a man and woman and saw the knife in Brock's hand. He fired three shots into the air which summoned three policemen.

The woman, with stab wounds in the heart, died before police could carry her to a hospital a half block away.

Wife Leased Home

Brock, in a statement which police said was signed at police headquarters, related "I was very much in love with my wife." He recounted that on his return from overseas he found his wife had leased their home and disappeared.

Brock said he had just about given up hope of finding his wife, after months-long search, when he noticed her in a sidewalk line of restaurant patrons last Friday. He said he trailed her to the tourist home where she had lived.

The police quoted Brock as saying he returned to the tourist home last night and waited outside for her. He said she was surprised to see him and then agreed to talk over reconciliation.

When she said she would resume life with him, Brock told police they went out to celebrate and "it looked like things were going my way again." But suddenly, Brock declared, his wife changed her mind.

"I'm sorry. It's no use. I don't love you any more," Brock quoted her as saying.

"Everything went sour," he told police. "I didn't know what I was doing, and pulled out the knife in my pocket."

TRIBESMEN RAID VILLAGES

Tehran, Sept. 23 (AP)— Rebellious nomad tribesmen have captured several Persian Gulf villages and launched repeated attacks upon Bushire, one of the largest ports on the Iranian coast, the newspaper Keyhan reported today.

Reegue and Daylam were listed among the towns which have fallen to the warring tribes, the Dashestani and Hayatdavoodi. Bushire is one of the largest outlets for Iranian goods, cotton, carpets, silk, tobacco and hides, in world commerce.

MOVE CAPSIZES WHOLE INDEMNITY POLICY OF PARLEY

Conference Abandons Principle of Full Compensation For Losses in Romania

By ROBERT EUNSON

Paris, Sept. 23 — (AP) — The United States, siding with Russia, abandoned today the principle of full compensation for Allied property losses in Romania. The move capsized the whole indemnity structure of the peace conference.

Willard Thorp, United States State Department economic expert, told the Balkan-Finnish economic commission that the United States had become convinced that Romania could not support all reparations and compensation burdens placed upon her by the original draft treaty proposals.

Russia has been fighting from the start for the principle of only one-third compensation for property losses suffered by private United Nations individuals and concerns in defeated countries.

France, which joined the United States in a similar move before the Italian Economic Commission last week, declared after Mr. Thorp's statement that it reserved the right to modify its position later.

Britain declared that the move had changed the situation but implied it would hold to its original 100 per cent compensation plan.

Meets French President

Meanwhile, British Foreign Secretary Bevin, who returned to Paris during the weekend after spending two weeks in London conducting conferences on Palestine, met separately today with French president Georges Bidault and Foreign Minister Molotov of Russia. He sought to convene the council of foreign ministers within the next 48 hours, a foreign office spokesman said in London.

Mr. Bevin's return brought the council back to full strength for the first time since Aug. 31, when Mr. Molotov went to Moscow.

The spirits of the American delegation were obviously raised by developments during the weekend, which witnessed the appointment of W. Averell Harriman as Secretary of Commerce to succeed Henry A. Wallace, whose criticisms of United States foreign policy had left State Secretary Byrnes in a questionable position before his colleagues.

The immediate problem confronting the peace conference delegates today was whether Britain would maintain her position in favor of full compensation for Allied property losses in the Balkans or make a switch that would change the whole economic structure of Second Great War settlements.

The United States and France abandoned their full compensation stand in the Italian economic commission last week, leaving Britain to stand alone on the question.

British Soldiers Don't Relax In Khyber Pass Even in Peace

By JOSEPH C. GOODWIN

Peshawar, India, Sept. 23 (AP) —In war or peace, conditions remain unchanged in Khyber Pass: The northern gate to India swings on reluctant hinges and the men who guard it are at perpetual alert.

Its ragged black defiles have known invading armies since Macedonians, Mongolians, Persians and many others passed this way with violence.

Modern British guardians take no chances. The countryside from the Afghan frontier to Peshawar —and on beyond—is a military concentration, its strength in men and materials a secret.

Inside the Pass, mountain sides bristle with hidden gun positions, lofty block houses, high-walled forts, barbed wire entanglements and concrete tank traps. The scant flow of traffic to and from Afghanistan is constantly in view of trained observers secreted in winding underground installations.

The constant vigilance and rigid security, the British Indian army explains, are directed at unruly mountain tribesmen.

But it is no secret that the vast network of frontier fortifications is a bulwark against the possibility of foreign invasion.

"There's really no trouble at present," said a British officer. "It's unusually quiet. But this has been a bloody land for 2,000 years. We don't dare relax even in times of peace."

Eighteen Survivors Taken Out of Bush By Helicopters

Before Crash Passengers Told to Fasten Safety Belts

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Gander Airport, Nfld., Sept. 23 —(CP Cable) — The 18 survivors of last Wednesday's crash of a Belgian airliner, brought here by helicopter during the weekend, were quick to pay tribute to the marvelous rescue work of a shy, modest American Army doctor, Capt. Samuel Martin, while the announcement was made that it would be necessary to abandon plans to remove the bodies of the 26 victims from the scene of the crash in the thick bushland 22 miles southwest of this mammoth airbase.

Dr. Martin, a member of the first rescue party to reach the scene after travelling by seaplane and rubber dinghy, ministered to the survivors, putting fractures in splints, treating burns and lacerations and administering morphine to the suffering. But he didn't have the facilities to provide all the treatment required by the more seriously injured.

Gilbert Perier, general manager of Sabena Airlines, said the bodies of the victims will be buried at the scene rather than endanger lives in attempting to bring them out. A miniature cemetery with white crosses is being dug and Protestant and Catholic clergymen will be flown over the scene to read funeral services.

"The job of rescuing the survivors was a risky one," said Perier. "It was worth the risk when there were lives that could be saved. Circumstances, however, have dictated out decision not to attempt to bring the bodies out and prolong the hazard to the lives of the men who have been such a great help."

Perier lost his daughter and recently-divorced wife in the crash. Eighteen survivors of the disaster, rescued by helicopter, are now in the Sir Frederick Banting, Memorial Hospital here.

Meanwhile members of an army rescue party which hacked a path through tangled forests to reach the survivors told for the first time yesterday the full story of the disaster.

Pretty Bad Shape

"Things were in pretty bad shape," said a member of the army rescue party. "Several of the passengers had been burned to ashes. Those still alive were wet. It had rained the night before and during the day, and they had been lying on the ground."

The rescue group said the survivors told them that before the crash the passengers had been instructed to fasten their safety belts and that the plane could not land at Gander because of fog but was going on to another field.

The rescue party members were quick to praise the courage of the survivors. Cpl. Harry Houghton said that Miss Jean Rooki, the little Belgian stewardess, "really took hold of things" after the crash. She and three other survivors pulled 16 persons out of the wreck.

"This Girl Scout lady (Miss Helen Ruth Henderson of New York) was swell," Cpl. Houghton said:

A 24-hour ban on interviews with any of the survivors was imposed by hospital authorities.

Trappers Reach Scene First.

Bill Galgay, Newfoundland government public relations officer, told a press conference that the first persons to reach the survivors were two Newfoundland trappers who reached the scene Thursday.

Galgay said one of the trappers, Ross Shea, and the other, named Gillingham, reached the scene and counted the survivors. Then they went to a clearing and with white cloth marked out the figure "18." Rescue planes saw the trappers and were guided to the crash.

It was the gawky helicopter, flown in from North Carolina, that backed up Dr. Martin's work by speeding rescue work to such a pitch that the lives of persons who might not have been able to stand another night in the forest were saved.

They were Joseph Deschuyffeleer, 33, Brussels clerk, with severe burns, fractured leg and shock; Leona Tonglet, 36, Brussels, with severe head injury which may be a fracture and an injured leg and Walter Devos, 43, Ghent, Belgium, with severe burns on hand and face, fractured leg and a dislocated foot.

Conditions of two others, John King, 19-year-old student of the Chinese embassy at Brussels, and stewardess Jean Rooki, had been considered serious but they were later removed from the list.

Suffer Severe Shock.

American army men had to hold her on the stretcher during the flight while she shouted that she did not like airplanes and did not want to ride on one again.

Jeanne's brother, Etienne, 14, was another survivor, but her mother and sister were killed.

Jean Polak, a cousin, was carried in a sitting position from the plane to an ambulance.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kronengold of New York had only slight injuries. When Mrs. Kronengold spotted her brother in the crowd around the rescue plane she waved and smiled. One of her first questions was "Did you get Charlie's glasses?" Her husband had lost his glasses in the crash.

For Rudy Revil, New York pianist and composer, it was a question if he would ever play again. He suffered severe burns to his hands and face and a fractured leg and doctors were not sure if his hands could be brought into shape so that he could play.

HELD UP BY FOG

Halifax, Sept. 23 (CP)— The 16 steam turbines which drive the mammoth 81,235-ton Queen Mary remained stilled today by a light but inpenetrable fog which descended yesterday over the Halifax waterfront. The Mary was due to sail at midnight last night. The Dominion Weather Bureau here reported that the bank would remain solidly at the harbor-mouth until Wednesday.

Perry A. Young Hit by Car Near Mt. View

Perry A. Young, Boswell St., Bell Telephone employee working out of the Belleville office, is in Belleville General Hospital suffering from shock and bruises as result of being struck by a hit-and-run driver near Mountain View on Saturday afternoon.

According to police Young was walking on the shoulder of the highway near Mountain View when he was struck by the passing vehicle which did not stop. Examination at the hospital disclosed that no bones were broken but reports were that Mr. Young suffered a gash on his face necessitating six stitches to close.

In a similar accident Sunday evening following the church hour two elderly women, residents of the village of Plainfield, suffered shock and bruises when they were struck by an auto as they walked home after church.

Driver of the auto, Oran Conley, of Plainfield, also had been attending church and told police that his car had struck the two women when he was blinded by the headlights of an approaching car. The two women struck were Mrs. Ella Wilder, 73, and Mrs. Ina Collins, 80. No bones were broken but Mrs. Wilder suffered a bruised forehead while both suffered from shock.

Accused Elect Trial by Jury

Dr. George L. Brown, veterinary surgeon of Selby, Ontario, and M. Levine, Belleville, cattle dealer, were committed for trial on charges of unlawfully conspiring to evade the export regulations under the Contagious Diseases of Animals Act, when they appeared for hearing at a special sitting of county court at Belleville Monday.

Both accused elected trial by jury and following taking of preliminary evidence were committed for trial by Magistrate T. Y. Wills. Malcolm Robb acted as special Crown prosecutor, with Constable Greaves of the R. C. M.P. and Dr. Younghusband, local veterinary inspector giving evidence for the Crown.

Charges against the two men involved conspiracy regarding the changing of ear tags in cattle, the offence allegedly having taken place in November, 1945 at the Levine farm at Mountain View in Prince Edward County.

Splendid Attractions Offered As Fair Opens Officially Tonight

The Belleville Exhibition, show window of Hastings and surroundings districts' agricultural achievements will formally get under way at the Fair Grounds tonight.

The fair will be officially opened tonight at 8 o'clock although the gates opened this morning at nine and this afternoon placing of the large number of exhibits took place. Judges were also busy this afternoon and prize tickets were placed on dairy-products; roots and vegetables; fruits, plants and flowers, women's work; fine arts and handicrafts and those of the elementary schools department.

Mayor Has Two Roles.

His Worship Mayor Frank Follwell will officiate at the opening ceremonies in front of the grandstand tonight, while tomorrow, Tuesday evening, at 8.30 he appears in a different role.

His challenge to mayors of the Dominion going unheeded, the city's chief magistrate hurled down a defy to ex-mayors of the city and it was promptly accepted by ex-mayor Harry Rollins.

The two men will race in a 100-yard dash in front of the grandstand Tuesday night, and enthusiasm over the event is crescendoing in not only sports circles but civic ones as well.

Two of the main entertainment attractions today include the sensational "Lucky" Lott and his Hell Drivers who appeared this afternoon and will give the last show tonight. This show is one of the most spectacular ones ever seen here and daring drivers defying death and injury in every move will drive their automobiles in reckless stunts that will cause even the most blase spectator to thrill.

Fine Stage Show

The other outstanding presentation is Billy Garden's stage extravaganza which will be presented in front of the grandstand. A bevy of beautiful dancing girls, trained animals, ponies and dogs, acrobats, singers and other stage acts mark this phase of the Fair's entertainment as one of the most attractive seen here in some time.

Then there is the Conklin Midway. A tented city of amusement, entertainment, thrilling rides, mystery shows, this Midway lives up to its reputation as being one of the best in Canada.

There are the barkers and their ballyhoo; the hoarse cries of concessionaires attracting the public to their booths; the tangy smell of sawdust; balloons and other fair souvenirs, not to mention the thousands of exhibits of agricultural Hastings that form one of the chief characteristics of the annual fall exhibition.

Exhibits Best in Years

In a last minute announcement today, the directors stated that the present fair will be one of the best in the long history of the century-old association. Exhibits are the best in years and the prize list is by far the most attractive offered exhibitors in some time. Weather permitting, the 1946 edition of the Belleville Fair should go down in history as the most attractive in three decades.

Display of Indian War Dances Given At Mohawk Fair

Mohawk Reserve (Special) — School fair exhibits, the livestock show, and exhibits of ladies' work and domestic science were features of the Mohawk Fair held last Thursday afternoon under the auspices of the Mohawk Agricultural Society.

Large crowds attended the fair which was the 46th annual exhibition staged by the society.

Almost every branch of school work was demonstrated at the fair with children from the different schools on the Reserve exhibiting their school work. Children also demonstrated their prowess as gardeners with many praiseworthy vegetable collections being seen.

An added touch of color was given the fair patrons when as part of the sports program the Indian Counsellor Organization of Hogansburg, N.Y., and the St. Regis Reservation, gave a display of Indian war dances. Members taking part were dressed in native Indian costumes, exquisitely embroidered and beaded and with brilliant plumed headgear. Their program consisted of the Partridge Dance, Mohawk War Song; Hawk Dance, bird calls, sign language demonstration and the Farewell Dance.

Point Anne proved too much for Deseronto in an exhibition softball game, the former winning by a 17-2 score. Central school won the relay race, while Mrs. Hermon Hill, Mrs. Clifford Maracle and Mrs. Stuart Hill were winners in the ladies' nail driving contest. The team drawing contest was won by Howard Lewis and Dan Maracle.

The baby show attracted its customary attention with Robert Hill, Lloyd Brant, Margaret Leween and Edith Baptiste being winners in the 1-6 months classes and Larry Lewis, Richard Cook, Jeremiah Brant, Donna May Barnhart and Roy Maracle winning in the 6-12 months class. Linda Brant and Verna Brant were winners in the over 12 months class.

Impressive Ceremonies Mark Re-Union of Hasty Pees at Picton

Picton, Sept. 23 — More than 1200 veterans gathered in Picton, Saturday, for the Veterans' Day in connection with the Fair, and for a drumhead service on Sunday. The 1st Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, also held a reunion with members coming from Montreal on the east and Owen Sound on the west. Once again, the Red Patches were much in evidence. Days spent in England, Sicily, Italy and France were re-lived by the young vets who refused to let inclement weather dampen their spirits.

Due to the rain, there was no parade to the Fair and events were held in the armories. RSM Angus Duffy took charge of the "fall in".

Addressed by Col. Kennedy

Addressing the men, Lt. Col. A. A. Kennedy of Owen Sound, former Commanding Officer, expressed thanks to the county for making the reunion possible. "It is good for old comrades who lived and fought together, who shared dangers and hardship, to meet again," he said. "We did the job we were called upon to do. We hope, and believe, it will not be necessary to do such a job again, but we feel that the next generation should and will be ready to do it if needed."

"In Canada's army, the Hasty P's were second to none," he declared."

Next-of-kin Representatives

Lt. Col. Kennedy called Mrs. Campbell, Perth (widow of Major Alex Campbell); Mrs. Reed, Picton, widow of Sgt. Charles Reed; Mrs. Sutcliff, Trenton, widow of Lt. Col. Bruce Sutcliffe, to the platform. The parade was dedicated to the next-of-kin and they were chosen as representatives. And bouquets of flowers were presented the ladies. A minute of silence was observed in memory of fallen comrades.

Belleville Municipal brass band and the Belleville pipe band provided music.

During the day, the Legion Auxiliary and Cherry Valley ladies provided lunch. In the evening, a dance was held.

Drumhead Service

Sunday afternoon, the sun shone for a colorful drumhead service. The parade formed at the armories, with service at the Collegiate Grounds,

Several thousand people attended. Major J. F. Goforth, M.C., who became padre of the Hasty P's in 1943, and served with the unit throughout the Italian campaign, was the speaker. He is Protestant padre at the R. M. C., Kingston. Also taking part in the service was Lt. Col. Kennedy who read the Scripture. Several hymns were sung and silence observed in memory of fallen comrades. The Hastings and Prince Edward Regimental band took part and also gave a concert.

C.R. Clapp Hooks 34-Pound 'Lunge At Moira Lake

A fighting 34-pound "musky" although he made the supreme sacrifice eventually, gave three men the battle of their lives in Moira Lake on Sunday evening.

Ex-Alderman Clarence Clapp with Randall Berry and Warren Pringle were trolling off the former's cottage on the lake about dusk when the big fellow struck.

For over an hour the fish fought his captors. It did not break water for nearly a half hour, and the boat was running out of gasoline. Five times the trio took their boat around the little cove in an attempt to drown the fish, but the musky refused to say "uncle."

After forty-five minutes of battling Mr. Clapp was "all in" to quote himself, and he handed the rod to Berry. Came another series of battles and finally the men were forced to beach their craft and drag their captive ashore.

By this time it was dark and not until the musky lay gasping on the beach did the trio get a good look at their prize.

A week ago Mr. Clapp hooked a nine pounder in approximately the same spot.

The floral tributes were varied and beautiful and three air stations, Rockcliffe, Trenton and Winnipeg, where the deceased was stationed, sent large wreaths.

Parking Meters Meet With Favor In Cornwall

Despite stiff pre-installation opposition of parking meters in the City of Cornwall there are now very few "who do not favor them" according to Mayor Aaron Horovitz of the St. Lawrence River city, who is quoted in a brief news item in the Cornwall Standard-Freeholder.

According to the news item a total of 92,000 cars had parked in the city's 195 metered spaces in a 20-day period with revenue averaging more than $1,000 per month. Merchants liked them because they kept traffic on the move and tended to keep motorists from leaving their cars in one spot longer than was necessary. The meters do not operate on Sundays or holidays.

Tells of Early Days Of Music Teachers Assoc. of Ontario

The Bulletin reporting the luncheon said: Mr. V. P. Hunt of Belleville and Mrs. G. B. Sippi, of Toronto, were guests of honor as the surviving members of the first Music Teachers' Association of Ontario founded in 1880. Mr. Hunt spoke delightfully of those enterprising days and admitted joining the association in 1885 and acting as secretary for a number of years, giving just praise to the high ideals of the pioneers in music who laid the foundation of music study in this country. Mrs. Sippi and Mr. Hunt gave us something in the way of sterling background and tradition of old world courtesy, grace and distinction that we can always do with in an ungracious world that badly needs it."

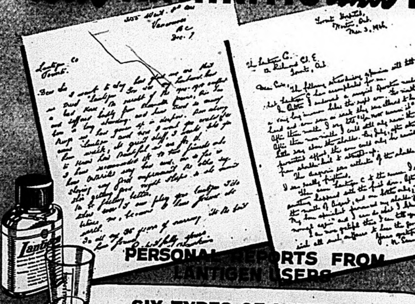
Treat ARTHRITIC and RHEUMATIC PAINS Early!



PERSONAL REPORTS FROM LANTIGEN USERS

SIX TYPES OF LANTIGEN

B Lantigen 'B' for the treatment of catarrh, bronchitis, sinus and antrum trouble, bronchial asthma and other respiratory tract troubles.

F Lantigen 'F' for the treatment and prevention of whooping cough. Stops attacks immediately, or prevents them if used before or in early stages of infection.

WHAT CAUSES ARTHRITIS?

In Canada more people suffer from Arthritis than from any other single disease. Many factors working together produce the changes which take place in the joints and give rise to the crippling pains which wreck the lives of so many sufferers. Focal infection from infected teeth, tonsils, sinuses and other organs is considered by many authorities as being largely responsible.

HEALTH RULES FOR ARTHRITICS

The treatment of these conditions is assisted by simple rules of diet and health. An excess of sugar and starchy foods should be avoided. A diet rich in Vitamins is helpful. The affected parts benefit by warmth and gentle massage. Adequate rest is important.

LANTIGEN—A DISSOLVED VACCINE TO BE TAKEN BY MOUTH

To combat this infectious process by building up the natural defenses of the body, a dissolved vaccine which may be taken by mouth has been prepared from the organisms which are commonly found in the centres of infection. This is LANTIGEN "C".

WHAT IS LANTIGEN?

Lantigen is a dissolved Vaccine containing such dissolved Micro-organisms which are peculiar to the particular disease requiring treatment. It contains no live germs. They are all destroyed by dissolving thus releasing the antigens contained therein—the natural antidote.

Lantigen works two ways; firstly, by absorbing into open tissue such as the tongue, throat, and intestinal tracts; secondly, it is operative by means of its distribution through the alimentary—stomach—system.

Sorry, Our Mistake

The other afternoon the telephone rang in the news room and on answering it a man asked, "What happened to the end of that story about Harris on the back page?" to which we replied we had noted the error and had taken up the matter with the party responsible. The trouble was the line finishing the story had been misplaced. We went on to explain the same thing occurred two or three times before during the week and were trying to eliminate the mistake.

"Well," he said, "It has happened several times I've noticed. What you need is a little competition." Apparently he had the thought in mind competition would do away with mistakes. Our reply was "It's a free country." With that he hung up.

As everyone knows who reads newspapers, particularly daily newspapers, mistakes are bound to creep in in spite of every care being taken to avoid such annoyances. However, in the rush to get the paper out on time certain typographical errors are bound to happen. Sometimes we wonder they do not show up more frequently for every letter must be punched separately on the linotype while the bulk of the story headings are set by hand.

This type after being set must be arranged in galleys and page forms in which position the words are reversed and upside down. Just place a page of printed matter before a mirror and some idea will be had of the problem. However, all this is part of the printing process and is of no concern to the reader beyond the fact that he likes his stories complete and not too many omissions.

This brings us back to the stranger who called. We want to thank him for taking enough interest to tell us his views for criticism is not unwelcome in this office. We try to profit by our mistakes and do not take them lightly. The difference between mistakes in print and others which occur by forgetfulness in individuals is that ours are a permanent record and serve to confront us at all times, That makes it important that news stories and printing must be as correct as possible. The human element can be guarded against but not eliminated and that, of course, is our offence.

There are always individuals who, being imperfect themselves, are constantly on the lookout for what others do not do perfectly. They are ever ready to gleefully pounce upon and hold up to view anything that is done wrong. They forget the things they have left undone of which they or their families alone know. They do not want to remember the times they might have been generous and tolerant but instead they are only concerned with their own selfish interests.

If people think as our telephone caller did that single newspapers in cities have no competition they are only fooling themselves. There is such competition on every side — from metropolitan papers, radio and weekly newspapers as well — that no small city newspaper can afford to give anything but the best of its efforts that it might hold and increase its circulation. From what we see of the newspapers on our exchange desk they are doing just that.

This is no apology for any mistakes we have made. As we've said before we try to avoid them and will keep on trying at all times. We are ready to listen to criticism— or applause — at any time and endeavor to chart our course accordingly. We would, also, like to know whom we are talking to, too, so no anonymous letters or telephone calls please. Our side of the story sometimes has its points.

Tiny Pianos

This fall children who go to one Chicago public school will find 25 miniature pianos — not toys, but practicable musical instruments — waiting for their music-hungry fingers, says Newsweek.

They will owe this chance to an ex-Air Force private, Harold B. Rhodes, who invented the original lap-sized piano from scraps of wrecked planes so that his disabled fellows could exercise their stiffened hands and divert their minds with music while in bed.

The improved 16-pound Rhodes model, called Prepiano, is still largely made of war surplus materials. Instead of sitting on a player's lap, it rests on a tubular aluminum frame which curves up to hold a comfortable attached seat.

Chicago is not the only large-city school system to take up Prepianos. Denver will also introduce them and other cities are thinking of experimenting with them as a definite prerequisite for the study of any musical instrument.

Speed

Only 40 years ago the speed permitted motor cars on the streets of cities, towns and villages in Ontario was 10 miles per hour — 15 miles in the country. But vehicles were already travelling at high speed in special trials, says the Toronto Star. A railway train had made a short-distance record of 120 miles an hour in 1901, and a motor car was to attain the same speed during a trial in 1908.

But the men took to the air and flew at speeds hitherto unknown. A Gloster Meteor has just established a world record of 617 miles an hour. That is better than 10 miles a minute. It is better than 900 feet per second, and sound (in air) travels only 1,090 feet per second.

Man is travelling in the air almost as fast as sound does, and no one can tell what further speeds the future holds.

Collars

What is it that ruins men's shirt collars? This weighty question, which has grown more important for the male of the species since the shortage of shirts developed, has long been a topic for debate, says The Boston Globe. The consensus among the wearers has been that the fault lies with the laundries, and the use of acids in washing.

Now rises the American Institute of Launderers to utter vigorous disavowal of this charge. The reason men's shirt collars fray into that unwearable condition, says the institute, is beards!

One hates to appear skeptical in the face of so ingenious an explanation. But since when have men worn tough beards on the back of their necks? The real explanation, of course, is that men get up around 2 a.m. each day and spend five minutes on each shirt with a file or a bit of sandpaper.

How to Make Money on a Boat

Here is how a Dutchman made money during the war. In 1938 he bought a 1,200-ton vessel for £5,800. He spent roughly £2,000 on refitting the ship. At the beginning of the war the vessel was commandeered by the British Government. For six years the Dutchman was paid £372 a month solely for the use of the steamer. The British Government paid the crew and all other expenses. They also insured the ship for £16,000. Recently the Government returned the ship to the Dutchman and gave him £13,000 to re-equip her. Of the £13,000, the Dutchman spent £8,000. He has now sold the ship for £26,000.

AUTUMN ANNUALS

Robed in gold and crimson gay,
Now the old plants slip away,
Done, their labors of the year;
Death, or seeming death, draws near.
Soon will come the touch of frost,
When we'll think of them as lost.

Did they struggle all in vain?
Brave the wind and hail the rain
To no purpose? Were they doomed
To oblivion when they'd bloomed?
Or, from sleep will they arise
Under next year's springtime skies?

Futile, every human aid,
As we watch them age and fade.
Soon the killing winds will blow,
Followed by the soothing snow,
But the seeded earth will be
Rich with bloom eternally.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

On what date do Negroes observe Emancipation Day?

The anniversary of their emancipation from slavery is the only date widely observed by colored people in the United States as a peculiarly racial holiday.

This event, however, is not universally commemorated among American Negroes on the same date, owing to the fact that emancipation did not result from a single act but from a series of legislative and executive acts stretching over a period of years.

January 1 is the date most widely observed by Negroes as Emancipation Day. That was the date in 1863 on which President Lincoln proclaimed the slaves free in all the States and parts of States then in rebellion.

September 22, the date of the "preliminary emancipation proclamation" in 1862, is also widely observed by Negroes as Emancipation Day. Another date observed to some extent is December 18, the date in 1865 on which Secretary of State Seward certified that the 13th Amendment had become part of the Constitution.

Some Negroes observe as Emancipation Day the date on which the 13th Amendment was ratified by their State or the date on which slavery was actually abolished in their State.

In Texas the traditional date of Emancipation Day is June 13 (known locally the "June Teenth" or "Juneteenth"), that being the date in 1865 on which the Federal commander, General Gordon Granger, published a proclamation at Galveston suspending all Confederate civil officers, re-establishing the Federal authority and telling the slaves that they were free. By coincidence, June 19 was the date in 1862 on which Congress passed an act prohibiting slavery in the Federal Territories.

From 1835 until about 1875 the colored people in New York and other northeastern States celebrated on August 15, the date in 1834 on which Great Britain proclaimed the abolition of slavery in the British West Indies.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer—

Birthday Felicitations

To Wm. Henry Bottum, affectionately known to all as "Cap", birthday greetings will be in order on September 24th, and though not able to make a personal visit and offer my sincere wishes, I take this opportunity through the medium of your paper of wishing the one and only Cap Bottum on his 81st anniversary every sincere and hearty wish.

Personally, I feel that as an intimate friend for many years, the great secret of "Cap's" wonderful activity, is his love for the things that are Nature's gift to all mankind, the "Great Outdoors", and I can just about see him, getting all set for the "Hunting Camp" — which if I am not mistaken will be near a record of sixty unbroken years.

And while we are on the subject of birthdays, I should like to add that Cap has just returned from Bobcaygeon where, with members of the family, and friends numbering the grand total of forty, celebrated the 86th birthday of his "young" brother Ab.

They simply don't grow old in Belleville or Bobcaygeon, and how could anyone who is fortunate enough to live in either of these Ontario beauty spots.

So to both these "youngsters" it is a privilege and a pleasure to send congratulations, and every sincere wish that "The Great Ruler" of us all will spare them both many years and give to them that greatest of all gifts—Health.

Your old friend,
E. C. Eatly,
Montreal, Que.

Squatters Form An Association

Vancouver, Sept. 23 —(CP)— In a dim, candle-lit mess hall at the Little Mountain army camp, squatters who took possession of abandoned huts last week met during the weekend.

Two announcements came from the meeting. First, the group of 11 squatters and their [illegible] announced formation of the "Little Mountain S[illegible] Association," and then issued a definite ultimatum:

"We stay here until we get living quarters as good or better than what we've got."

Women will play an important part in the association. Three were elected members of a "visiting committee" to negotiate with authorities for resumption of water and electric services for the huts.

"The powers that be are far more afraid of determined women than they are of any man," Mrs. Effie Jones, representing the Tenants' and Home Owners' Association, told the veterans and their wives.

Johnny Cox, elected president, criticized veterans organizations for lack of action in housing problems and said: "The Canadian Legion has had its chance. Now we want something else."

During the weekend the squatters became wards of the University of British Columbia with the announcement that surplus army huts at the camp had been released to the university for housing student-veterans.

University authorities said, however, that no attempt would be made to dislodge the squatters.

COMMUTERS AWAIT WORD

New York, Sept. 23 — (AP) — Three hundred thousand commuters and officials of New York City and the Long Island area waited word today from members of District 50, United Mine Workers (A.F.L.), on whether the Long Island Railroad will be struck at 12:01 a.m. tomorrow. About 300 Long Island trainmen and ticket collectors seek rule changes — an eight-hour day, time and a half for overtime, and two and three-week annual vacations.

FIND ICELAND SPAR IN DESERTED VALLEY

Capetown, Sept. 23 (CP) — A large new deposit of Iceland spar —the world's most valuable polarizing mineral, has been found in a deserted valley of the Kraai River, between Barkly East and Herschel in Cape Province.

Most of the bombsights used in the Second Great War were fitted with polarizers made from South African spar, all of which was produced in the Kenhardt district of the Kalahari desert.

200 WINDOWS SMASHED

Sault Ste. Marie, Sept. 23 — (CP) — Much needed housing accommodation in this area will be delayed by damage to material and equipment caused by a gang of hoodlums who went on a rampage friday night. Two hundred windows were smashed in a local lumber mill in what the chief of police cites as the worst example of wanton destruction he has ever seen.

ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF BASIC HEALTH DIET

Four eggs and 1 1-2 pounds of meat, fish or poultry per person per week is the allotment proposed by nutrition authorities, for consideration by the U. S. Senate. This amount of protein (and fat) of animal origin is fully adequate for optimal nutrition, provided the diet includes reasonable amounts of carbohydrate (starch and sugar) from vegetable and grain or cereal sources, and, of course, the essential vitamins and minerals.

If people who now consume more meat than that decide to be satisfied with just their fair allotment, there would be ample market for all the meat and eggs produced but consumption would be more equitably distributed.

Incidentally, it is selfish indulgence, selecting and paying a premium for luxury beef—the grade called choice or prime, produced by heavy grain-feeding. This high priced meat is of course fatter than the ordinary grade called good, but in everything except fat the good grade is of higher priced choice or prime grade beef.

The rancher, farmer or feeder produces this luxury grade of beef by grain-feeding because he gets a higher price per pound. Extra meat thus produced takes a considerable amount of grain which would otherwise be milled for human food, or used to increase milk (butter and cheese) production.

At present, said Henry C. Sherman, whose textbook "Chemistry of Food and Nutrition" (Macmillan) is standard, in his Mary Swartz Rose Memorial Lecture (N.Y. Academy of Medicine, Feb. 8, '46), too large a proportion of American people tend to spend too large a part of their purchasing power for sugar and for grain-fed meats and fats.

This economic extravagance and waste may be adjusted in one or both of two ways, Sherman suggests: (1) Government which entered largely into food management temporarily during the war, might do so again, and permanently, in the interest of better nutrition of the whole population of the country, and conceivably also of other peoples, to promote peace and good will. (2) Consumers, if made aware of the situation might remedy it by voluntary moderation of their demands for grain-fed meats, and for fats and sugar.

People in Europe, India and China, subsisting on famine diet and without any assurance against starvation in the weeks and months ahead, think and act the way they do because they are human like us. We well fed, healthy, secure - feeling Canadians do not think or act rationally when our diet is sharply restricted for a few months—even though we know we can have all we want to eat as soon as the sentence, the hunger strike or the experiment is finished.

Why tell people so many funny remedies for poison ivy? Just tell them to rub a little.... (A. W. H.)

Answer—No, no, no—please, folks, no more poison ivy remedies. I find there are as many sovereign remedies as there are people affected. So the voting is closed. We'll have to worry along now with the handful of remedies and preventive measures described in the pamphlet on "Ivy Poisoning," mailed on written request (not a clipping) if you inclose stamped self addressed envelope.

Tinnitus

Please give your exercises for ringing in the ears. (W. K. A.)

Answer—You will find the exercises described in the pamphlet "Deafness and Tinnitus" (tinnitus means head noises)—for copy send stamped self addressed envelope.

Make up Your Mind

In the disagreement about drafts, exposure etc., I believe the truth is in between. (L. F.)

Answer—Everybody to his own taste, said the o. w. etc. You are in a sad predicament. Maybe you can find your way out of it by studying the booklet "Call it Cri" —for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped self addressed envelope.

Girls May Swim

I was delighted to read in your column that a young woman need not refrain from dancing, horseback riding, tennis, swimming or other regular activity just because she is a young woman. My mother a follower of yours, now defers to your judgment, and I'm going to enjoy every hour of my vacation, which threatened to be spoiled. (Miss (T. P.)

Answer—How in thunder did your ma follow my column, yet retain the dear old fishwife superstition? I'm disappointed in her. Send stamped self addressed envelope and ask, in writing, for the pamphlet "Hygiene for Girls and Health for Women."

Looking Ahead in Ottawa

(By the Ottawa staff of The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Sept. 23 (CP)—Hon. Brooke Claxton, Health Minister, who has done the heavy work at the Paris Peace Conference, likely will lead the Canadian delegation at the forthcoming meeting of the United Nations Assembly at Lake Success, N.Y.

There is little doubt the Canadian delegation will include Foreign Minister St. Laurent, Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative external affairs critic and M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. Leader.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King likely will drop in on the meetings for a few days. It also is likely that the Canadian secretariat will be headed by L. B. (Mike) Pearson, new Undersecretary of State for External Affairs.

But Mr. Claxton, who has carried the Canadian ball at Paris, is being widely spoken of as the chief delegate to Lake Success and the man who will remain through the whole conference.

While the cabinet ministers, Mr. Graydon and Mr. Coldwell will provide the nucleus of Canada's all-party delegation it is expected several members of the Commons External Affairs Committee will be present.

With the assembly meeting in October it is possible that Mr. Pearson will go direct to Lake Success from the Washington Embassy which will be taken over by Hume Wrong.

Diplomatic: With the general understanding Mr. Justice T. C. (Tom) Davis, recently retired Canadian High Commissioner to Canberra, is going to remain in Canada's diplomatic service, much interest is being taken in his meeting this week with Foreign Minister St. Laurent.

It is widely stated that the former Saskatchewan jurist is going to accept the Moscow post which Dana Wilgress is understood to be leaving in three months.

This will mean that Mr. Wilgress will either come back to the east block as an aide to Mr. Pearson or go to Mexico to relieve Hugh S. Keenleyside who will be brought back to Ottawa.

Recruiting: Canada's three armed services have been quietly competing for recruits to bring their total peacetime strength to its maximum of 55,000 men. Posters are showing on billboards, newsphotographs have gone out showing batches of recruits moving to acceptance depots and all services have announced their post-war terms and conditions.

But within the next few weeks, it is reliably learned that a serious and energetic tri-service drive will be launched. Special appeals will be made to entice ex-servicemen back to the ranks.

In this connection, a recruiting officer said the other day that many men who said on their discharge they never wanted to see a uniform again have looked at civvy street and decided the service life wasn't so bad after all and are re-joining the colors in "surprising numbers."

18 Persons Meet Accidental Death During Weekend

(By The Canadian Press)

In weekend mishaps across eastern Canada 18 persons met death, the majority in motorcar accidents. Among them were two double fatalities — a shooting affray at Windsor listed as murder and suicide and a car-train crash at Delhi, Ont.

The total included eight highway or traffic deaths, according to reports to The Canadian Press.

In the shooting incident at Windsor, police said John Roy Brooks, 44, shot and killed his wife and then himself Sunday in their suburban Sandwich East home. The couple had six children.

At Delhi, Edmont Pellitier, 35, of Welland and Ferdinand Champaigne, 45, Crowland, were killed when the car in which they were riding collided with a freight train in foggy weather.

Cornwall police said a manslaughter charge would be laid against Ernest Cooper, Montreal, as a result of a car accident near there Saturday in which Hudson DeMille, also of Montreal, was killed.

Other automobile deaths included: John Burnett, 55, of Connestogo, Ont., in an accident four miles north of Elmira; Wilfred Break, 48, a downtown Toronto streetcar - automobile collision; Otto Schroder, Toronto, killed near Oshawa, Ont.; Leonidas Auclair, 52, fatally injured on the highway between Granby and Waterloo, Que., and Blanche Parker, 15, in a bicycle-car collision at Halifax.

Two Drowning Victims.

Two drowning victims were William Bruton, 40, St. Catharines, whose body was recovered Sunday from the hydro canal at Niagara Falls, and William Burton, 45, Kapuskasing, drowned in a small creek on the outskirts of Sudbury Sunday.

At Goshen, N.S., the body of Allan Kell, 78, missing since Thursday, was found Saturday in nearby woods. Fire Captain Clarence Watson died Saturday in a Toronto hospital as a result of burns suffered at a warehouse fire last Monday.

At St. Thomas, W. T. Moral Woodford, 54, was killed when he attempted to board a moving train. He was dragged 35 feet.

At Windsor, Miss Mary Swann, 84, died in hospital as a result of a fall down a flight of stairs in her home.

Mrs. Victor Mohr died in hospital at Stratford Saturday night from burns received when she used coal oil to rekindle a kitchen fire.

NOMAD CHILDREN ENJOY CLASSES

Australia Teaches Youngsters of Wandering Aboriginals

Ernabella, South Australia, Sept. 23 (AP) — A school for children of wandering Aboriginals is conducted in this little settlement, 400 miles north of Adelaide, by Ernest Trudinger, an Australian fluent in the native dialects.

Instruction is given in the Aboriginal tongues by Trudinger, who teaches writing, arithmetic, drawing and singing, elementary carpentry and gardening.

Their instruction varies according to their ages, and on the average there are five classes of five pupils each week. Trudinger does most of the teaching but sometimes leaves classes of smaller children in the care of his older and more apt pupils.

He says favorite subjects with the children are drawing and singing. When they sing, they are so naturally sensitive to pitch, rarely is any one of them out of tune.

As a return for his teaching, Trudinger has picked a fund of information from the children about birds, animals and bushcraft.

Flights to Japan Keep Airmen Busy

Auckland, N.Z., Sept. 23 (CP) —Nearly 250,000 miles have been flown by No. 41 Squadron, Royal New Zealand Air Force, since March in maintaining the only direct link between New Zealand and the Dominion's occupation force in Japan. In spite of exceedingly unstable weather which prevails over this route, a difficult one for flying, the squadron has had to jettison only one mail load.

Several typhoons have been encountered, necessitating the diversion of the aircraft to landing places far off their course. The normal route has been from Auckland, New Zealand, to Norfolk Island, Brisbane, Cloncurry and Darwin, in northern Australia, and the islands of Morotai, Laoag and Okinawa, to Kanoya, in Japan. The squadron's Dakotas have carried 15,000 pounds in passenger weight, 65,000 lbs. of mail and 14,000 lbs. of freight.

Cornish Folk Enjoy "Mr. Knill's Games"

St. Ives, England, Sept. 23 (CP) —Once every five years, on the feast of St. James, the Borough of St. Ives plays "Mr. Knill's Games."

This year the ceremonies were again observed as prescribed in th will of Johannes Knill, former mayor, constable and customs collector of the town, who died in 1801.

To the strains of a fiddler wearing a special cockade, ten little girls under ten, wearing specially provided hair ribbons, danced before the 50 foot high granite pyramid Mr. Knill intended to be his mausoleum but which was never used as such.

The will directs the children to dance for "at least a quarter of an hour between 10 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon," from which each receives 10s ($2.)

The fiddler and two widows "over 64 years of age" who witness the proceedings and certify they have been duly performed each receive £1 ($4.)

Money was also provided for ribbons and cockade while a gift of five pounds was given to the St. Ives couple, widow or widower who had "reared to the age of ten or upwards the greatest number of children without parochial assistance.".

A "marriage portion" of £10 goes to the local bride "most worthy because of her duty and kindness to her parents and friends."

Other gifts include £5 each to the woman who knitted the best fishnets and to the best packer or curer of fish.

Elephants Cause Night of Terror

Capetown, Sept. 23 (CP) — A young married woman and her son recently spent a night of terror and suspense while two fully grown elephants trampled around their lonely cottage at the edge of the Knysna forests in Cape Province.

The woman, Mrs. A. Betha, was alone in the cottage with her young son when a terrific crash on the roof caused plaster and bricks to fall. She peered into the darkness and saw two massive elephants trampling around the cottage.

From dusk to dawn the elephants paraded around the house. One uprooted a tree and the other hurled a heavy branch on to the roof causing extensive damage.

With the first streaks of dawn, the elephants broke branches from the trees near the house and then disappeared into the forest.

Poor Grouse Season --Except For Grouse

Glasgow, Sept. 23 (CP) — Poor weather, depleted stocks of birds on the moors and price controls combined to take the punch out of the grouse season in Scotland.

Scores of shooting lodges were not opened this year. Not a shot was fired on opening day on the Wigtownshire moors and elsewhere there was little activity.

Hotels which before the war bought grouse at 30 shillings to £2 a brace ($6 to $8) early in the season didn't serve the birds this year.

"It was worth buying grouse at 30 shillings a brace when we had a la carte menus," said one hotel manager, "but it isn't an economic proposition to include the birds, even at their controlled price of 12 shillings a brace, in a fixed-price menu." The most a restaurant can charge for a three-course meal is five shillings.

Nipawin Farmer Builds Success On Greatest Variety of Clean Seed

Nipawin, Sask., Sept. 23 (CP) —An Alger story entitled "success with seeds" would be a fitting biography for H. G. Neufeld, 49-year-old farmer-business man of this Carrot River country about 120 miles northeast of Saskatoon.

In 1918, following his father's death, Mr. Neufeld borrowed enough money to farm 40 acres in this district, dig a well, build a shack and buy a binder for $15. He sold it ten years later for $25 in better shape than when he purchased it.

In his first attempt he planted two bushels of Marquis wheat and similar amounts of registered Henneben barley and registered Victory oats.

But at harvest time he discovered that varieties other than those he had sown showed in the grain which was in bad condition. He decided then to do his own purifying.

Two-Year Task

He selected 100 head of grain, planted it in special rows and after two years of slow, backbreaking work, weeding out the off-grains, he was granted top status for his grain seed.

At exhibits in following years he won provincial and Dominion championships for wheat, oats and barley and in Chicago in 1937 he won a championship prize for his oats.

One year previously he had purchased ten pounds of registered peas and in 1938 he shipped out 21 carloads of peas grown from the original ten pounds.

Today, he has seed-cleaning plants in Nipawin and nearby Codette. Last year he handled 140 carloads of seed, 40 of which were shipped through U.N.R.R.A. to bolster Europe's grain growing. In addition, last year he shipped 1,100 less-than-carload-lots to points throughout western Canada.

He calls this district the "Garden of Canada" and claims that in no other place in the Dominion do farmers grow such a variety of seeds. He mentions sweet clover, brome grass, crester wheat grass, timothy, rape seed, red clover, and five varieties of peas.

Third Suspect Implicated In Robbery Arrested

Regina, Sask., Sept. 23 (CP)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police here reported the arrest yesterday near Sheho, Sask., of the third of a trio of men suspected of being implicated in the robbery Sept. 14 of $39,000 from the Bank of Montrel at Nipawin, Sask.

Police said William Dixon of Hamilton, Ont., was arrested earlier in Hamilton and Stanley Kruchka of Brantford, Ont., was arrested in Brantford in connection with the robbery.

Pete Minosky was arrested in bush country near Sheho 80 miles northeast of Regina. The R.C.M.P. said they recovered $600 of the loot hidden in the bush near where Minosky is alleged to have been hiding.

R.C.M.P. said their investigations led them to believe that the three men had driven to Saskatchewan early this month in an auto allegedly stolen in Ontario.

R.C.M.P. said their investigation revealed that Dixon left Saskatchewan in an automobile, recovered at Kenora, Ont., while Kruchka and Minosky left by train.

Minosky was said to have stopped at Winnipeg where he purchased a motorcycle and returned to the Sheho district where he was arrested.

The trio will be returned to Prince Albert pending trial, R. C. M.P. said.

4 Keep up my insurance;
5 Build up my savings account.

These five points mean conservation—the first requisite for personal security—the first requisite for national security. When you shape your future on these five points, you shape the future of the nation.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, entered the church to the strains of "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin, played by Miss Bernice Robinson, a cousin of the groom. She presented a charming picture in a floor-length gown of white brocaded organza featuring a sweetheart neckline and full skirt. Mrs. Bruce Stapley read a report in the Blue Book on the new church built at Lake St. Peter, near Maynooth.

On Sunday afternoon the annual Rally Day was observed at Eggleton church, with the Sunday School and Church Service combined. Members of the primary class sang "Golden Days". Misses Donna Stapley and Myrtle Wannamaker rendered a pleasing duet. Members of the Boys' Class read the Scripture lessons and collected the offering. Members of the Girls' Class sang a chorus.

Charles Bridges described the poster "Suffering with Christ and following Him in The Kingdom of God".

Rev. K. Stewart gave a splendid address on the text "Behold I send you forth".

Questions and Answers

Readers may direct their questions, giving their names and address and mentioning the name of this paper to Information Branch, WPTB, 490 Sussex Street, Ottawa, Ont.

Q.—After a 48-hour stay in the United States would I be allowed to bring food back into Canada to the value of $5? If so, how much could be tinned fruit and would I have to surrender coupons for it in Canada?

A.—Yes .. you would be permitted to bring canned fruit into Canada. You would not be required to give up coupons for it here as it was purchased in the U.S. and is not rationed there.

Q.—I wish to sell my car... It is a 1935 Plymouth deluxe sedan. Would you please send me the proper papers to fill out and the ceiling price.

A.—Both ceiling price application forms and statement of sale forms are available at any WPTB office. You may either call in or write for them. The required triplicate forms have been mailed to you direct.

Q.—My son was working for a farmer for the months of July and August. When he came home I found that they had taken all the canning sugar coupons out of his ration book. Are they allowed to take these extra coupons, and if not is there any way I may get them back?

A.—No .. definitely not. The farmer for whom you son was employed had no right to take these coupons unless he received written permission from your son. As far as getting the coupons returned we suggest that your son contact this farmer and point out to him that he was not entitled to canning sugar coupons without written permission and come to some agreement about getting the equivalent amount of sugar.

Q.—Is there a ceiling price on repairs? I had my radio repaired and feel that the price charged was exhoritant.

Q.—I have purchased my fuel from the same company for years. This year they charged 50c a ton service charge when the coal was delivered. Is this permitted?

A.—Some companies are permitted to make a service charge due to the distance which the coal must be hauled. However, we do not think the company where you made your purchase has received such permission and we are passing your letter along for investigation.

Q.—Why is there such a shortage of salt now when we have had ample supplies all through the war years?

A.—It's the old story over again. It was rumored that there may be a shortage of salt later in the year if certain strikes were not settled soon. The rumor soon spread and women all over the country rushed out to the nearest store and bought up as much salt as the grocer would sell. Consequently, some housewives have enough salt stored away for months and others have none. There doesn't seem to be any way to cure the "hoarding fever."

Reconstructing lives is the Salvation Army's job—and yours
We cannot suffer little ones, denied their birthright by folly or neglect, to face a hopeless future.
Canada needs all her citizens. Reclamation of broken lives is a "reconstruction" job.
Remember Him who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."
Wherever there is an unfortunate child, an unwed mother, a prisoner anxious to "go straight", a wastrel for whom there is hope, an old man or old woman whom life has cast aside . . . there YOU can help in building a better Canada.
After war, the need for reconstruction in The Army's work on the Home Front is pressing. Give generously.

STRENUOUS FIGHT EXPECTED BEFORE N.Z. ELECTION

No Third-Party Threat Seen as Nationalists Challenge Labor Regime

By J. C. GRAHAM
(C. P. Correspondent)

Auckland, N.Z., Sept. 23 (CP)—With the present parliament's term of office drawing to a close all interest in New Zealand is centring in the general election to be held on November 27, the 11th. anniversary of the Labor government's accession to power.

There is every indication that the election campaign will be one of the most strenuously contested in the country's history. At present the Labor and National parties between them hold every seat in the House of Representatives. Labor holds 44 seats and National 35. Both parties are making strong bids for an electoral victory and for the first time both will contest every seat.

So far there is no sign of a strong third party. At the last election in 1943 two other fairly large groups contested many of the seats. One was the Democratic Labor party, formed by J. A. Lee, formerly the influential leader of the Labor party's left wing, on his expulsion from the party. The other was a large group of independents who opposed party politics and who banded together to present their aims to the electorate.

Neither of these groups won a single seat in the House. Mr. Lee, who fared best of any of them, polled only 3,951 votes against his Labor opponent's 10,010.

Nothing has been heard recently of the Independent group, but Mr. Lee's dynamic personality has kept the Democratic Labor party alive. It has announced that it will contest some seats in the coming election but is unlikely to conduct as large a campaign as at the last election.

If it contests only a few seats the Labor party's chances should be correspondingly improved. While the Democratic Labor party won no seats at the last election it captured much of the left-wing vote and lost Labor crucial votes against the Nationalists in closely-contested seats.

The Communists did not contest any seats in the last election but will put up a limited number of candidates in November. The party has announced it will support the Labor party for other seats, although Labor has rejected any form of electoral alliance. No Communist has ever been elected to the New Zealand House of Representatives.

There have been four by-elections since the last general election. In each the vote has been somewhat more in favor of the National Party than at the general election, but only one seat has changed its party allegiance. This was at the last by-election where a small Labor majority was changed into a small Nationalist lead.

The only other change has been the death last month of Mr. H. Atmore, the only Independent in the House. A former cabinet minister he had stood at recent elections as an Independent not attached to any group, but had voted with Labor on policy matters.

HOUSING QUEUES HAUNT OFFICIALS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Emergency Accommodation Sought by 10,000 in Two Largest Urban Areas

Johannesburg, Sept. 23 (CP) — Outside the branch offices of the housing section of the controller of manpower, long queues gather daily in search of accommodation. Newlyweds, housewives with children in their arms and older married couples wait patiently for emergency assistance allocated by the controller to cases he thinks most deserving.

In the two biggest urban areas of South Africa — Johannesburg and Capetown — 10,000 people have applied for emergency housing. The government estimates that 164,000 houses are needed at once and that it will take eight years to build them.

Emergency housing is allotted on a basis of a two-room suite for a married couple with two children with a monthly rental limit of £16 ($64) with preference given to former service personnel.

Hotels and boarding houses are jammed and many of the better class hotels refuse to quote monthly or weekly rates. Guests may stay on indefinitely but must pay by the day, often adding up to double the monthly figure.

Real estate agents have little to offer and black market operations in housing have been reported, largely among private owners who charge "premiums" for renting houses or apartments. Severe court penalties have cut down these transactions.

One of the government efforts to overcome housing shortage for ex-servicemen has been the conversion of former army camps near towns into a form of garden city, with communal living and dining rooms.

These projects have been most successful and several journalists who live in them say they like the life, that communal meals are cheap if one wants them (there is no compulsion) and that the old army, air force and navy contacts have made the transition to peacetime smoother than if they had to live among the civilians, many of whom were opposed to, or apathetic about, the war effort.

The government has also undertaken to build 6,000 low-cost houses annually and subsidizes municipal housing programs. However, there have been complaints that these houses have a higher capital cost and higher redemption charges to the purchaser than comparable houses erected by private enterprise.

Although bears have been shot in the vicinity this fall, this was the first to be sighted on the Tompkins property.

What were presumed to be the tracks of a moose were seen on property of Walter Henley, near Millbridge on Monday. About a year ago, similar tracks were reported on other property in that district.

British Industry Well on Way To Full Reconversion

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 23. (CP) — Slightly more than a year after major hostilities ended, British industry is well on the way to 100-per-cent reconversion, with huge quantities of civilian goods being produced despite persistent material and manpower shortages in some important trades.

While fully-normal peacetime operation is not likely to be reached by Dec. 31, the government's target date, wartime austerity is obviously giving way to peacetime plenty. Downtown shop windows are jammed with things that couldn't be bought even six months ago.

But the change is coming more slowly than many people expected, the emphasis on building up exports to obtain foreign exchange keeping much industrial production off the home market, and there is a relatively slow recovery of output of consumer goods such as clothing, shoes and furniture.

It is for these things that home demand is greatest, and continued shortages are causing widespread grumbling.

The war brought higher pay and better working conditions in metals and chemicals, essential in wartime, and they find it easier to attract new workers in a time of labor scarcity than do the consumer industries.

"Unless more people can be persuaded to work, or there is a reversal of the drive for shorter hours, the only hope of receiving a reasonable supply of consumption goods within a period of several years seems to lie in increased mechanization, resulting in a large saving of personnel," wrote the Manchester Guardian.

Goodmans Beaten by Toronto Lizzies 11-1 in First Game Of Semi-Finals OASA Playdowns

Game Played at Acorn Park, Toronto, and Winners Show Lots of Power; Second Game Here Wednesday

By C. D. T.

Goodmans are one game down in their quest for another junior "A" O.A.S.A. Provincial title, the result of dropping their contest to Toronto Lizzies at Acorn Park in Toronto on Saturday afternoon. The score was 11-1 and the second game will be played in Belleville on Wednesday at the Alemite field. The locals have no excuses because they were outhit and outfielded and did not in any way look like the team that ousted Oshawa and Kingston. Apparently the team tightens up when they play in Toronto because last year they were beaten in their first game and then came back to win the round. Probably they can again but they will have to play much better and more wide-awake ball for the Lizzies are a smart club with good pitching and a fair amount of hitting strength.

Don Boyle did not pitch his usual good game after the third frame, and after getting men on the runways, Lizzies always had enough power to hit in the clutch and drive home the counters. The fielders especially the outfielders played the batters wrong and as a result two home runs were scored that could have easily been kept to singles or doubles at the most. The kids, too, were handicapped in the field in which they played. It is small and on some balls the ground rules allows no plays to be made, which would be easy outs on the local diamonds. The game was late in starting due to many of the Lizzies playing juvenile hard ball in Brantford and the convener allowed the time to drag on and it was well past six o'clock when the game was finished under the lights.

Got Eleven Runs

The Lizzies got eleven runs on ten hits while Belleville counted one on two hits that were allowed by Greenberg. Don Boyle whiffed nine of the opposition while Greenberg got nine by the same method. Each of the hurlers walked five. It was a scoreless game until the third, when Lizzies pounded out four runs and practically won the game. Boyle walked Greenberg and on two hits, two fly balls to the outfield and a fielder's choice four runs trickled across the platter.

They were held scoreless in the fourth but broke out again for another five in the fifth, when two hits, a walk, and a home run accounted for the tallies. They also picked up single runs in the sixth, seventh and eighth. Belleville scored their lone run in the fourth on a two-base error and a hit by Donovan. Spafford got the only other hit in the first frame. Greenberg, who hurled for the Lizzies worked a curve, drop and fast ball to perfection and had the locals swinging. He was inclined to be wild but the losers could not wait him out and they hit a lot of bad balls, that made the winning hurler look pretty good.

Had Fair Speed

Boyle on the other hand had a fair amount of speed, his change of pace was working to perfection but the Lizzies hopped on his fast one when he was forced to throw it. He was never ahead of the batter and he was not given very brilliant support in the field. Klein and Buchkowski hit-homers and they were the only two extra base hits of the game. The Lizzies are brilliant fielders and if the locals want to win their next game they must get in and get a few hits because if a ball ? anywhere near a fielder he is sure to come up with it. The lineups:

Toronto Lizzies: Shadlesky 2nd; Sherky 3rd; Hazzard cf; Markowitz 1st; Cormack ss; Tepperman rf, and c; Bolsky c; Klein lf; Greenberg p; Hochberg lf; Buchkowski rf.

Score by innings:

Belleville	000 100 000—	1	2	2
Toronto	001 041 11x—	11	10	2

Batteries: Belleville: Boyle and Green; Toronto, Greenberg and Bolsky, Tepperman.

Umpires: Bawden, Belleville, plate; Rickman, Toronto, bases.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

Don Barrett's Goodman's softball juniors ran into a decided snag in Toronto on Saturday evening when they went down to defeat before the Toronto Lizzies, Queen City juniors champs by an 11-1 score. Now they have their backs to the wall when they play the starry visitors in the second game of the two-of-three series at the Alemite Field on Wednesday afternoon.

• • •

Don Boyle hurled one of the poorest games of his career, according to reports from Acorn Park. The young chucker was nicked for ten hits—and that is something for a kid of his ability. The Lizzies, it was stated, are place hitters and like Wee Willie Keeler believed in "putting the ball where the fielders ain't."

• • •

The Lizzies' hurler stood our prides on their ears, their eyeballs and their haunches throughout the joust, allowing them but two miserable taps. But the Goodman's are not downhearted. They feel they have rid themselves of a bad game and are confident that 1945 history will repeat itself. They were badly beaten in Toronto in the first game last year but went on to win the next two and eventually the championship. Wednesday will tell.

• • •

Don Barrett, starry forward of the Belleville Redmen and junior hockey squads, leaves the city in the near future for Boston where he will report to the Boston Olympics, farm team of the Bruins. Barrett will get a workout with the Olympics and Bruins and then will go to Stratford where he will join the O.H.A. Junior "A" squad of that city.

• • •

One of the scoring aces of Belleville hockey teams last winter, Don received tryout agreements from both the Detroit Redwings and the Boston Bruins. After lengthy consideration and plenty of advice, he decided to accept the Bruins offer. He is a fast tricky skater, packs plenty of speed and very effective around the nets.

• • •

He started to play in organized hockey in 1934 with the Belleville Ki-Y loop, and has a number of championship crests in his war-bag. In 1943-44 he starred with his hockey buddy, Jack Wardaugh on the St. Mikes team that won the COSSA championship. He has played on six championship teams, four winning the COSSA and two winning interschool titles. Last winter he played a number of games with the Belleville Redmen in the Van Horne series before going back to the junior ranks. He was top sniper in the latter team, and scored several goals while playing with the senior squad.

• • •

Don is a likeable young man, popular with players and fans alike and his career on the upper brackets of hockey will be watched with more than passing interests by hundreds of fans in this city. He has managed the Goodman softball juniors this season, and his loyalty to his team, prevented him from leaving for hockey training some time ago. "I guess I'll hang around and see the boys win that softball title, before I don skates," he grinned. "I'll feel better if I know they have that championship tucked away."

• • •

Dame Nature assisted by Jupe Pluvius smiled generously on the Belleville Kiwanis baseball squad on Saturday, when they were rained out of their second game with the Ottawa Wrightvilles in Kingston. Reports from Kingston on Saturday morning stated that the Megaffin Stadium was in good shape and that only a light drizzle of rain was falling.

• • •

Both teams put in an appearance, the Kiwanis club leaving here by bus shortly after twelve noon. The Ottawa squad was already in Kingston when the local lads arrived. By three o'clock rain was falling steadily and the diamond was ruled not in condition to play. The teams waited the conventional 30 minutes and then the game was definitely postponed.

• • •

Ontario Baseball Association executive Ken Colling, and Conveners Ernie Summers, Belleville and Bill Ayoub were present at the stadium and ironed matters out to the satisfaction of all. There was some suggestions that, due to the lengthy layoff which the winner of this series will be forced to undergo, to make the Belleville-Ottawa series three-out-of-five. This the Belleville officials refused to consider. Hull was not fussy about the suggestion either.

• • •

However the teams will meet in the Megaffin Stadium, Kingston, next Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. A large number of Belleville fans were on hand Saturday, despite the rain and came home disappointed. Incidentally, it was noted that Cam Johnson, Ottawa umpire was not slated to call the game on Saturday. Eddie Schrieder who was present was surprised at the move, but no explanation was forthcoming by the Ottawa team. In this corner's opinion, Johnson's arbiting both behind the plate and on the bases left nothing to be desired. There were definitely no official complaints from the Belleville team.

• • •

Trenton Flyers and Swacos meet again this evening at the Alemite Field in the second game of their semi-final series for the Belleville Senior Baseball League championship. Swacos hung a 4-1 defeat on the Flyers tails in their first joust and Moose Matthews and his buckaroos aren't feeling too pleased about it. The game should be well under way right now as it was scheduled to start at 4.30 The teams clash again on Thursday afternoon at the same time, and if remaining games are necessary, dates will be announced then.

• • •

In the meantime, Convener Ernie Summers informs us that no games nor dates have been set as yet by the OBA for the waiting Batawa and Latta teams. Both squads won their respective OBA playdown rounds and now await winners in other sections of the country.

• • •

President Don Thomas, of the Belleville Senior Loop announced today that due to this playoff, he will order the Batawa-Juniors postponed game played this week. If Bata wins, that will force a game between Latta and the St. Louis kids to decide fourth slot and the right to meet Bata in the semi-finals.

• • •

There were strange mysterious goings-on at the Fair Grounds over the weekend. A grey-haired figure clad in purple trunks and white singlet, his sparse locks flowing out into the breeze like a horse's mane, fled more or less swiftly along the track, while keen-eyed clockers sat on the rails, time-pieces in hand.

• • •

This Mercury-heeled 1946 version of Father Time puffed, panted, and sweated with a battery of trainers and managers, urging him along at top speed. "How did I do, boys," he puffed after one heat, sweat streaming down his face, and his abdomen heaving like a short choppy Atlantic roll. "One hour, two minutes and 51 seconds over the world's record. You're doin' all right."

• • •

Throwing a gaily-colored Navajo blanket over the gaunt perspiring figure, his handlers taped his fetlocks, rubbed his knobkerry knees, gave him three slugs of apple-juice (unspiked) and walked him as far as the Trenton Air Station and back.

• • •

Then they led him to the starter's line again. A bull-whip suddenly flicked out like a snake's tongue. It gouged neatly but painfully a chunk of rump from the 1946 Charley Paddock and he leaped away like a frightened gazelle. As he flashed over the finish line of the 100 yard dash much later, one of his clockers yelled at him. "You did it in an hour that time. You're comin'. But he did not hear it. Round the track he went, leaping gracefully and with legs shooting out like rusty pistons. Three times he navigated the track, a determined look on his straining face and his grey locks waving defiance to the breeze.

• • •

Then he cut across country. He jumped a fence with a four foot clearance, sailed over a twenty-foot pile of straw and steeplechased the new horse barns. Last seen he was heading in the general direction of Baptiste Lake.

• • •

It is hoped he has returned today for the prize sports attraction at the Belleville Fair Tuesday is that 100-yard dash between Mayor Frank Follwell and ex-Mayor Harry Rollins. The foot duel is scheduled for eight-thirty in tights and under lights.

TO MEET INDIA'S NEWSPRINT NEEDS

New Delhi, Sept. 23 (CP) —India will receive during 1946 about 32,500 tons of newsprint, as a result of the efforts of the newsprint delegation, led by Devadas Gandhi, which recently visited the United Kingdom, Canada, Sweden, Finland and the United States. Although this quantity is nearly double that which had been expected, it falls short of the average pre-war consumption by about 8,000 tons.

Existing newspapers will be able to continue without any serious reduction in size or circulation till the end of this year. It will not be possible to grant permission for new newspapers except in rare cases.

Montreal, Sept. 23—(CP) — If the hockey season keeps getting any longer don't be surprised if the National Hockey League squads have to do their early tuning up somewhere up north. If the Eskimos would take the game up now, everything would work out fine and the teams could take a barnstorming tour under the midnight sun.

Montreal Canadiens started their pre-season training at the Forum here last Thursday, and the weatherman promptly provided some 80-degree weather that wouldn't be amiss when the baseball teams start their spring training down south in the spring.

Characters steaming on the streets outside didn't get a chance to find out whether it was any cooler inside the igloo, however, since only newspapermen and others on legitimate business are being allowed in to the practice sessions for the first few days.

The slightly unseasonable hockey weather hasn't put any crimps in the activities with Dick Irvin's hopefuls going all out and raising a faint smile on that worthy's stern visage. The youngsters especially, with the proverbial old school try that makes them go through — well, heat—and high water, gave their all.

Hockey Housing

Around this crowded burg, the thing starting to worry hockey promoters is the housing situation Under the residence rule of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, a player has to be a 'bona fide' resident by Nov. 1 of the place he plans to do his ice caperings. ings. With living accommodations about as scarce as beer at a Sunday school picnic, the big problem is — what will happen to the puck type who just can't find a place to lay his restriction-baffled head?

Imports always have been the delight of a coach's heart, but if too many players run afoul of the rule there might be a partial return to the naive old days when some centres actually took pride in boasting they had "home brew" teams.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

New York, Sept 23. (AP)—The new Pro-Basketball Association of America, in which Toronto has entered a team, isn't expecting many battles but it has obtained an Irish ballyhoo artist Walt Kennedy, to handle its publicity. Only in Chicago is there much likelihood of serious opposition for the new cage league. The established national basketball league has a club there and it already has hired George Mikan, who "made" college basketball in the stadium, to head a club that will operate in another arena . . .

One of publicator Kennedy's first duties is to spread the news that Pat Kennedy, the celebrated football whistle tooter, will be referee-in-chief of the new basketball league. "I hope," Walt adds, "I don't get as many boos as the other Kennedy."

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

When fifty million bridge players can be wrong, something should be done about it. That I will. To those who will listen to reason, the cause can be seen. The remedy is easy.

Most players started in the midde without knowing why they did what they did. Some started at a beginning that was not truly sound. No wonder their progress is always in doubt.

The correct basis for bridge is simple and a compliment to plain reason. That is Horse Sense. Let yourself go and see what you should really know to understand and enjoy bridge.

Each of the four players is entitled to his average (one-fourth) of what there is in a pack of cards. Thus, before the game starts, each player knows what his partner is expected to hold.

Right here is where you may stop me to exclaim: "But a player does not always have his average." Stop interrupting me like this and it will not be long before such a doubt will answer itself.

To tell your partner about your hand, use words from the bidding vocabulary. He expects you to have average. So, your bids tell him only what you have in excess of what he already expects.

There you have the main secret of the success of the soundest bidding system. You start with the assumption that each player is entitled to average. Bids tell what he holds in excess of expected.

♠K 10 6
♥A Q J 5
♦J 8 6 4
♣A 9

You start this hand with an opening bid of one heart. Are you giving your partner some mystic maze of magic misinformation? Nay. It is intelligent stuff for a partner who understands.

Says you: "Partner, I have better than average in everything you have a right to expect. Better than average in tricks; in big cards; in sure tricks; in hearts." Nor did you talk too much.

Hollywood Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Sept. 23. (AP)—Rin Tin Tin III has embarked on his film career, close to the movie industry's "Poverty Row", where his famed grandfather first appeared before the cameras.

Rin is a former war dog, having three battle stars to his credit. One paw was wounded in the battle of the Bulge, says his trainer, Lee Duncan. The five-year-old German shepherd is the barking image of his famed granddad.

"But," said Duncan, "Rin left off where Rin the Third is starting. He is that much smarter".

This became evident as I watched the dog in his first day of picture work. He went through his duties with better precision than most human actors.

Rin's return is no financial necessity for Duncan the original dog star made more than $500,000 for him in 10 years. But he has a reason for getting back into the grind of coaching a four-legged actor.

"It would be a crime to deprive this generation of the type of film their fathers enjoyed," he said. Rin's success is assured if the offers from novelty firms are any indicaiton. He has already posed for a set of bookends.

He's the east side New York guy who made such a splash in "The Killers". When I saw him on the set of "Desert Town", I was surprised to learn he is 32. He looks more like 25. And he talks nowhere as tough as he did in the picture. Sounds more like a Ph.D.

"I graduated from high school at 16," he explained. "Then I took physical education at New York University for a couple of years. But there wasn't enough to study, so I ran away with the circus". Then followed experience in night clubs, vaudeville, stage and now, the movies. And how does he like the movies?

"I'm fed up with it," he said "Don't misunderstand me—I do not dislike show business. I'm just fed up".

BILLY TAYLOR GOES TO DETROIT FOR H. WATSON

Complex Player Trade Involves Nine Players and Seven Teams

Toronto, Sept. 23 (CP) — A complex player trade involving nine players and seven teams in the National, American and United States Hockey Leagues, was announced Saturday by Manager Conny Smythe of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

The Bisons obtained from Toronto left-winger Johnny Mahaffey and left-winger Gerald Brown who played last year with Indianapolis, Detroit's A. H. L. farm club. Brown was turned over to the Bisons after first coming to the Leafs from Detroit with Watson in the three-for-two trade between the Toronto and Detroit N.H.L. clubs.

Brown went to the Bisons with Mahaffey, last year with Pittsburgh, after the original deal of sending Pete Backor, another promising Hornet player, as the second man fell through. It was decided that Backor remain with the Hornets with Buffalo taking Brown instead.

The Hornets, as compensation for losing two of their highest scoring players, received from their parent club, the Leafs, Wilbur (Dutch) Hiller who came to Toronto from Montreal Canadiens as part of the Lynn deal. Canadiens have a working agreement with the Buffalo team.

Powell, who was recently obtained by the Leafs from Fort Worth for $5,000 will be sent to Omaha by Detroit, Smythe said.

Taylor's trade came as a surprise to Toronto fans as last year he hd one of his best years since joining the club direct from the junior Oshawa Generals in the 1939-40 season. Last year, the 27-year-old Taylor assisted on 18 goals and scored 23 himself for his best goal-scoring record of his pro career. His complete N. H. L. scoring record is 66 goals and 118 assists.

WORLD TITLE AT STAKE HERE ON FRI. NIGHT

The world's heavyweight wrestling champion, Wild Bill Longson, comes in to Belleville, next Friday night for what should be the greatest bout he has ever had in this city. Champion Longson has agreed to wrestle none other than Mr. Lee Henning the fans most-hated matman. Furthermore Longson has agreed to lay his official title on the line for this battle. With the approval of the National Wrestling Association, the match will be an actual world title affair and if that "Horrid" Henning should get in some of his terrific (and illegal) stuff it is just possible that Belleville fans will see wrestling history made here.

This Henning has so much real ruthlessness in his make-up that even such a mat master as the great Longson may find he has bitten off more than he can chew. On the other hand it is also at least equally possible that the Champion will give M'sieu Henning the greatest thrashing of his torrid career. Which little chore would undoubtedly bring forth tremendous cheers from the fans and fanettes of these parts. For never before has anyone got himself so thoroughly disliked around here as the said Henning. If Champion Longson can just lay the leering Lee out like a piece of frozen dessert, he could run for the highest political office around here and have a good chance of being elected, if popularity means anything. Manager Walter Gerow is looking over his seating capacity at the Hume Arena with the realization that the biggest crowd of the season will be on hand to see the big didoes. There'll be no increase in prices for this all-important scrap.

Feature of the first half of the game was a sensational passing play which resulted in a 70-yard touchdown for Argos which gave them a lead in the struggle for the Big Four leadship. Joe Krol made the pass to Royal Copeland in the dying minutes of the first half. Here, the whistle-blowing referee stops a play as Ottawa fails to make yards and loses the ball.

Feller Criticizes Attempts to Spoil Strikeout Record Chances and Team Mates' Inability to Get Some Runs

By JOE REICHLER

Cleveland, Sept. 23 — (AP) — Bob Feller, Cleveland's great right-hander isn't asking for any help in his attempt to set a net major league strikeout record, but he thinks he'd have a better chance if the opposition — and his own teammates—would co-operate a bit more.

After coming out on the short end of a 3-0 hurling duel yesterday with Hal Newhouser in the season's first clash between the American League's two top pitchers, Bob had two club-house complaints.

One was that the foe, instead of cutting normally, at his offerings, was punching at 'em in a deliberate attempt to prevent him from breaking Rube Waddell's listed record of 343 "whiffs."

The other "beef" concerned the inability of his mates to garner some runs, which he said made it easy for the front-running opposition to succeed at the punching strategy.

"With those teams out in front all the time, they don't have to go for that big inning. Instead of swinging for those extra base blows they've just been punching at the ball, and as a result my strikeout total decreases.

Four Blooper Hits

"Take today's game, for instance. The Tigers got eight hits off me, but four of them were bloopers which fell just over the infield. They weren't swinging hard. Their main idea at the plate was not to strike out."

The statistics backed up Bob's "beef". He had two strikes on 19 batters, most of them called. Of the 19 he fanned seven to boost his season's total to 327, still 16 short of Waddell's listed mark and 22 shy of Rube's unofficial record of 349. Of the other 12, four reached out and tagged the next pitch for a hit, one walked, and two hit into double plays. The others went out to the fielders.

The defeat was Feller's 14th against 25 victories, his fourth to the Tigers against no wins. In only one of the four games did Cleveland get any runs for Bob, and he lost that one 3-2 in ten frames. Of Feller's 39 decisions, 17 have been shutout affairs, of which he won 10 and lost seven.

Cards Hold Half-Game Lead Over Dodgers as Hot N.L. Flag Race Enters Final Week

St. Louis Has Six Games Left to Play and Brooklyn Has Five

By RALPH RODEN
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

"The war of nerves" enters its final week today as St. Louis Cardinals and Brooklyn Dodgers race down the stretch for the National League pennant.

At the moment, the Red Birds lead manager Lippy Leo Durocher's Dodgers by half a game. The Cards have six games left to play while the Dodgers have five.

St. Louis blew an opportunity to take a stranglehold on first place by taking a 7-2 beating from the Cubs yesterday while the Dodgers split a twin bill with Boston Braves.

Hank Borowy stifled the Cards with six hits as the Bruins overcame a 2-1 St. Louis lead by scoring three runs in the sixth inning off Howie Pollet, southpaw ace. The Cubs rapped Al Brazle and Ken Burkhart for three more runs in the eighth.

The Dodgers, after bowing, 4-2 to Johny Sain, came back and hammered the Braves into a 8-1 defeat in the finale at Braves Field Vic Lombardi throttled the Braves with four singles and the lone run he allowed came when Danny Litwhiler homered in the seventh.

Newhouser Wins

In the American League the spotlight was on Cleveland where Detroit's Hurricane Hal Newhouser and Cleveland's Bobby Feller clashed in a hurling duel. The Bengal lefthander outpitched the Tribe speed king, allowing only two hits for his 26th win. Feller's loss was his 14th loss as against 25 victories.

New York Yankees downed Philadelphia Athletics, 4-3 and 5-4. Frank Colman, rookie from London, Ont., hit a four - bagger for the Yanks in the second game.

Rookie Fred Sanford blanked Chicago White Sox, 2-0 but St. Louis Browns dropped the second game to the Pale Hose, 8-5.

Other games in the National League saw the Philadelphia Phillies take the New York Giants twice, 4-3 and 1-0 and the Cincinnati Reds defeat the Pittsburgh Pirates, 4-2 and 6-5.

Upon completion of the second game, manager Bill McKechnie of the Red Legs told his players that he had resigned. McKechnie has been at the Cincinnati helm since 1938, probably will finish out the season as boss of the team.

BE KIND TO ANIMALS

DR. BAKER'S COLUMN
Edited by Dr. Charles B. Baker, B.V.Sc.

HINTS

The St. Bernard is an animal of great size, immense bone and a large head expressive of character and intelligence.

He is by no means an apartment or even a town dog, sometimes growing as high at the shoulder as thirty-one inches and weighing more than a full-grown man.

Generally speaking, the St. Bernard is an affectionate and faithful companion for children, quite often allowing them to ride his back as though he were a pony. If harnessed or hitched to a toy wagon, he will draw it as faithfully and patiently as an old horse.

This advertisement is approved and endorsed by THE SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

The Mountain Dog — The St. Bernard is the life-saving dog of the Swiss Alps, trained by the monks of an Alpine monastery to search out and guide to safety the half frozen victims of the sudden storms which sweep the mountains.

The St. Bernard is a splendid example of the dog's faithfulness, fidelity and usefulness to man.

CHAPTER 10

"But we liked it better in Laguna," Pussy said.

"Don't you like the big house in Woodside? You know next year you're going to the circus club, to have little ponies to ride?"

"Yelta says she won't be responsible," Catherine submitted doubtfully.

"Then Mother'll go with you."

"Then Daddy'll say, 'Honey, you forget the Billings thing,'" Catherine said.

"We'll have lots of good times," she said reassuringly, needing reassurance herself. She wished she had not started the children calling Avery "Daddy." Uncle Avery—or just plain Avery—would have been better.

She wished she had not gone to Sutro's Mill and stirred up all the memories that the sight of the little town evoked. Catherine and Pussy fell silent now, content to play with the toys their grandfather had given them.

For Oliver Jordan had risen from bed rejuvenated, after his luncheon and his introduction to the two friendly little granddaughters, and had needed no prompting from Isabel to remember that the hardware store was full of treasure for them. led them downtown, and Isabel led them downtown, and IIsabel had entered once more the old atmosphere of sawdust and pottery and creoste and rope. Her feet had once more felt the oil-soaked boards of the floor, her children had poked inquisitive little fingers, as she had once done, at threshers and mowers and coils of wire.

Now each one had a small canteen on a belt, a shining dog leash of light chain, a small tin funnel, and a bottle for laundry work, with a perforated top. They settled down with these trophies, and Isabel heard much of Sutro's Mill and Grandpa and Aunt Mansie in their mumured talk.

Sutro's Mill brought back a sharp remembrance of her wedding day. It had been a simple wedding, but not quiet, for the whole town had rapturously participated in the event. Isabel had worn a dress that cost ninteen dollars and her mother's wedding veil; about thirty guests had been invited to the house. About seventy more had come duly bringing cakes and coffee and pails of fruit punch, but determined to get in on Isabel Jordan's wedding or know the reason why.

The rooms, the porch, the garden of the old Jordan place had overflowed with laughing girls, clumsy boys with cameras, stout matrons who shed tears over the lovely bride. The hot sweet day had died away on a gale of good wishes.

Avery would have died of dislike and boredom and impatience. But Dennis—as she had told him later—had been darling about it. His life had been rather serious, filled with good work and good ambitions and good friendships; he never had seen anything quite so wholehearted as this smalltown demonstration.

His mother had been housebound then, with a broken leg; he and Isabel planned to drive up to the city and see her that very afternoon, but the afternoon was almost gone when the bride at last ran upstairs to change. The going-away dress had been brown, with golden embroidery on it; she had bought it from "The La Mode" in Muir Boulevard in Sutro's Mill—Muir Boulevard that used to be Chinese Charlie Street, but whose name the Women's Improvement Club had recently changed.

There had been a small brown hat with a gold quill, and her camel's-hair coat of course; three years old, but smart as only a camel's-hair coat can be.

Dennis had put his arm around her as they drove along into the sweet summer dusk.

"D'you realize that this is my wife that's with me, Mrs. Hardisty?" he had said.

It had been such a proud, trembling, reverent sort of time for him. They had seen his mother for a few bewildered minutes, and then gone on, over the beautiful arch of the Bay Bridge, over the Golden Gate, up into the Sausilito Hills, where the little farmhouse had been put in order and was waiting for them.

Bread and milk and eggs and tomatoes and a basket of fruit had been on the table; Dennis found knives and forks, Isabel managed a scrappy meal, and then they went out and sat on the steps and looked at the lights on the bay.

She remembered that hour. She had been nervous all that day—there had been a gradually increasing nervousness for many days, in anticipation of this time. The time when she would be Dennis's wife, and alone with him. Girls planned gaily enough for this, but somehow, as the actual moment of marriage drew near, fear replaced the happy expectation, and an uneasy sense that something might go wrong, something might be disillusioning to them both, came with the fear.

This had nothing to do with the excitement of being engaged, the new clothes, the new calling cards, the packing of scented filmy underwear and fragrant soaps and powders. This seemed a thing apart from the thrill of opening jewelers' boxes of silver and china and crystal; this followed much complacent laughing and chattering with her girl friends, but somehow on the long afternoon drive and during the call on his mother Isabel hadn't felt like laughing or chattering at all; she had been unwontedly silent.

Now, on the steps of the farmhouse on the hilltop, however, all that fear was gone. Isabel looked up at the summer stars, and felt them no more fixed in their splendid places than she was fixed in hers. This was her husband's hand holding hers; this was their marriage night. She could not belong to him more than she did now, at this moment; and to completely surrender her love to his love would only be to deepen the tie between them.

So when they had left the steps and gone into the house, their hands had still been linked, and they had been talking quietly—as indeed one always talked with Dennis. There was something big and protecting and calming in that hard hand of his; through all these first happy days on the hilltop she would cling to that hand; it was stretched out to her when they climbed the hill over the slippery eucalyptus sickles; it held hers when the fog came circling silently in from the ocean in the late afternoons and he and she sat beside their evening fire. Months and months later she was glad of its quieting grip again when she was nervously upset by waiting and pain, and Dennis came to sit beside her, and tell her that things were going well, and that it was nearly over. That was the night Pussy was born.

Pussy. What a miracle they thought her, yet she had been a homely little weazoned monkey of a baby. She was straightening out now; she was ging to be a pretty gypsy of a girl. Dennis would be so proud of her! But it was silly to think of that old time, and of Dennis.

"What did you say, darling?" she asked her littlest girl, with a thickened throat and blurred eyes.

"What are you thinking about, Mother?" Pussy put in curiously. You look so funny."

"Nothing very much," Isabel answered. "What did Catherine say?"

"She said would you take us to see Grandma someday, and not Yelta?"

"Yes, I think that would be very nice." Isabel's heart beat fast with sudden fear and longing, pain and pleasure. "I've always loved Grandma," she said. Dennis's mother had been generous to her during those last weeks, after she had gone away, lifting the burden and expense of housekeeping from Isabel's shoulders, disappearing when Isbel's friends came on the scene, managing to give her daughter-in-law a great deal of freedm, and never interfering with her pleasures. Some of those pleasures must have given her considerable concern, too, Isabel reflected.

It would be good to see her again—not easy, not at all comfortable at first, perhaps, but good. It would make Isabel feel right about that particular relationship, as she had not felt right since her divorce. Even suspecting that she would have to face a few moments of embarrassed shamefacedness, she determined to do it. She determined to show the older Mrs. Hardisty, if she could that she was the same Isabel—full of fun, considerate, affectionate, normal. That there was nothing extraordinary or unusual about her divorce. Mrs. Hardisty had always been extremely susceptible to Isabel's charms, she had always been appreciative of Isabel's consent to the arrangement by which they lived together after Dennis went away. Her quiet delight in the babies, when they arrived, had shown both son and and daughter-in-law how lonely her life had been while Dennis had been busy with college and post-graduate years, how she had longed for young lire in the old dark house.

"We'll go and have lunch with Grandma!" Isabel announced. She looked at Avery's face curiously, when Catherine innocently referred to this promise, a day or two later.

"Daddy, when we go to have lunch with Grandma, will you come, too?" asked Catherine.

"Who's 'Grandma'?" demanded Avery. He was lounging in the big old-fashioned room he and Isabel shared; he had come in unexpectedly, tired, grimy, cold and cheerful, to give his wife a bear hug and amiably invite his stepdaughters to remain where they were. "I like to have 'em sleuthing round in here," he had said. "I'm going to take a shower when I get my breath."

"It sounds as if it was good fishing," Isabel said, smiling at him through the mirror. She had been brushing her hair; now she rose, gatherpd the soft full folds of her dressing gown about her, and came across the room to pull an armchair about to face him, close to the couch where he had stretched himself. Avery gladly went into elaborate details, and she smiled and listened, with Catherine stretched out lazily in her lap, and Pussy crowded into the chair beside her. She deliberately avoided the reference to "Grandma," but Avery had not forgotten it.

"I thought my mother was down at Palm Springs," he presently said.

"This is the other grandmother."

"Well, as a matter of fact I haven't, Avery. But there seems to be no reason why I shouldn't."

"That's right, too. She hates you, probably, doesn't she?"

"No, she doesn't. She ought to, but she doesn't."

"I don't know why she ought to." The children had been taken away now, and Avery had possession of one of his wife's fine brown hands. He took it to his lips. "She ought to be darned glad you'll come to see her," he said.

A coal fire had sunk to ashes behind the polished black iron bars of the grate; the room was warm and dimly lighted; Isabel had a pleasant sense of felicity and coziness. A sudden wind shook the window casings, rain slashed at the panes behind the heavily looped repp draperies but indoors all was comfort and security.

"Good to have you back, Avery. I'm expected at Peggy's at eight. Want to go? Or shall I just say nothing about your having gotten home early?"

"Oh, lord. What time is it?"

"It's only five now."

"I'll go then. Telephone Peggy?"

"I'll do it this instant. I know she was having an awful time getting men."

"She'll have an awful time getting me after the first," Avery stated with a chuckle. Isabel, who had reached for the telephone, stopped halfway and looked at him in surprise.

"Why? Where are you going now?"

"Navy," he answered, too full of satisfaction and complacence to notice her suddenly blank look. "Yep. I go to Georgia on the first, and when Chapelle goes over in June he takes me along as aide."

"Avery! Why didn't you tell me?"

"Just knew this morning. He's been telephoning around about it, and I went down to San Pedro day before yesterday and saw some fellers, so it's all fixed up."

"Overseas duty?"

"Sort of all-round survey. Three or four months. Of course I'm tickled to death. I'm pounds overweight, but I'll take that off."

"But Avery—" She was stammering in her complete surprise.

"You'll—it'll be such a change for you. You'll have to get up early, and eat food you hate, and salute people. You've always said you'd never get into it until they pulled you in by the legs."

"Yes, I know. But when you see some of the camps—I went around with Chapelle. We were only fishing three days, then we got into this thing. Mother'll be awfully pleased; I'm going to run down and see her before I go."

Isabel sat looking at him, stupefied. He was as happy as a boy. He had always been a hunter; here was one more big hunt. Men never gave any excuse for dashing off to war; none was ever exacted of them. She need only listen, and throw in a sympathetic nod now and then.

She telephoned Peggy, at half-past eight she and Avery were at Peggy's house, moving about in a chattering jumble of dinner guests, all of whom had an excited, envious, admiring word for Avery. It was Avery's hour, and he loved it. Already Isabel could see a change in her playboy husband. A new and most becoming gravity sat upon him. He would not be made a hero; he was boyishly, simply, unaffectedly glad of this chance to do something in the great war effort.

Light Rain Cuts Attendance On 2nd Day of Fair

Picton, Sept. 23 — Light rain which fell without a let-up, marred Picton Fair on Saturday, closing day. In spite of the fact that no horse races could be held, four thousand paid admission, this being half the expected crowd. Fair Board officials believe they might break even financially, as the first day was a good one.

The weather was very discouraging as the fair set new records for number of exhibits and outstanding attractions had been planned. The veterans' parade could not be held, races were cancelled as was the night grandstand show.

Buildings Crowded.

The cattle barn offered shelter from the rain and 800 watched judging take place there. Horses splashed through mud to get to the show ring. RUTHLESS TRAPPERS WIPE OUT ENTIRE BEAVER COLONIES

Sportsmen in Hastings and Peterboro counties will remind the government of their petition last year to order a closed season on beaver. The sportsmen claim that entire colonies have been wiped out by ruthless money-hungry trappers who are not particular as to what methods are used. Last year, the Peterboro Game and Fish Association asked for a closed season in Peterboro, Hastings, Victoria and Haliburton counties, but nothing came of it. They will reiterate their demands this year.

Lady White Held Along With Friend On Theft Charges

London, Sept. 23 (CP)— Lady Elizabeth White, 29, beautiful former actress and wife of a baronet, was held today with a tall, mustached friend on theft charges brought by Lady White's mother, the dowager Marchioness of Townshend.

The Marchioness tried unsuccessfully to withdraw the charges but Magistrate Paul Bennett, adjourning the case for two weeks, refused her request.

The Marchioness accused her daughter and Paul Anthony Walsh, 40, described as having "no occupation and no fixed address," of taking a refrigerator and other articles valued at £500 ($2,000).

"Yes, I stole the bloody things," police constable quoted Lady White as saying.

"That is totally absurd," Mr. Walsh was quoted as having told police: "I took the stuff."

TORONTO ARGOS LEAD BIG FOUR BY SINGLE POINT

Lucky to Defeat Ottawa Rough Riders 13-12 on Saturday

By The Canadian Press

The Dominion champion Toronto Argonauts are leading the Eastern Big Four today — but they hope they're not all as tough as that game against Ottawa Roughriders at Toronto Saturday.

Argos won 13-12 and on the last play of the game smothered an Ottawa convert that would have tied it up. The Montreal Alouettes, as expected, coasted to victory over the Tigers 24-1 at Hamilton in the other Big Four game. That leaves Argos leading by a point over Ottawa with Montreal another point farther back, and the Tigers winless in three starts.

In the Senior Ontario Union the standings were untangled somewhat when Sarnia Imperials walloped the Ottawa Trojans 18-6 at Ottawa, and Hamilton Wildcats trounced Windsor rockets 14-7 at Windsor. The Toronto Indians and Balmy Beach played their game Friday night, Indians winning 14-1. Today there's a three-way deadlock between the Indians, Imperials and Wildcats, all with four points. Balmy Beach and Rockets each have two; Trojans none.

In the west, the Calgary Stampeders beat Saskatchewan Roughriders 19-7 for their fourth victory in five starts. Stampeders now have a four-point advantage over the Winnipeg Blue Bombers, and the Roughriders, without a point, are just about out of the picture.

Indians Beaten By Varsity

The east on Saturday also provided an outstanding exhibition game when the University of Toronto senior squad edged out the Toronto Indians 8-7. The college players open their senior intercollegiate schedule on Oct. 5 and it was evident that Toronto Varsity has constructed a powerful entry.

The Sarnia Imperials, on the long trek to Ottawa in the O. R. F. U., had trouble with the Trojans despite the decisive score. All the Imperial scoring plays were fashioned by the sifty backfield trio of Graham Meikle, Gus Schiers and Hank Galloway. Meikle converted his own first quarter touchdown and Schiers scored majors in the third and fourth quarters. Galloway's kick for a single and his convert of Schiers' touchdown in the third were their other points.

The Trojans had all the play on several occasions but Miller Harper's second-quarter touchdown was the only time the long marches paid off. Their single came when Meikle was rouged on Robillard's kick.

At Windsor the Rockets suffered their first defeat as the Hamilton Wildcats ran wild in the second quarter. Miller had opened the scoring for Hamilton with a single in the first frame, and Rockets smashed back with a major by Wrylupek that was converted by Reid.

But in the second frame Hamilton made first down eight times in a row to get Stewart over for a major, converted by Murmylyk. Toms got the Cats' second touchdown and Murmylyk again made the convert good.

SYRACUSE CHIEFS ONE GAME DOWN TO THE ROYALS

Winner of Series to Meet Louisville Colonels in the Little World Series

(By The Associated Press)

The hard-hitting Montreal Royals are one up on Syracuse Chiefs today in the final round of the International League's Governor's Cup playoff series.

The Royals took a 2-1 lead in games at Syracuse yesterday by trouncing the Chiefs 11-1. The winner of the best-of-seven series will advance into the "Little World Series" against Louisville Colonels, who eliminated Indianapolis in four straight in their American Association finals.

First baseman Les Burge paced the Royal offensive by rapping out four hits in four trips to the plate. Burge also scored four runs and batted in two.

The Royals jumped on Mike Schultz for five runs in the first three innings and continued their assault against Earl Harrist and Bob Katz. They slammed out a total of 17 hits, including a two-run homer by Earl Naylor and a three-run circuit clout by catcher Homer Howell.

Manager Jewel Ens of the Chiefs has nominated southpaw Jim Prendergast to face the Royals in the fourth game tonight, while Lefty Steve Nagy or righthander Glen Moulder will hurl for the Royals.

Miss Great Lakes Easily Defeats Lombardo's Boat

Washington, Sept. 23—(AP) — The boys in the "I got licked by Joe Louis" club ought to meet a fellow sufferer, Don Foster, who pilots the champion speedboat Miss Great Lakes.

For in a 45-mile race, such as the President's Cup Regatta, he gets hit about as hard and as often as anyone fighting Joe Louis—only in different places.

Miss Great Lakes, churning as fas as 95 miles an hour on the straightaway, won both heats in the windup of the regatta yesterday. This, coupled with Saturday's victory, gave her a clean sweep. Her average speed for the 18 laps was around 70 miles an hour.

How anybody stays aboard her —or even wants to — must have mystified President Truman and the 60,000 other people who showed up for Sunday's finals.

In second place in each heat was Tempo VI, owned and driven by orchestra leader Guy Lombardo, native of London, Ont.

Tempo VI, with a 550 horsepower engine, isn't a bit like Miss Great Lakes. Racing enthusiasts noted how lightly she skimmed the water, how beautifully she handled. They found but one fault with her.

Bill McKechnie Resigns Post With Cincinnati Reds

(By The Canadian Press)

A surprise broke in the camp of the Cincinnati Reds yesterday in the announcement of the resignation of Bill McKechnie as manager of the National League Club, the players of which were unaware of the move. McKechnie, who said he was not retiring from baseball, had been in charge of the team since 1938. In his 24 years as a manager he led the Pirates to the 1925 world title, won a pennant with St. Louis Cardinals in 1928 and twice won the league flag with the Reds, in 1939 and 1940.

It was the second major-league change in two days, Herold D. (Muddy) Ruel having signed a two-year contract Saturday to manage the St. Louis Browns, with whom he started as a catcher in 1915.

The U.S. Army Football team opened the 1946 season Saturday by smothering Villanova 35-0 for the Cadets' 19th successive victory.

George Tooth of Toronto and Charles Thibert of Windsor both blind, finished first and second in a nine-hole golf competition for the American Rex Bruebaker and the Canadian Silverwood trophies at the North Hills Country Club, Birmingham, Mich., Saturday. Three other blind players competed. Tooth shot a 61.

Light heavyweight champion Gus Lesnevich wore dark glasses to conceal a blackened eye, the gift of British champion Bruce Woodcock, as he stepped off the plane from Britain at New York yesterday. Woodcock had knocked him out in a non-title scrap at London last Thursday.

Directors of the American Association yesterday accepted the resignation of the circuit's President, H. Roy Hamey, who is becoming general manager of Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League at the close of the season.

Michael McGillicuddy, 90, older brother of Connie Mack, dean of the Philadelphia Athletics, died yesterday of a heart attack while visiting in Stafford Springs, Conn.

ROCKEY GRAZIANO TO MEET ZALE FRIDAY NIGHT

Bout Likely to Outdraw Heavyweight Scrap Held Last Week

By SID FEDER

New York, Sept. 23 (AP) — Bash Boulevard is a buzzing these days as it never has before over a punch-party between two little men, largel because one of them specializes in putting other fellows to sleep and the other can just about break an opponent in half with body punches.

As a result, next Friday's middleweight title fuss in Yankee Stadium, in which champion Tony Zale will throw his body bombs at Rockey the Rocky Graziano, a local larruper who specializes in putting other fellows to sleep, is a cinch to outdraw last week's Meatier show involving Joe Louis and Tami Mauriello. It is virtually certain of hitting the $400,000 mark and may go higher.

Zale won the title back in 1941 by belting out Al Hostak in a couple of rounds and ou pointing Georgia Abrams. Sin leaving the navy at the end 1945, he has had six fights a put all six opponents to sleep.

Stalin Believes World in No 'Real Danger' of War

Says 'Monopolist Possession' Of A-Bomb Not to Continue

By WILLIAM L. PHILLIPS

London, Sept. 24 —(AP)— Prime Minister Stalin reiterated today his belief that the world is in no "real danger" of a new war, declared that "monopolist possession" of the atomic bomb could not long continue, and urged the United States to get out of China as one step toward lasting peace.

Responding to nine questions submitted to him by Alexander Werth, Moscow correspondent of the Sunday Times of London, Mr. Stalin said he did not believe that Great Britain and the United States could create a capitalistic encirclement of Russia, "even if they so desired," and called for the "demilitarization and democratization" of Germany as another step toward "stable and lasting peace."

"One should strictly differentiate between the hue and cry about a 'new war' which is taking place now and the real danger of a 'new war', which does not exist at present," the Russian leader was quoted as saying by the Moscow radio, which broadcast the complete text of the questions and answers early this morning.

As translated by the Soviet Monitor in London, Mr. Stalin blamed the talk of a new war on "military-political intelligence agents" who "need this clamor" to (A) help their government wrest more concessions, (B) make it difficult to cut the military budget. of their countries and (C) "to put a brake on demobilization of troops and thereby evade the quick growth of unemployment in their countries."

Will Not Use Zone Illegally

He denied that Russia had any intention of using the Soviet zone of Germany against the western powers and expressed belief that peaceful co-operation between the U.S.S.R. and the democracies of the west "far from decreasing, may even grow."

Replying to Mr. Werth's question: "Do you believe that virtual monopoly by the U.S.A. of the atomic bomb constitutes one of the main threats to peace?" Mr. Stalin replied:

"I do not believe the atomic bomb to be as serious a force as certain politicians are inclined to regard it. Atomic bombs are intended for intimidating weak nerves, but they cannot decide the outcome of war since atomic bombs are by no means sufficient for this purpose. Certainly monopolist possession of the secret of the atomic bomb does create a threat, but at least two remedies exist against it:

Did Not Elaborate

"(A) Monopolist possession of the atomic bomb cannot last long.

"(B) Application of the atomic bomb will be prohibited."

He did not elaborate on either point.

Two of the correspondent's questions were concerned with the recent New York speech of Henry A. Wallace, the recently ousted United States Secretary of Commerce.

To one pertaining to Soviet policy in Germany, Mr. Stalin said any use by Russia of Germany against the western powers and the United States "would mean a departure of the Soviet Union from its fundamental national interests."

"And I believe" he continued, "that the demilitarization democratization of Germany represents one of the most important guarantees for the establishment of stable and lasting peace."

The other — Do you believe in the possibility of friendly and lasting co-operation of the Soviet Union and the Western democracies, despite the existence of ideological differences, and in the 'friendly competition' between the two systems which Wallace mentioned in his speech? — brought the brief reply: "I absolutely believe so."

Mr. Stalin characterized as "absurd, borrowed from the bankrupt arsenal of Hitler and Goebbels," any accusation that Moscow was dictating the policy of Communist parties in Western Europe and said he was "indeed confident" of friendly relations between Russia and Britain.

"The strengthening of political, trade and cultural ties between these countries would considerably contribute to the establishment of such relations."

Mr. Stalin first adopted the method of making important announcements of Russian policy and opinion in responses to correspondent's questions during the war, when he wrote a letter to Henry C. Cassidy, then Associated Press bureau chief in Moscow. Since that time he has made similar responses in several cases.

He has granted no interviews to foreign correspondents since the war started.

PLANE COLLAPSES ON LANDING, 26 ARE SHOCKED

Aircraft en Route from New York to Lisbon on First Crossing

Rineanna, Eire, Sept. 24.—(CP)—The landing gear of a Pan-American Constellation plane collapsed a few moments after the ship touch down at Shannon airport today and the craft broke in two.

Twenty-six passengers suffered from shock, but none was reported injured.

The plane was en route from New York to Lisbon on its first Atlantic crossing since the recent groundings of all the big Constellations.

The ship made a perfect landing on the runway and was beginning to turn into the taxi strip when the accident occurred.

Airport personnel quickly extricated the passengers.

MEDIUM OF SUIT

Toronto, Sept. 24 — (CP)—The strange disappearance last May 31 of Mrs. Margaret Voyde, a widow who operated a guest home in Toronto, brought an action yesterday in the Ontario law court at Osgoode Hall. Gordon D. Conant, Master of the Supreme Court, permitted a plaintiff in an action against the woman who failed to return from a weekend trip, to serve a substitute writ against a committee named by the court to look after her estate.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Sept. 24—(CP)—Synopsis at 7:30 a.m. — During the night cool air moved from the west, across Ontario, and this morning is continuing to advance into Quebec. A band of rain 100 to 200 miles wide preceded the advance of the cooler air. Maximum temperature in the 60s or the low 50s are anticipated in Ontario today. West of Lake Superior and in Manitoba intermittent rain continues but is expected to diminish today. Minimum temperatures in southern Manitoba and Saskatchewan were near freezing last night, and maximum temperatures yesterday were in high 30s or low 40s.

Voters Failing to Mark Ballot In Australian Election Are Fined

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Canberra, Australia, Sept. 24—(CP)—The Australian general election will be held as usual on a Saturday—Sept. 28—because for most Australians it is workless or half work-day and the most convenient for voting which is compulsory.

Polling booths throughout the country will be open a full 12 hours, from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., to give more than 4,500,000 men and women even chance to get out and mark ballots. Failure to vote involves a £2 ($6.40) fine.

Where good reason is shown exemption from voting is granted. One woman obtained exemption on the argument tht she lost her nerve when the time came to vote. A man who told the electoral authorities he didn't consider himself "responsible" also was declared exempt.

Under the "preferential" election system, Australian voters rank the different contestants by writing 1, 2, 3, 4, and so on, on the ballot papers opposite the candidates' names.

The bulk of the voters are in Australia's four eastern states — Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria and Tasmania — which together send to the House of Representatives 63 of its 75 members and 24 of the 36 Australian Senators, half of whom stand for election every three years at general election time. Each of the six states has six Senators in Canberra.

South Australia elects six members to the House of Representatives, compared with 28 for more populous New South Wales. Western Australia elects five members to the House.

The 75th representative is elected by the northern territory.

The voting age is 21 but servicemen and women who are 18 or over and have served overseas are permitted to vote. Australia's aboriginal population which numbers about 70,000 does not vote, though by special privilege voting rights have been given to aboriginals who were overseas in the forces.

Members of the Australian occupation force in Japan will vote by mail, as will Australians in Britain.

Australian electoral laws require the identification of the authors of campaign comment in newspapers with the result that all election stories conclude with reporters' names and addresses in fine print.

TERRORISTS BLOW UP OIL TRAIN, SENTRY KILLED

British Troops Guarding Dock Area Told To Keep Order With A Minimum of Force

Haifa, Palestine, Sept. 24 — (Reuters)—Authoritative sources said today that British troops guarding the dock area here have been told to 'keep order with a minimum of force and that they have received no "shoot at sight" orders.

The troops are guarding docks into which unauthorized Jewish immigrants ships are brought and where transfers for detention camps in Cyprus are carried out.

"Fire only in emergency and then only shoot into the air," the orders state, it was reported.

Meanwhile, as Palestine continued tense, about 280,000 Jews in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem were called out for a two hour strike during the funeral of Yechiel Schwartz, unauthorized Jewish immigrant who was killed during a clash with British sailors aboard a ship Sunday.

Another Jewish ship carrying would-be immigrants was reported from Haifa to be approaching the Palestine coast.

Jewish terrorists blew up an oil train between Tel Aviv and Haifa last night with a mine placed on the track. An Arab sentry was killed when challenging seven armed in uniform put to route when they approached a railway bridge between Jaffa and Lydda.

The British steamship Ocean Vigour arrived at Fanagusta, Cyprus, today with the 600 unauthorized Jewish immigrants, transferred from the immigrant ship Palmach in Haifa Bay after a clash early Sunday with a boarding party of British sailors.

The immigrants alleged that jets of oil and tear bombs were used by the British minesweeper Rowna while putting the boarding party aboard the Palmach. Marines said the one immigrant killed in the clash, was hit by a tear bomb and fell into the sea.

Six Injured In Car-Truck Crash

Galt, Sept. 24 (CP)—Six people were brought to hospital last night following a truck-car crash three miles south of here on Highway No. 24. The car was destroyed when its gasoline tank exploded and the truck was wrecked.

Most seriously injured is Gordon Lockie, district farmer, who underwent an emergency operation for internal injuries. His condition is described as critical.

Others in hospital are George Colwell, said to be the driver of the car, his wife and a brother, Gordon, and Mr. and Mrs. M. Hodgins, all of Holyrood in Bruce County. They all suffered cuts, bruises and shock.

The collision occurred in a rain storm.

Stalin's Statement Indicates "Toughness" Policy of His Own

London, Sept. 24 4(CP)— A highly-placed Whitehall source said unofficially today that Prime Minister Stalin's statement "there will be no new war" apparently was made "to tell the western world that Soviet Russia will answer the United States' 'toughness', toward her with a 'toughness" of her own."

Officially, a foreign office spokesman said the Soviet leader's observations were being studied "with interest" by all concerned and that it was still "too early" to indicate the reactions of the British government.

Generalissimo Stalin's replies to Alexander Werth, the Moscow correspondent of the London Sunday Times, were described by the Whitehall source as "firm but friendly."

This source added, however, that there could be "no mistaking the strength with which Stalin answered every question bearing the slightest relation to the United States foreign policy or United States suspicions of Russia."

The Russian leader's reply that American and British "ruling circles" could not create "a capitalistic encirclement" of Russia even if they wanted to was a "warning" as well as an "opinion," he said.

In describing the "earliest withdrawal" of all American troops from China as "vital" to future peace, Premier Stalin was making a "virtual demand" for such an evacuation.

Most important of all was the Soviet leader's statement that atomic bombs were intended for intimidating "the weak-nerved," the informant said. In rejecting the weapon as a "deciding factor" in future wars, Premier Stalin was replying to "certain politicians" by suggesting that Russia herself would soon have atomic bombs.

Stewardess on Wrecked Plane Believes She Told Passengers To Fasten Their Safety Belts

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Gander Airport, Nfld., Sept. 24 (CP Cable)—Jeanne Rook, one of the stewardesses aboard the ill-fated Belgian airliner which crashed near here last Wednesday, said yesterday she could not remember having any feeling that the plane was going to crash but believed she had told all the passengers to fasten their safety belts.

"I'm so used to that it is all mechanical and I don't remember about it," she said in halting English from a stretcher in the dining room of the Sir Frederick Banting Memorial Hospital here.

Beside her were four others of the 18 crash survivors, John King, 19, son of the Chinese Ambassador to Belgium, Charles Kronengold, 29, of New York, Jean Polak, 26-year-old Brussels architect and Leon Tonglet, 34, Brussels businessman.

Gives Her Version

All said they did not wish to talk about the 26 passengers who had lost their lives in the crash.

While they spoke, graves were being dug in the hillside near the scene of the crash, 25 miles southwest of here, and preparations went ahead for funeral services today. A Protestant clergyman and a Roman Catholic priest will be flown over the graves and while the planes are in flight they will read a funeral service. Flowers will be dropped from other aircraft.

Thrown Out of Plane

Miss Rook said she believed she had been thrown out of the plane but she didn't know how or when she came down about 15 feet away.

"I never lost the hope that we should be found," she said. "But I was not sure."

Three or four hours after the plane plunged into the side of the hill she had suggested that some of the survivors able to walk should go for help.

Thursday morning when the survivors were sighted by a plane Miss Rook at first thought the party had found some rescue party and sent the plane. But they staggered back to the camp later saying they still had seen nothing.

Only six of the 18 survivors were interviewed. Others of the 12 who had been declared in condition for interviews declined.

King said he finally had to give up travelling in search of help because he was losing blood all the time from wide gashes in his hands. He and the two others travelled without food or water for two days. All supplies aboard the plane had been burned when it crashed into the hill while banking for a landing turn on the fog and mist covered airport.

Labor Minister, Hon. C.D. Howe Well Received

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Windsor, Sept. 24 — (CP) — Addresses by Labor Minister Mitchell and Reconstruction Minister Howe featured yesterday's sessions of the 61st convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, which today was scheduled to elect officers for the year.

Election interest was high as a result of rumors they might bring out differences between various factions.

Despite expectations in some quarters of an unfavorable reception, Mr. Mitchell was greeted with moderate enthusiasm. He dealt with general labor matters, touching on current strikes. While Mr. Howe talked particularly of the effect of strikes on the future of the Canadian economy.

"It would be wrong to get the impression that the strikes have delivered a knock-out blow to the economic system," Mr. Howe said. "But make no mistake—the strikes have shaken the system for the moment."

Mr. Howe said the "lost ground can be recovered provided industrial peace can be restored without too much delay," adding:

"Surely it has been demonstrated that the legitimate objectives of labor can be gained more effectively by resort to government machinery for adjustment of wages than by stoppages of production.

30-Day Delivery Strike Condemned By Federation

Edmonton, Sept. 24. (CP)—The Alberta Branch of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture today condemned the 30-day delivery strike of all farm produce by more than 50,000 Saskatchewan and Alberta farmers in a bid for federal recognition of their demands for parity prices.

The Federation said in a statement that the action taken by more than 20,000 members of the Alberta Farmers' Union and the United Farmers of Canada, whose estimated 30,000 membership is confined to Saskatchewan, would "hinder efforts" to obtain a better deal for the farmers.

The statement claimed that the C.F.A. had already made two appeals for the establishment of a fact-finding board to set parity between farm costs and returns and that it had "reasonable assurance this this will be done."

Establishment of the fact-finding board is the main demand by the A.F.U., which continued to distribute ballots to the striking Alberta farmers today to see if they wished to continue withholding livestock, grain, dairy and poultry products beyond the 30-day time limit set when the strike was called Sept. 6.

Meanwhile, Calgary retailers were reported "making a run" on creameries in an effort to stock up on butter and avoid any possible shortage due to the farm strike. Some creameries said they were dipping into winter storage measures.

15-HOUR BATTLE BETWEEN GREEK TROOPS, LEFTISTS

Unofficial Reports Indicate 120 of Band Killed and More Than 200 Wounded

Athens, Sept. 24 (AP)— The Ministry of Public Order announced today that Greek troops and gendarmes had fought a 15-hour battle with a band of 2,000 Leftists at the village of Deskate in Thessaly and unofficial reports indicated that 120 of the band had been killed and more than 200 wounded.

The Ministry said casualties among the government forces included two killed, eight wounded and 34 missing.

The battle, described as the largest encounter to date between government troops and left-wing irregulars, began at dawn Sept. 21 when the band attacked Deskate with automatic weapons, machine guns and mortars.

The small garrison, badly outnumbered, held off the attackers in a battle in which 40 of the Leftists were killed and 100 wounded, the government said.

Regain Control

Press reports added that the garrison sent runners to the village of a Gravena, whence a relief force was dispatched. The police force was reported to have regained control of the village after killing 80 more of the Leftists and wounding approximately 120.

Military officials said the Leftist attack on Deskate was a well conceived operation which obviously had been planned by an experienced soldier. All communications were severed and all roads leading to the village blocked before the attack, these officials said.

The conflict took place in an area where the Greek 3rd army corps has been carrying out operations under orders by the government to mop up roving Leftist bands.

Press dispatches said seven villages in northern Greece near the Albanian frontier had been recaptured from "Communists" who seized them several days ago.

Bilton to Hang On December 10

Whitby, Ont., Sept. 24—(CP)—George Bilton, 25-year-old Oshawa laborer, today was found guilty of the murder of Mrs. Theresa Laurie, 34, and was sentenced to be hanged Dec. 10.

The Ontario Assizes jury was out of the courtroom an hour considering its verdict. Bilton, handcuffed in court since he attempted suicide with a bedsheet Monday, heard Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay sentence him.

40 BIOLOGISTS WORKING

Hamilton, Sept. 24 — (CP) — The fish and wildlife division of the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests now has 40 biologists working on conservation measures, Jack Hambleton, outdoor writer of the Toronto Globe and Mail, said last night in an address to the Hamilton Hunters and Anglers Association. A year ago the government had two biologists, in the former Department of Game and Fisheries which was abolished when fish and wildlife came under the wing of the Forests Department.

Sheer Bulgaria Of All Frontier Fortifications

Peace Conference Adopts Greek Amendment to Treaty

Paris, Sept. 24 (AP)— The peace conference military commission voted today to defortify the southeastern border of Slav Europe, adopting a Greek amendment to the Bulgarian treaty which would shear Bulgaria of frontier fortifications.

The vote was 11-7, with three abstentions. It came after Canada had told the peace conference that she would vote for the big four proposal to postpone decision on the future of Italian colonies for one year.

Health Minister Brooke Claxton, the leader of the Canadian delegation, said that the proposed disposition was "probably far from ideal but it is the best solution on which we can hope to have agreement for some time."

He addressed the Italian political and territorial commission shortly before the scheduled meeting of the Big Four Ministers to discuss disposal of the Italian colonies and weed out other treaty amendments to speed the work of the Paris treaty.

Earlier, Col. W. R. Hodgson of Australia scathingly criticized hte Big Four for "agreeing among themselves" that final disposal of Libya, Eritrea and Italian Somaliland would be determined jointly by Britain, Russia, the United States and France.

Mr. Claxton also supported Ethiopia's claim to Eritrea, saying that he thought the majority of countries shared the hope that the four powers would thus "redress an old wrong and unite in one nation the people of a proud and ancient race."

"We cannot forget that Ethiopia was one of the first nations to suffer the full force of aggression in consequence of the failure of the system of collective action which had been established precisely to prevent such an occurrence and that consequently Ethiopia should be one of the first to receive redress."

Gladwyn Jebb, British member of the Italian political and territorial commission, said that the foreign ministers' council would discuss Italy's colonies "this afternoon."

Earlier, informed sources said today's Big Four session, intended to aid the 21-power parley in meeting the Oct. 5 deadline for re-opening plenary sessions, would have on the agenda only those of the 300 original treaty amendments upon which there was slight divergence of views.

Outwardly, the Big Four—Ernest Bevin of Great Britain, Georges Bidault of France, V. M. Molotov of Russia and James F. Byrnes of the United States—appeared to be meeting in the most amicable atmosphere since the conference convened last July.

United States action in relinquishing claims for full indemnity for Allied property damaged in Romania was followed by an immediate concession yesterday from Russia, with regard to Italy.

A Soviet delegate argued against, and helped to defeat, a proposal by Yugoslavia to exact full compensation from Italy for Yugoslav shipping seized during the war. The vote was 12 to 4 against, and marked one of the few times that the Slavic group of states has been split in the voting.

Six commissions and two subcommissions of the peace conference scheduled sessions today and tonight as delegates sought to do their share in winding up the 21-power parley's work on treaties for Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Italy and Romania.

Meat-Hungry Americans View Empty Plates While Cattle Roam the Ranges

By OVID A. MARTIN

Washington, Sept. 24 (AP)—Meat-hungry Americans are witnessing the paradox of near-record numbers of cattle roaming the ranges while their dinner table platters are empty of beef.

Agriculture Department officials said today the number of cattle on United States' farms is not far below the 1944 peak and that the number of western ranges may be the largest of record.

But grass-fed cattle are not moving off ranges to slaughter pens in numbers the government had expected. Department experts said uncertainty over future prices tends to delay marketing.

In discussng the small number of range cattle reaching slaughterers this month officials cited several reasons, among them:

1. Some western cattlemen are holding back in the hope of higher prices, either through a hike in Office of Price Administration ceilings or possible removal of price controls.

2. Corn-belt feeders have been bidding heavily against slaughterers for cattle which might go either to the slaughter pens or to feed lots. With a record corn crop in prospect and with feed prices expected to decline, feeders see a chance of making money by producing heavier weight cattle.

3. Some cattlement are waiting until after Jan. 1 for income tax purposes.

C.C.L. OPPOSES GOVT.-SPONSORED STRIKE VOTES

Secretary - Treasurer Called Move "Dagger Aimed at Heart of Labor"

By GEORGE RONALD
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 24 — (CP) — Resolutions dealing with strikers, wages and price controls were main items on the agenda of the sixth annual convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor today as more than 625 delegates started the second day's session.

First matter up for discussion was a resolution denouncing the recent order-in-council which empowers the Dominion government to take a strike vote in any industry either before or during a strike. Decision on the resolution was adjourned yesterday after several speakers called for action to render the order ineffective.

Some delegates who spoke on the motion urged widespread labor action to boycott any vote called under the order-in-council.

"We are fully capable of running our own show and no outsider is going to run it for us," he said.

Resolutions adopted yesterday supported the non-delivery strike of the Alberta Farmers' Union and urged the government to enact legislation providing for a minimum wage rate of 75 cents an hour.

Self-Discipline Theme of Address By Labor Minister

Windsor, Sept. 24 (CP)— Urging "self-discipline in all walks of life," Labor Minister Mitchell said Monday that the "greatest problem confronting the Canadian people at this moment is the maintenance of a stable price level and the purchasing power of the people's dollar."

In an address prepared for delivery before the 61st convention of the Trades and Labor Congress, Mr. Mitchell also defended government handling of post-war reconversion and his department's machinery for labor disputes.

"There is nothing more devastating to national morale than a continued rise in prices," he warned. "I believe that our future employment opportunities, the maintenance of our expanded industrial structure and our ability to compete successfully not only in the home market, but also abroad, is wholly dependent on our ability to maintain our price stabilization policy."

Organized labor must not think only of industrial and commercial workers, but the "great farming population of almost 1,000,000" and the "white-collar group."

"Discuss your special problems frankly and vigorously, but in the interest of the country as a whole. Better standards of living for one section only cannot be maintained."

Mr. Mitchell said he had "never hesitated to uphold the strike as labor's last and most effective weapon to secure justice... but the rule of law is equally important, and obedience to it is necessary in every phase of our national life if democracy, as we know it, is to survive and not be substituted by anarchy or something even less palatable."

During the evening's program all 12 playing members of the team, together with their trainer, club secretary and business manager, were presented with handsome windbreakers from the hockey club. Coach "Toots" Holway made the presentation to the team members on behalf of the hockey club. Club manager and Kinsmen Bill Dennis introduced the various team members to the service club members, following which the presentation of the windbreakers was made.

The windbreakers were made by Deacon Brothers of Belleville with the crest bearing the words "Belleville Junior Hockey Club 45-46, Group Champions Jr. B."

Pictures of Picnic Viewed

Fishing and scenic attractions in the Fernleigh Lodge district north of Kaladar were also shown to the club members by Mr. Quinn with the screening of a lengthy color film which had been "shot" in the above district. The film showed tourists and local residents hauling in the big fellows and later displaying them for the benefit of the photographer.

President Newt. Wilbur presided over the meeting while Jim Walker acted as song leader and Ross Schryver as sergeant at arms. Added musical entertainment was provided by Charlie Tillbrook, accordian player deluxe who favored his listeners with several numbers. Charlie is a former member of the Canadian Army Show.

Battle of the Mayors At the Fair Tonight

Mayor Frank Follwell and ex-Mayor Harry Rollins closed their training camps last night and decided to rest today in preparation for the track Battle of the Mayors scheduled for the Belleville Fair tonight at 8.30.

Both men issued statements that they were in the best of shape for the "croocial" foot duel which will see them sent away over the 100 yard distance with the Ontario Mayors' Challenge Cup at stake.

Mayor Follwell is undecided as to whether he will wear his famous purple trunks which carried him to victory in the Cornwall classic in which he defeated the mayor of that city or decide in favor of a brand new green and red stripe effects.

Ex-Mayor Rollins will choose between a devastating orange with crushed strawberry stripes, or a quieter creation of soft lemon with lime trimmings.

Special timers will be on duty, and while it is not expected that any track records will be broken, gossip today had the story that with a strong tale-gale of fifty miles per hour the winner should cross the line by 9.15 p.m.

Both contestants late today declined to comment as to whether they will enter the 1948 Olympics being held in London, England.

Record First-Night Crowd Throngs Exhibition Grounds Despite Consistent Rainfall

Fair Officially Opened by Mayor Frank Follwell; Crowd Packs Grandstand and Flows Over Track to See Hell Drivers Perform; Midway, Exhibits, Well Patronized

Sullen rain-filled skies from which intermittent downpours interspersed a steady all-evening drizzle, failed to dampen the exhibition ardor of thousands of fair-goers on Monday evening as one of the largest first-night crowds in the history of the Belleville Exhibition thronged the Fair Grounds.

Directors openly admitted their surprise as long queues of spectators and lines of automobiles waited in the misting rain that fell during early evening, and milled through the entrances or filled the grandstand to overflow capacity.

Long before President Elmer Sandercock introduced Mayor Frank Follwell of Belleville who formally opened the exhibition at 8.30 the grandstand was black with spectators. They overflowed into the bleachers, and later directors ordered the opposite side of the track open to the people who could not find accommodation. By 8.45 the sale of tickets to the grandstand had closed.

It was estimated that three thousand people saw the grandstand performance of Lucky Lott and his Hell Drivers alone. Along the midway and viewing the many exhibits were thousands of other spectators.

People milled on the track. They lined the fences and enclosures in the infield. By the time the performance started the stage itself was jammed with patrons.

Rain No Object

They sat or stood for the entire one hour and forty minutes of the Lott show. The rain fell in downpours at times and during the entire evening rain fell more or less steadily. In raincoats and under umbrellas they sat listening to the sparkling rhythms of the Belleville Municipal Band who played in slickers, or roared their appreciation of Fifi, the famous Billy Garden clown who entertained them prior to the Lucky Lot feature presentation.

Due to the weather conditions and the length of the Lott show, the Billy Garden stage extravaganza was cancelled. Rain had soaked the stage and created a hazard for performers, so it was decided to delete this part of the evening program.

The President Speaks

Prior to his introduction of Mayor Follwell, President Sandercock drew special attention to the many special features of the exhibition. "The Board of Directors," he said, "had arranged a prize list that has attracted the cream of Ontario exhibitors. This was made possible by the generous grants of the County of Hastings, the City of Belleville and Townships of Prince Edward and Hastings Counties and from donations from the merchants and business men of the city."

He emphasized the fine exhibits of beef and dairy cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, also the merchants, schools and other various displays in the many buildings. He drew attention to the Conklin Midway, the Lucky Lott show, and paid special tribute to the city Park Board which had so generously contributed in the improvement of the grounds, the erection of a new horse barn and the renovations of all buildings. He then introduced Mayor Follwell.

Mayor Opens Fair

The Mayor told the large crowd that he deemed it a special honor to be asked to formally open the exhibition inasmuch as in former years it had been done by distinguished statesmen and politicians and outstanding military men.

The fact that he had been asked to officiate this year, the Mayor stated was another proof of the fine co-operation that has always existed between the city of Belleville and its parent county of Hastings.

He drew attention to the splendid quality of the exhibits especially those of an agricultural nature, declaring that they evidenced the fine quality of farm products that are grown in Hastings and surrounding districts.

"The exhibition," he said, "mirrored the progress of Hastings along many lines of endeavor and he felt that the splendid attendance under prevailing weather conditions brought out the fact that the exhibition was recognized by city as well as rural residents as one of the best in this part of Ontario.

Spectacular Stunts of Lucky Lott

Spectacular spine-chilling stunts, made more dangerous by the wet slippery condition of the track in front of the grandstand, presented by Lucky Lott and his Hell Drivers had the packed crowd alternately gasping, applauding, or sitting in a tense silence as dare-devil drivers hurtled along the track and through the air in their sensational acts.

The smashing finale, the "Bus Jump' usually reserved as the climax of the show was brought forward due to the increasing slipperiness of the track and was staged as the third act of the hour and one-half show.

Crowd Held Breath

Lengthwise of a long ramp that extended [illegible] feet in the air was placed a heavy truck some forty-four feet in length. Beyond this was placed "junkers" smashed-up cars, that is. And while the crowd held its breath, Lucky Lott roared down the track in an old jalopy at 50 miles per hour, raced up the ramp and cleared the truck in a spectacular leap, landing with a resounding crash in the "junkers". He emerged from the wreckage smiling and unhurt.

Another spectacular stunt was provided by "Batter" Crooks when he drove a speeding motor car through a flaming board wall. Yet another stunter thrilled the crowd as he crouched on the rear of a car, leaped off backwards and slid through a wall of flame on the track.

Lying flat on his stomach on the hood of a speeding roadster another member of the troupe hurtled through a flaming wooden gate which was smashed to pieces by the impact, and came out smiling.

Crooks again thrilled the crowd when he rode his motorbike through the "Tunnel of Hell" a blazing twenty-foot long cage soaked with gasoline and filled with paper.

Car Driven Over Man

Another stunt kept the crowd in suspense. One of the Lott troupe lay on the ground and a small three foot ramp placed on his stomach. He did not turn a hair as a heavy car roared up track and over the ramp.

There was comedy, too. "Jack" a tramp stunt man kept the crowd highly amused with his funny antics. He imitated the most of the hell drivers tricks in a manner that was humorous, and dangerous at times.

"Lucky" Lott climaxed the show with a daring roll from a sharply inclined ramp. Driving a car that was much the worse for wear, but still mobile, he raced up the ramp twisted the wheel and rolled off sidewise as the car turned over.

Midway Crowded

The show over, the crowd milled through entrances to the color, noise and atmosphere of the Conklin Midway, a brilliantly illuminated tented city of mystery thrills and entertainment; traditional atmosphere of a Belleville fair.

There they saw beautiful dancing girls (mostly the men, that is) wild animals from all parts of the world, snakes, cobras, pythons; a talented western horse; "Gargantu" a ferocious gorilla; pygmy troupes; the many sideshows with the amazing sights and other educational and entertaining shows under canvas.

There are all varieties of games. Bingo, always popular offers a fine assortment of prizes. There are teddy bears, kitchen utensils, rugs, jewelry; all for the lucky spin of a wheel.

Colorful Rides

Brilliantly illuminated whirling "rides" cast a moving curtain of color against the rain-drenched clouds. Shrieks of laughter and excitement rose high above the din of the barkers as youthful fair goers took advantage of the aerial spins. Several new rides were in evidence as well as all the old ones, and ticket sellers did not lack for business.

And the inner man is well taken care of. One can get his fill of potato chips, hamburgs, the ubiquitous hot dog, pink lemonade, fluffy candy, toffee apples, peanuts and all the fare that is as much part of a fair as are horses and cattle.

The Exhibition will continue today and tomorrow. This afternoon and tonight as well as Wednesday, the Billy Garden stage spectacle will be the feature presentation in front of the grandstand. The midway will again be running at full blast, while all other phases of this fine exhibition will be in evidence.

Mayors' Race

A special feature of tonight will be the 100 yards challenge race between Mayor Follwell and ex-Mayor Harry Rollins. This will take place in front of the grandstand at 8.30.

The Belleville Municipal Band, which did such a sterling job last night despite the rain will again be on hand to dispense its melody and rhythm.

Another feature of the opening night, was the fine work done by members of the Belleville Police Force and Provincial Police whose job in handling the large crowd especially in the grandstand and its vicinity is worthy of more than passing mention.

Speedboat Driver To Seek World's Record on Bay

Recognizing the American Power Boat Association sanctioned course off the Government Dock here as one of the best on the North American continent, Dr. Walter E. Robinson, of Alexandria Bay, N.Y., well-known speedboat driver has notified Rotary Regatta officials here that he has applied for permission to attempt to break the world's record for Class "E" runabouts over the Belleville course sometime in the near future.

Dr. Robinson who raced his "Ariel II" in thrilling races at the Rotary Regatta here in early August, has acquired a brand new Class "E" runabout, which he thinks can break the existing record of a fraction over 60 miles per hour.

The course here is a straightaway, and was laid out by City Engineer Charles Mott in conjunction with nautical experts. It was officially sanctioned by the APBA early this summer. It extends parallel with the government dock and gives competing boats a splendid chance for a full-speed start.

APBA officials here for the Rotary Regatta inspected the course and gave it a second stamp of approval.

Dr. Robinson will likely make his attempt at the world's mark between now and Oct. 15.

Smart Trapper Gets 7 Wolves In Three Weeks

Wolf trapping is a rather profitable business if the success of one, Albert Saulay of Turriff, North Hastings, is any criterion.

During the first three weeks in September Mr. Saulay, a professional trapper, has caught no less than seven timber wolves in the Huntingdon and Hungerford township area and according to County Treasurer Ross Bailey will collect in the neighborhood of $350 in provincial, county and township bounty. The wolves caught by Mr. Saulay were all large, Mr. Bailey stated.

Exhibits From Home, Farm And School at Fair Housed Attractively in Buildings

Belleville Fair this year has already become the meeting place of old-time friends and neighbors, in spite of the inclemency of weather conditions.

In the manufacturers' displays were found everything in electric appliances useful to a housewife, including well-known makes of stoves, washing machines, refrigerators and de luxe cleaners. A new Duo-Therm oil-burner heater and a Universal Refrigerator operated with coal-oil were of particular interest in Christian's Electric and Hardware booth, while a large electric meat counter displayed some good-looking viands to advantage. And radios to furnish music with your meals from a table made lovely with Wedgwood china in seven different patterns.

Excellent Showing

Speaking of radios the Stewart-Warner Company has an excellent showing of all sizes and styles; small portables, table models and consoles, featuring a beautiful large Sheraton design in mahogany finish.

The Alemite can offer everything in "castors" and smooth "gliders" for fine furniture. Their Southwind heaters are made to fit airplanes as well as automobiles and they have for inspection a full line of lubricating equipment for cars and farming implements.

Cars Shown

The new dark blue Nash Ambassador is a thing of beauty, with chromium bumper and grill. Streamlined with slip stream back allowing for comfortable sleeping accommodation, and air conditioning which regulates the interior temperature for either summer or winter. Fine upholstery gives to the deep seats an added attraction. A smaller Nash number is the five-passenger brougham coupe, with similar equipment.

Fine Hydro Exhibit

Of real interest is the Hydro exhibit where a complete farm is modeled on a large table, having light from a continuous three-wire service for house, garage, pump and poultry houses, implement sheds and cattle barns. The picture presented is a truly fine farm home with garden, orchard, lawn and driveway.

And not far away Mr. F. Elgie is displaying various rubberoid shingles and insul siding, while the Gilpin Co. of Toronto suggest that all fine homes require rock wool insulation for complete comfort.

Bata Has Exhibit

Shoes for ladies and gentlemen are exhibited by the Bata Shoe Co., a full line of ladies walkies, casuals and dress shoes and for the men work shoes, stitchdowns and oxfords.

The Ontario Department of Lands and Forest Division of Reforestation have a few seedlings growing in flower pots as samples of what may be done with pine, maple, red cedar, oak and spruce. Their slogan, "Plant trees for Protection"—and across the way, the Dominion of Canada Agricultural Department have a pictorial display explaining the life history of grubs, beetles and flies, all enemies of the farmer and the housewife; with actual specimens shown in fruits corn and on the foliage of various kinds of plants.

Display by Pupils

Pupils of our public schools have taken advantage of this opportunity to show some results of their training in all grades. Maps, writing, crayon drawing and carving give the observer some idea of talents being cultivated by our Ontario system of education. Collections of common weeds, foliage flowers, seeds as well as of leaves from various trees received admiration from passers-by. Dolls and fancy work from the girls; airplanes and bird houses made by the boys add much to the artistic arrangement.

The Canadian Cancer Society representatives are glad to give out pamphlets with plain talk concerning this steadily increasing treacherous disease. Samples of dressings for cancer cases are willingly shown and the ladies in charge hope that some social service club or other organization will assist the society by learning how to make these. Directions for same and other literature may be secured from the Toronto branch of the Canadian Cancer Society. The clinic nearest Belleville is in the Kingston General Hospital.

Fine Eating Place.

The dancing pavilion has been converted into a comfortable eating place with small tables and chairs and ladies from the L.O.B.A. and its juvenile organization, and from the Canadian Legion, offer hot or cold refreshments. The L.O.B.A. receipts will be used to buy a wheel chair for a war veteran. St. John Amblance have supplies ready to give first-aid in case of accident.

Horticultural Building.

The horticultural building houses those exhibits of most interest to women, both urban and rural.

Among the handcrafts and fine arts were beautiful hand sewn, knitted and woven specimens of handwork. Children's wear and household linens predominated but there were other accessories including hooked and braided floor mats and a great variety of color and style in handmade quilts.

In the art section fine oil and water color paintings vied with beautiful china pieces which are always appreciated. There is at least one new exhibitor this year with pictures in this part of the building.

The cases holding home-cooking bring visions of the days before rationing came into vogue as the angel, sponge, chocolate, spice and fruit cakes are viewed under glass, while home-made breads, biscuits and muffins, assorted sandwiches and dainties suggest a cosy corner and tea.

A number of pies show that housewives are good managers for several varieties of pies are being exhibited; double crust fruit pies, and single crust pies displaying their golden brown pumpkin filling or fluffy meringues while tarts with assorted fillings were temptingly displayed on plates or platters.

Riot of Color.

Among the gladioli are beautiful blooms in every shade of every color, from pure white and pale cream to deeper tones of yellow, orange and red, with variations. The prize single spike one "Aladdin" flame colored with white throat and markings. The prize winning single dahlia is a large decorative type bloom in mauve known as "Mrs. I. DeVere Warner," exhibited by Mrs. Bowerman. The best dozen spikes of gladioli in one container won the silver cup for Mr. Livesay and the best basket of dahlias belonged to Mr. C. J. Symons.

Among the smaller annuals are golden and French marigolds, nasturtiums, pansies, zinnias of which there are several varieties but asters as a class are not outstanding.

In the display of potted plants are Angelwing, Beefsteak and tuberous begonias, renowned everywhere for their flowers and foliage; but outstanding for variety are the plants exhibited by Mrs. Ponton. These include an orange tree and a lime, both bearing fruit and flowers. Oranges have previously been picked from the former but at present all the fruit is green; a large ivy growing in an antique soup tureen and a palm are other "unusuals" in this fine collection.

Fine Exhibit of Cacti

A really unique exhibit of cacti, belonging to Mrs. Ethier is attracting the attention of visitors, the "Old Man" being of unusual size in amateur gardening.

Smaller flowers were included in several lovely table centres whose pastel colors are reflected in the sheen of their silver containers.

The only exhibitors in the professional class are the Ellis Bros. who have recently purchased Bon Glad Gardens. If you like 'glads' don't miss these; the fully ripened blush of a peach and later varieties still in their green and russet coats. Surely never has Belleville Fair presented a more promising display of the products of the soil.

Mr. Holland of Eldorado is happy to show his golden pure extracted honey in gleaming glass containers of all sizes and in two and four pound pails and where could be have found a more suitable place than between the flowers and fruits, from whose nectar the busy bees gather this product of Nature's sweetness?

Altogether this whole building has become a bower of beauty, pleasing to the eye and useful for mankind's many needs.

More Duck Hunters Than Usual Eager For Opening

Ole Sol, if he puts in an appearance Wednesday morning, will be given a strange welcome. Gun blasts will provide a reverberating reception as city and district nimrods usher in the 1946 duck hunting season.

Marsh and swamp, lake, river and other haunts of the wily waterfowl will see a larger gun brigade than in former years, if the number of hunting licenses issued to date can be judged a criterion.

According to Ed. Thomas, Front Street issuer, over three hundred licenses have been issued up to last night; early this morning hunters thronged his tobacco shop to secure the necessary parchments.

While definite reports today were not readily available, it was stated along some parts of the hunting front, that the ducks appear to be fairly numerous. Pre-season scouts who have studied the various haunts state that considerably more ducks were apparent this year than last.

KILLS WIFE, SELF

Windsor, Sept. 24 — (CP)—Police said that following a domestic quarrel John Roy Brooks 44, of Sandwich West, shot and killed his wife and himself Saturday. Provincial Constable T. W. Harding was injured when he grappled with Donald Brooks, 21, son of the dead couple, in what the constable said was an attempt to prevent suicide.

Tommy Mason Commander Of New Legion Zone

Comrade Thomas Mason was unanimously elected Zone Commander of a new zone, temporarily called Zone 16B at a Canadian Legion zone rally held in Kingston on Sunday.

District Commander Douglas Thompson of Ottawa, conducted the ceremony which installed Com. Mason as District Commander of Picton, Wellington, Napanee, Deseronto, Stirling and Belleville branches. Following the installation, Com. Thompson stated that this was the first time in his term of office that he had officiated at the installation of a veteran of World War II.

He said that it spoke well for the future of the Canadian Legion when young veterans stepped forward to assume the responsibilities which have so long been carried by the older veterans.

Glad To Hand Torch Over

"We are tired," said Com. Thompson, "and are only too glad to hand the torch to these young men. They are full of pep and ideas and only require the benefit of the experience we oldsters have gained during the years. Our policy will be to train these young veterans and have them take executive office in the Canadian Legion as rapidly as possible."

A large delegation from Belleville Branch No. 99 motored to Kingston to attend the zone rally and returned with a feeling that the Canadian Legion was one hundred percent behind the veteran.

Pension Officer Heard

Comrade Ferguson, Pension Adjustment Officer, Canadian Legion Service Bureau at Kingston, gave a very interesting and instructive address on his various duties and outlined his work on representative cases brought to the attention of his Bureau. A Service Bureau is maintained at each D.V.A. centre and the cost is borne by a general assessment of $1.00 per year against each member of the Canadian Legion.

A pension adjustment officer has access to each veteran's file and must prepare cases for presentation to the Pension Board. He co-operates with the Red Cross where a ware bride requires assistance in returning to the old country. He works closely with the personnel managers of industry in placing disability cases. He works on war veterans' allowance cases, giving particular help to dual war veterans. Applications for hospitalization at a D.V.A. hospital may pass through his bureau and speedy handling of such cases is thereby assured. He works on applications for back pensions, increased pensions and appeals against Pension Board rulings.

It was very apparent to those attending the rally that Com. Ferguson is performing a very vital job for all veterans and he was tendered a hearty vote of thanks by the assembled delegates.

District Commander Speaks

The afternoon session of the rally was highlighted by an inspiring address by the District Commander. Com. Thompson stated that the Canadian Legion was not a poltical body but he viewed with alarm the manner in which the Veterans' Committee of the House of Commons had divided on straight political lines. This was not a healthy sign and must be carefully watched. Speaking on the housing situation, the government was charged with buck-passing They set up priorities for materials and then passed the ball to the local municipalities who succumb to local pressure and allow non-essential building. "Labor is not playing the game with the veterans," said Com. Thompson. "Let's all get to work and rising production will lower costs and we'll all have more money."

A hearty vote of thanks to Com. Thompson was moved by the Gananoque Branch and seconded by the Belleville Branch. The election of Com. Mason as Zone Commander took place and following his installation, the meeting adjourned.

STABBINGS REPORTED

Calcutta, Sept. 24 — (CP) — New tension gripped some sections of Calcutta as more than 2 dozen stabbings were reported during a fresh outbreak of Hindu-Moslem ill feeling. Several persons were wounded severely, but no deaths were listed.

The trouble, mainly in northern and eastern districts where some of the bloodiest fighting of the August communal massacre took place, started again last night when, the government said, a mob broke into a home and 3 persons were injured seriously.

BIG CROWD GREETS "IKE"

Halifax, Sept. 24 (CP)—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, United States chief of staff, was given a rousing send-off last night by a large crowd at the pierside when he boarded the liner Queen Mary for a trip to England and the continent on what he called "a general inspection" of American occupation forces.

GROUNDED BY FOG

Bronte, Sept. 24 — (CP) — The pilot of a light seaplane, apparently grounded by fog on a farm near this Halton county town Sunday, walked away seemingly unhurt. When police arrived at the scene, the pilot, who did not give his name, had left the vicinity, and had not been located Sunday night.

KILL PUFF ADDER

Kincardine, Sept. 21 (CP)—Two men working on the road at Pine River, 10 miles south of here recently killed a 43 inch puff adder, seven inches in diameter. A passing woman motorist first noticed the snake, one of the largest of it's kind even seen in the district.

TRAFFIC COP to Electricity

You found the copper wire bound with layers of woven cotton: This cotton helps to insulate the electric current—that is, to keep it on the track, going only where it is wanted.

This is only one of a thousand important cotton uses which most people seldom see or think about. But all these uses help to swell the present huge demand which is not confined to Canada but is world-wide.

In spite of the fact that our mills and staffs are working full tilt, it will be some time before we can catch up with orders. In the meantime, our production is being distributed on a quota basis so that all our customers may get a fair share.

More Public Interest Needed in Civic Affairs

Every two weeks, except for a recess period during the summer, our city council meets to conduct the business of the municipality. A large volume of business passes through the hands of the council every year and a great deal of it of vital interest to the ratepayers, and yet we are told very few of the city's residents take the time to attend any of the meetings. Mostly only the members of the council are present in the chambers.

Why is there this disinterestedness? It cannot be that the dates of meeting are not known for the reports of the meetings are given in this paper the day following. If this is a factor then the council meetings could be advertised in advance as has been suggested in some quarters. Perhaps, the fact that people can read in the press all they desire to learn, also, has some bearing on the matter. Whatever the reason it is not too encouraging for business and professional men to give their time to this work and then later, hear a lot of squawks on the street that some business they have transacted has met with disfavor.

It might be worth while for the agenda of the council meeting to be published in advance so that people would be aware of what is to take place and so govern themselves accordingly. If this plan were in effect there could be no complaints later that some business was being "railroaded" through. We do have reports of council in committee recommendation but are they complete enough?

We have the idea that our school students have too little knowledge of the practical side of municipal affairs. They know only what they are told in class or read out of textbooks. If we had our way every senior class in the public schools and all Collegiate classes would be required to attend council meetings at least once and later write a short essay on what they had observed. We are aware some bright minds will come up with the plea, "Haven't the youngsters got enough to contend with now?" or something equally facetitious.

No one would be optimistic enough to believe this would generate a love in all the students for civic matters or to attend meetings when they get older, but at least they would get some idea of how the city is being governed. And who can tell whether they would be interested until given the opportunity to find out otherwise.

The city has a good council and they have been aggressive in their efforts to improve the welfare of the city, and we believe they deserve more public interest than is being displayed. The least city residents can do is show some appreciation of the work being done by attending council meetings once in a while. If any one has any ideas on this matter we would be glad to hear of them.

Fire Prevention is Year Round Job

If ever there was need for a Fire Prevention Week, that necessity has been amply demonstrated by the trend of fire losses, in both life and property, which have occurred during the past year. It is quite true that fire prevention is a year round job, but the custom of observing a special week to impress upon the public the necessity of preventing fires has developed over a period of twenty-five years and has become a national tradition.

And well it might be! The loss of 391 lives and $42,000,000 property damage by fire in 1945 should stir every Canadian out of a complacency which threatens our national economy. Appeals to individuals to prevent fires on a strictly abstract basis seem to have had little effect. More often it is only when a person's pocket-book is affected that he begins to sit up and take notice. It is obvious therefore that, unless the present trend of increasing fire losses can be checked, fire insurance companies will have no other alternative than to increase their rates.

In 1921, the average rate per $100 of property against fire was $1.11 and, in 1944, it was 67 cents. In the face of rising fire losses, it is a question how long the insurance companies will be able to operate successfully on these low rates. And there is no doubt but that an increase in rates will have an effect on the cost of living, for modern commerce has been developed upon the ability to insure against unforeseen losses and the cost of insurance enters into everything we buy.

Every Canadian citizen will therefore be wise if he takes into consideration the fact that he will eventually have to pay for his own carelessness. He should resolve that the responsibility for such an increase in the cost of living shall not be his. He can do this by being careful about the disposition of his cigarettes and matches, by seeing that the heating equipment in his home is in a safe condition, by not using flammable liquids like kerosene to start the kitchen fire or gasoline for cleaning or other use in the home.

By these and many other means, he can avoid the dangers of fire not only to himself and his own family, but also to his neighbor and his neighbor's family. And by keeping in mind care, prudence and forethought, not only during Fire Prevention Week but for every week during the year, he can make of his country, Canada, a place of beauty rather than a country where stark ruins lie and gaunt chimneys rise on every hand to accuse him of his carelessness.

Hospitals

Every tenth American gets sick enough in the course of a year to become a hospital patient. Last year, more than 16,250,000 people — 12.3 percent of the total population — spent some time as patients in hospitals, says New York PM. Nearly 2,000,000 new citizens were born in the 7,000 hospitals in this country.

Hospitals rank among the first 12 biggest American industries. They represent a capital investment of more than $5,000,000,000, an operating expense of $1,000,000,000 a year, and employ about half a million people.

All but five percent are run on a non-profit basis.

Government-operated hospitals (local, state and federal) account for 78 percent of the total hospital bed capacity of the nation. Americans in hospitals on any given day in 1945 were 1,405,247.

The Omen of the Fish

Dutch fishermen express amazement because, having resumed fishing after six years, they find the fish much larger. That's not astonishing. Given six years to grow, a fish is bound to be larger — though in some cases of coursea growth might be stunted by the physiological repercussions of depth charges, mines and torpedoes.

And we are very lucky that the war didn't benefit wild life beyond giving fish an opportunity to attain the stature of mature years. Next time, if we read the signs rightly, the sabretooth tiger, mastodon, dinosaur and roc are going to have a fine chance to stage a comeback.

Round Table

Lord Athlone, former Governor-General of Canada, is to be the chief figure at a picturesque ceremony in London on October 25, says The Ottawa Journal. He will be installed as Knight President of the Knights of the Round Table Club in succession to Lord Bennett, former Prime Minister, who is retiring because of ill health. The Knights of the Round Table Club is a select body of outstanding men of the realm, whose aim is to perpetuate the ideals of King Arthur's knights.

PUPPIES

Eight black spaniel puppies! Wow!
Home is in a turmoil now.
Children staring, wide of eye.
Mother growling, don't come nigh.
Women wondering what to do;
Can they pull the weakest through?
Neighbors running in and out,
Just as if the news they doubt.

Eight black puppies! Leave a light
For the mother through the night;
Pan of milk beside her bed,
Making sure that she'll be fed.
Don't disturb her! Keep away!
Mother dogs don't want to play!
Yes, when they are older grown,
You may have one for your own.

Eight black puppies! Goodness me!
Never dreamed that there could be
Such excitement all day long;
Children coming in a throng,
Begging for a moment's peek;
Hurt, when told to wait a week.
Eight black spaniel puppies small!
No, we cannot keep them all!

Relations of Main Labor Groups Under Discussion

Windsor, Sept. 24 (CP)—Relations of Canada's major labor groups, the Trades and Labor Congress and Canadian Congress of Labor, came under discussion briefly Monday at the T.L.C. convention.

The convention was considering a resolution suggesting assistance to the Saskatchewan Federation of Labor in establishing an office in Saskatchewan.

The preamble spoke of "rival organizations" taking advantage of the opportunities for organization in Saskatchewan.

One delegate objected to use of the word "rival." He suggested it might be better defined as friendly rivalry. Carl Berg, Edmonton, acting chairman, said he could not accept such a definition.

"I have seen a lot of rivalry that is not friendly," he said.

The convention spent some time discussing a resolution asking for the establishment of a TLC research department. The proposal was referred to the executive after a number of speakers said they were handicapped in presentations to government boards by lack of research information.

The convention divided on whether the TLC should organize a National Automotive Maintenance Workers Union. The resolution committee opposed the resolution and was finally supported by a standing vote.

The committee opposed the resolution on the ground garage workers were in the jurisdiction of established craft unions. Those who favored the resolution said unless the workers were organized as a unit, regardless of their craft, the TLC would not be successful in organizing them.

Edmonton, Sept. 24—(CP) — More than 50,000 Western Canada farmers, staging a delivery strike of all farm produce, today awaited word from federal authorities as reports from Saskatchewan told of a threatened meat shortage and tight picket lines in Alberta continued to choke-off receipts of livestock and dairy products.

The return of Agriculture Minister Gardiner to Ottawa from a food conference in Europe lead most western farmers to believe that an announcement would be made shortly from Ottawa on the federal government's stand.

Meanwhile as the 30-day delivery strike by more than 20,000 members of the Alberta Farmers' Union moved into its 17th day, union headquarters in Edmonton began dispatching ballots to more than 800 locals throughout the province. The ballots asked farmers if they wish to continue the strike to force federal recognition of their demands for a fact-finding board to set parity between farm costs and returns.

Shortages of cream, milk, livestock and eggs were reported from many Alberta points today with restaurants and butcher shops closed for want of supplies at a few centres.

A severe slump in livestock receipts in Saskatchewan was reported during the weekend as the estimated 30,000 members of the United Farmers of Canada, whose membership is confined to Saskatchewan, increased their support for the Alberta farmers.

One of thirty-two volunteers who lived for six months on a European type of famine diet, under constant control and observation in a laboratory, doing the equivalent of light industrial work, with a daily intake of 1760 calories — which is a little more than half of the average American standard daily intake—gave his personal views of the experiment, and this is what he said, in part:

"The psychological aspects of starvation are unbelievable. We went there" (to University of Minnesota, to undergo the experiment) "because we were concerned about people abroad and wanted to do what we could to help those less fortunate than ourselves" (the experiment began before the end of the war), "but I think we lost that feeling after about two months" (two months of semi-starvation). "At the end of five months of starvation" (note that Mr. Legg calls it starvation, whereas Webster says starve means to perish with hunger, to die, also to suffer extreme hunger or want—still Mr. Legg, after five months of it, calls it starvation) "our attitude was 'to heck with the people abroad; I am hungry.'

"That was all that was important. The only important thing left was whether I was ever going to get food. I was interested only in myself."

(Remember, my overfed friends all the time the man knew perfectly well that as soon as the six months experiment was over he would get all he wanted to eat. There wasn't any doubt or uncertainty about that. Therefore he and his fellow volunteers had a great advantage over the millions of people in China, India and Europe who manage somehow to survive for month after endless month on a diet that may or may not yield as many calories per day as these 32 fine, courageous young Americans received, for the real famine is no experiment with the assurance of good square meals in the offing.

"We had to keep answering questions (psychological tests, mental tests, intelligence tests) "and our whole attitude was introspective. We lost our semblance of humanity and became similar to beasts . . . I got mad at a guy on a corner in Minneapolis because he could go and have something to eat . . . I saw a kid on a bicycle, my first thought was 'how could anybody have that much energy'. Then I thought he was probably going home to supper, I hated him. That is one of the most awful things I know.

"When the war ended we were on the first month of rehabilitation" (back on an adequate 3,150 caloric diet) We were sitting at supper when the news came. We talked about it for as long as 20 seconds and then discussion was about what we were going to eat tomorrow.

"News like that which was so important meant a lot to us, and to think that we talked about it for twenty seconds and that was all.

"What does it all mean?

"It comes to this. If you are going to bring people back you must send them tremendous amounts of food. Quality of food is not as important as quantity."

Now how could you expect anything like normal, reasonable or rational thinking, attitude, behavior or even will for peace on the part of people who are half starved, not for a determinate period with assurance of enough to eat to sustain them, but for an indefinite time and with the spectre of disease and death ahead, if six months of it even with the promise of plenty to eat when the test is over produces such a change in the mood and spirit of the finest type of our young men?

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Who were the Boxers?

The Boxers were members of a Chinese nationalistic secret society. "Boxer" was merely the English name of a member of the organization. Nothing in the Chinese name suggests fighting, fists or boxing, as generally supposed.

In the Peking dialect the name was "I Ho T'uan," Righteousness and Harmony Society." The Chinese words for "society" and "fist" sound somewhat alike, and the members of the society were militant, kept themselves in fighting trim by hand and fist exercises and displayed a clenched fist on their banners. Through mistake, or perhaps because of the pun, the name of the society was taken to be "I Ho Ch'uan," Righteous Harmonious Fists. For convenience the English and Americans called them Boxers. Although the Boxers originated earlier in the 19th century, they did not begin to attract much attention until 1899.

In 1900 the Boxers began open hostilities against foreigners in northern China in protest against the spoilation of their country by the Western powers. Foreign diplomats at Peking were warned to leave but did not do so because they were afraid to go to the coast unprotected. Boxers, with the avowed purpose of ridding China of all foreigners, assassinated the German minister while delivering an official note to the Chinese government, killed many missionaries and other foreigners and committed numerous crimes against Europeans. Most of the foreigners in the capital, as well as many native Christian converts, barricaded themselves in the British legation, where they were besieged by the Boxers.

Great Britain, Germany, Russia, France, Japan and the United States, collected a fleet in Chinese waters and sent a force of 18,000,000 soldiers, sailors and marines (2,000 of them Americans) to relieve the besieged and put down the uprising. The Boxer uprising was secretly encouraged by Tzu-Hsi, the "Great Empress Dowager," who was virtual ruler of China for 50 years and who is one of the most famous women in Chinese history.

After the "Boxer Rebellion" was suppressed the powers imposed upon China a punitive and compensatory indemnity of $337,500,000. Some of the powers thought this was too little, while the United States, which had no desire to punish the entire Chinese nation for what 40,000 Boxers had done, thought it was too much. The indemnity was secured by the customs revenue and the salt tax, which were taken over and administered by the powers. China agreed to pay the money in 39 yearly installments with interest at four percent.

ONTARIO SHORT OF JUDGES

Toronto, Sept. 24 — (CP)—Ontario, more particularly Toronto, has a new shortage problem—a shortage of judges. Two Assize courts were closed Monday because there are no judges available for them. The second jury court for civil cases has been cancelled, and so has the second non-jury court. The travelling schedule of all Ontario judges was revised for next week to meet some of the problems created by the shortage.

Sun Spots Black Out Wire Service

New York, Sept. 24 (AP)—Radio communications to Europe and the Orient were virtually blacked out by sun spots Monday night and early today, communications companies reported.

Press Wireless, Inc., said the radio blackout on all its international circuits except those to Buenos Aires was "one of the worst in the last two years."

A spokesman said that "even our New York to San Francisco channel was off the air until this morning."

Radio Corporation of America said its short wave transmission to and from Europe was "extremely bad all night," but long wave conditions were not as poor. The company said similarly bad conditions prevailed in short wave communications across the Pacific, but there was only minor interference in its radio lanes to South America.

Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company said traffic between New York and Copenhagen, London, Budapest, Rome and Berlin was "stopped all night."

KIDNAPPED HEIRESS FOUND

Tokyo, Sept. 24 — (AP) — Twelve-year-old Kuniko Sumitomo, kidnapped heiress to a Zaibatsu industrial fortune, was found unharmed near Nagoya today and police arrested Yoshigo Higuchi as her abductor, Kyodo News Agency reported.

Livestock Exhibit at Fair Of High Quality and Quantity; 650 Birds in Poultry Show

Classes Will be Exceptionally Keen and All Exhibitors Praise New Barn Built This Year

With an impetus of a new barn, the horse exhibit at the Belleville fair is one of the best seen in this district in years. The exhibitors are more than pleased that their valuable animals are housed in a warm, well-constructed barn and where the people can walk through with leisure and view them at their best. It has filled a long-felt want in the city, has improved the fair grounds immensely and the Parks Board and the City Council are to be commended for their action in providing the funds.

Last year the fair board went all out to provide a splendid class of horses, especially in the roadster and carriage class and this year the same exhibitors are back and they brought more with the result Belleville never had such a fine horse exhibit. There are nearly 100 horses quartered in the barns beside the race horses and they represent a large outlay of cash. The equipment for these animals is simply superb and it would be too bad if anybody paid a visit to the fair and did not go through the barns. What is true of the horses is also true of the cattle, sheep, poultry and swine.

Six-horse Hitch

The Sawyer-Stoll Lumber Company of Kaladar has a six-horse hitch that will be exhibited and the average weight of the animals is 1750 pounds, one of the teams being near the two-ton mark. Brodie Ness of Kingston and president of the Kingston Fair Board is here with six head of Clydes from the Le Moine Point Farms. John Black of Belleville has a general purpose team that has taken many prizes at the fall fairs in this district. Victor Little of Trenton is showing registered Belgians and H. Boyce of Cannifton a heavy draught team.

The Glen Valley Farm, owned by Arthur Wright and Son of Waupoos is showing aged percheron stallions and they are in the pink of show condition. H. L. Aylesworth of Napanee has an agricultural team that is hard to beat anywhere. Willet Hubbs of Bloomfield is also showing Belgians while Peter Milligan of Corbyville has carriage horses on display. Clarence Hicks of Bloomfield has Belgians and W. H. Lindsay of Campbellcroft has a fine pair of roadsters that will take some beating in any ring. Ralph Sadler of Nestleton and Ivan Corcoran of the same place are showing roadsters and the competition in this class is going to be exceedingly keen. Kenneth McMillan of Georgetown, who was here last year is coming back with a bigger and better class of carriage and registered pony hackneys. W. J. Watson of Orono has roadsters while J. A. McKay a new exhibitor to the fair is also bringing roadsters. The special for the best delivery horse will be very keen, Reid's Dairy having entered six outfits, while other bread and dairy firms are right in the swim.

Fine Percherons

George Jarrell has a number of fine percherons and Earl Bonisteel is showing a young agricultural team. Ray Ferren of Cavan has a percheron stallion and 3 mares, while Arthur Raycraft of Warkworth is showing roadsters. D. J. White of Cavan has percherons along with G. E. Robinson of Peterboro. John Wilson of Corbyville has light draught.

In the poultry division Jack Holley, chairman of the committee has worked wonders with this show. For some years there were no poultry exhibited but the last two years Mr. Holley has taken a hold of this department and a visit to the fair would be hardly worthwhile without a peek at the poultry. There are more than 650 birds on exhibition from the lordly brahmans to the little bantam. Ducks, geese and turkeys are in abundance and the game cocks had a large following. The building is well decorated and sets off the show considerably.

Cattle Exhibit up

The cattle exhibit is possibly up in numbers from that of last year, despite the fact that only one exhibitor, L. M. Pimmett of Indian River, is showing beef type cattle. There are four exhibitors showing Ayrshires, three Holstein and the same number showing Jerseys. M. Pimmett of Indian River is the exhibitor showing beef type with 13 head of Shorthorns.

Well-known county Holstein breeder, Emile Masse of Belleville is showing at Belleville Fair for the first time since 1939 while other Holstein exhibitors are Don Spencer of Ameliasburg and W. Latchford of Mountain View.

Ayrshire exhibitors are the LeMoines Point Farm of Brodie Ness at Portsmouth, Walter Lindenfield, a new exhibitor from Oak Hills district, Frank Smith of Odessa and Elmer Wood of Crookston with 26 head.

Practically on Par

The sheep and hogs exhibit is also practically on par with that of former years although there is one new exhibitor in the sheep classes. There are ten men showing sheep including A. Ayre of Hampton; H. Skinner of Tyrone with Shropshires; J. M. Murray, of Cresswell with 12 Cotswolds, G. H. Mark and Son of Little Britain with Cotswolds and Dorsets; P. V. Finnegan with Oxfords and Leicesters; Wilbur Johnston of Lindsay with Dorsets; John Kelsey of Woodville with Shropshires and South Downs; Bruce Lockie of Zephyr with Oxford Downs; C. U. Heath of Stirling with Shropshires and J. R. Garbutt of Belleville R. R. with Leicesters.

Eight Swine Exhibitors

There are eight swine exhibitors including Bruce Cummings of Napanee with Yorks; G. H. Mark and Son of Little Britain; with Berkshires; P. V. Finnegan of Sharps Corners with Tamworths; Arthur Chambers of Napanee with Yorks; John Kelsey of Woodville with Tamworths; Bruce Lockie of Zephyr with Berkshires; C. U. Heath of Stirling with Tamworths, and J. R. Garbutt with Yorkshires.

For the first time since prior to the war the farm machinery display has come back to the fair with three district dealers demonstrating various types of farm tilling, threshing and grinding equipment. Bateman Motors of Belleville are on hand with a fine display of Goodison farm equipment while Walter Elliott of Stirling is showing Case equipment and Bonn Motors of Belleville is giving a demonstration of Willys jeeps.

Mrs. J. W. Snell, Walton St., Port Hope, writes: "Super Suds is my helper in all my housework and I find it grand for washing clothes. It makes them so soft and white. Another thing, Super Suds is safe. It makes the clothes last longer and my colored things always look fresh. Super Suds gets the dirt out quickly and easily, and never hurts my hands."

Thank you, Mrs. Snell, for your grand letter. You see, Ladies, Super Suds is Concentrated. Super Suds actually gives you far more washing-power . . . livelier, richer suds, without hard rubbing. And Super Suds costs no more than ordinary washday soap.

In Greater Demand Than Ever

Today more people are using more telephones to make more calls than ever before

More People—You'd hardly think it possible—in view of post-war shortages—but our greatest increase in any whole year before the war was 63,000 new customers while in the first eight months of 1946 we added 90,000.

More Telephones—Before the war we served 780,000 telephones. Now there are 1,140,000.

More Calls—The number of local calls has increased proportionately but Long Distance calls have gone up 300%.

Telephone Operators are doing a wonderful job with this new flood of calls, keeping service standards high and delays to a minimum. But, to put every call through as fast as we—and you—would wish, we must have new lines and switchboards. Our huge service extension program had to wait until war orders were finished. Now it is being rushed through as fast as the material situation will permit.

THEIR WAY TO Enjoyment

Our lakes this summer are going to attract thousands of friendly visitors from the States. We want them to enjoy themselves . . . it's in our own interest to see they get the very finest of everything we can give them.

WHAT CAN I DO? The answer is plenty! Here are some of the things anyone can do. These practical suggestions come from a well-known Ontario Hotelman:

1. Know the places of interest and beauty spots in your district and tell people all about them.
2. When you write your friends in the States tell them about the places they would really enjoy visiting.
3. Try to make any visitor glad he came to Canada.
4. Take the time to give any requested information fully and graciously.
5. In business dealings, remember Canada's reputation for courtesy and fairness depends on you.
6. To sum it up, follow the "Golden Rule."

IT'S EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS . . . it's good business!

Worth his weight in gold! The Province of Ontario profits to almost the same extent from tourist business as it does from the gold mining industry. It's up to each of us to see that it goes on growing.

This diagram shows how everyone benefits from the Ontario tourist income. Every dollar is shared this way . . . 1. Hotels; 2. Stores; 3. Restaurants; 4. Taxes; etc.; 5. Amusements; 6. Garages.

It works both ways! They treat us royally when we visit them . . . we can't do less than return the compliment. Remember that it costs money to take a holiday . . . so let's see they get a good return for every penny they spend.

"Let's make them want to come back!"

Some Notes on the History Of Adolphustown

By JOSEPH FOSTER

Recently I had the pleasure of a weekend holiday at the Henderson summer cottage, located on the shores of Hay Bay in the township of South Fredericksburgh and during this period availed myself again of the opportunity of visiting the township of Adolphustown, that township where tourists love to linger in the long summer days, in order to study its historical background. On this occasion I had as a companion, Mr. W. G. Caswell, B.A., an architectural engineer of Ottawa.

It was here the United Empire Loyalists came in 1784, under Major Van Alstine, in a fleet of seven boats, guarded by a two-master square rigged vessel called a brig, carrying thirty guns and on these shores, built homes for themselves and families, from the primeval forests.

On June 16th., 1884, a monument was erected to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the landing. On this occasion, a large assemblage of people gathered from many parts of Canada. Patriotic addresses were delivered by Sir Richard Cartwright, Rev. D. V. Lucas, Doctor Canniff and D. W. Allison. A more enduring monument to those pioneers, is the memory enshrined in the hearts of the present generation, who with commendable zeal are taking active measures to preserve all of the old landmarks in the township connected with its early history.

• • •

Throughout Canada, from Vancouver to Halifax, United Empire Loyalists Clubs have been instituted. This organization is patronized by the more cultural and better educated people and is exclusive in the sense that only those who can establish without question their ancestral line or descent are eligible for membership.

History records that this small township, only three and a half miles square, has sent no fewer than eleven representatives to the legislature of Canada, and every one a Loyalist.

In the summer of 1820 a vessel neared the coast of Canada and among the many anxious eyes that saw the blue hazy hills of the new land for the first time, was a small family group, one of which was a bright-eyed little boy of five years old, with a merry face and a wealth of dark curly hair. No prophet could have foretold that the child who clung to his mother's arms was one day to rise to a place of the highest distinction in this strange new land and become one of the most conspicuous figures in her history, and so it was ordained that Adolphustown should cradle Canada's first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. Not so many years ago the Government of Canada erected a cairn on the shores of Hay Bay from the crude stones which had formed the foundation of the humble cottage where Canada's first Prime Minister spent his boyhood days. A bronze tablet set in the face of the monument tells the story.

The early pioneers or Adolphustown were a people who believed in the near presence of God and were steeped in the history of the Bible. They believed in the old-fashioned virtues, honesty, loyalty, love of family, hard work and self-discipline. They also believed in using the rod and would even send the culprit out in the thicket to cut it.

The two leading religious denominations were Anglicans and Methodists, with quite a number of Quakers, later designated The Society of Friends. The Anglican community has an enviable record of keeping alive the splendid traditions of their forebears and each year special services are conducted in the Anglican Church to retell the story of the United Empire Loyalists.

The early Methodists also did their part well, in laying the foundation of Christian principles, broad and deep and wherever the ring of the woodman's axe, or the crack of the hunter's rifle was heard, the pioneer preacher with his Bible and hymn book in his saddle-bag, followed the adventurous settler, to preach the glad tidings of the Cross.

Some years following the American Revolutionary War, missionaries of the Methodist denomination in the United States visited different parts of the country, particularly those communities where Loyalists of that faith had settled, Prescott on the River St. Lawrence and Adolphustown on the Bay of Quinte. William Losee appears to have been the missionary and was known as a Circuit Rider. He was commissioned to build the first Methodist Church in Canada at Adolphustown and did the preliminary work, but owing to an unfortunate circumstance, was unable to complete his assignment. It will be recalled that the settlement at Prescott comprised such notables in Methodist Church history as the Pemberton's, the Hecks, the Embury's and the Dunhams, all of whom came under the supervision of William Losee. The leading spirit of this group was Barbara Ruckle the talented wife of Paul Heck, who with her husband, had left Ireland in 1760 for the New World and since recognized as the founder of Methodism in Canada.

William Losee when visiting the Loyalists at Prescott would naturally be entertained at the home of Paul and Barbara Heck and thought highly of this family. During one of these visits he suddenly found himself desperately in love with the young, handsome and talented daughter, Katharine Heck, but decided the time not opportune to declare himself. Six months would elapse ere his itinerary would permit of another visit and when that time came and he learned that Katharine Heck was engaged to marry Reginald Pemberton, only son of Colonel Pemberton, a retired army officer from a wealthy, aristocratic English family, he collapsed and spent the remainder of his days in a mental hospital.

The Pemberton-Heck wedding was among the first to be solemnized in Upper Canada. The ceremony was performed by the Reverend Dr. John Stewart, first incumbent of St. George's Anglican Church, Kingston, who journeyed on horse back from Kingston, following a trail along the course of the River St. Lawrence to Prescott to perform the ceremony.

Following the retirement of William Losee, Reginald Pemberton and his young wife, Katharine Heck, were appointed to complete the building of the old Hay Bay Methodist Church, which was opened for religious service in 1792.

The late Rev. Dr. W. H. Withrow relates in his history of "The Life of Barbara Heck" that this energetic young couple actually squared with their axes a considerable portion of the heavy pine timber used in the construction of this building and the axe marks made by these improvised Christian workers remain until this day.

The story of Adolphustown would not be complete without again recording the very sad tragedy which occurred on Sunday, August 29th., 1819, when ten young people on their way to attend a religious service in this same church, met their death by drowning when the boat in which they were travelling suddenly capsized, plunging all the occupants into the water. This disaster was long remembered and the sympathy of the entire community went out to the bereaved families. The writer's grandmother, many years ago, related this story with much feeling. She was eighteen years old at the time and had two cousins among the victims.

The old Methodist Church on this date is one hundred and fifty-four years old. It stands majestically on the shores of the beautiful Bay of Quinte near the entrance of Hay Bay. It is built of pine timber, sixty feet long and forty feet in width and two storeys in height. Many years ago it was closed for religious service and later sold to a farmer and used as a storehouse for farm implements. Twenty-five years ago the United Church of Canada purchased the building and at that time made extensive repairs. The boards covering the outside walls were removed, treated with a wood preservative and replaced. The roof also was renewed and with these repairs the old church presented a decidedly neat appearance.

It is now a quarter of a century since the repair was made and visitors can discern considerable deterioration at this time. The outside boarding near the foundation is falling off, exposing the timbers to the elements and some of the panels in the front door have dropped out. The war and scarcity of labor and materials are doubtless responsible for the present condition. The grounds are covered with a heavy growth of weeds and grass, uncut, and one wonders how a wooden building, unoccupied and so vulnerable to the ravishes of fire, has escaped destruction.

The United Church is to be commended for its foresight in securing this valuable property, that it might be preserved and the present generation are under obligation to assume this responsibility.

It would appear to the casual observer that the leaders of the United Church resident in this county and on the ground floor as it were, are in the best position to make proper recommendations for the restoration of this ancient church, which at the present time is a liability but can in the opinion of many responsible people, be made a valuable asset. Patriotic citizens of the neighboring counties of Frontenac, Prince Edward and Hastings would gladly co-operate in such a laudable and commendable undertaking.

Let us presume for example that funds could be secured by popular subscription, for:

1. To dress up the old church with a new white coat of stucco.
2. Level and landscape the grounds.
3. Protect the property with a permanent link-wire fence and an attractive entrance.
4. Erect a five or six room summer cottage, where ministers of the United Church could holiday, alternately, for two or three weeks during the summer months and during their residence superintend religious services on the Sabbath Day in the old church.
5. Arrange pilgrimages during the summer months from outside communities to journey to Adolphustown in an automobile cavalcade to enjoy the unbounded hospitality of its citizens and to study at close range its inspiring history.

• • •

The grounds on which this church is situated and the general layout would do admirably for the working out of an attractive program of restoration. A good road fronts the property and the Hydro electric service is already on the spot. The shore line of the bay at the rear can easily be reclaimed and made attractive, with easy access to the water.

The writer in conclusion wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to Mr. W. G. Caswell, B.A., of Ottawa, for many of the suggestions here recorded.

HOSPITAL AUXILIARY

The regular monthly meeting of the Hospital Auxiliary was held in the Nurses' residence with the President, Mrs. H. Wray, in the chair.

The Treasurer reported the Tag Day showed net proceeds of $367.29, which was very pleasing to the Auxiliary members.

A letter from Mr. Gordon Barclay was read explaining the reason the tray morgues had not been installed and quoting the purchase price of the two humidicribs ordered by the Auxiliary. A cheque was issued to the Hospital for $512.50 to pay for these cribs.

The Auxiliary is also buying an orthopedic table for the hospital and a cheque of $750 was issued for same.

A letter from Mr. J. B. Barclay was read expressing his appreciation of the Auxiliary's splendid co-operation with the hospital during his term as administrator and wishing them every success.

The Vice President, Mrs. Langlois, took the chair to receive the report of the nominating committee. The slate of officers presented for the coming year being:

Mrs. G. Stobie, Interim President; Mrs. G. Scott, 1st Vice President; Mrs. J. Forrester, 2nd Vice President; Mrs. E. B. Lally, Recording Secretary; Mrs. F. Camken, Treasurer; Mrs. T. P. Aman, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. R. Grant and Mrs. R. Andrews, conveners of Ways and Means.

The matter of a Fall tea was discussed and same will be held at the home of Mrs. G. H. Stobie in November.

"I Was Young Then—"

By Genevieve Fournia

Recently I had supper at a summer cottage miles from town. The cottage stood on a point of land, with a superb view of Lake Ontario. The lake washed into a small body of water, on one side of the cottage, that the residents called The Pond. While rowing about here, we saw a wild duck swimming close at hand, scores of gulls circling and wheeling above and lighting on the water — a dainty sandpiper mincing along the shore, and large carp jumping right out of the weedy water. It was an isolated and beautiful spot.

We sat down to supper at a large table, that would have been rectangular except for a half-circle table at each end, that made it oval. I exclaimed at the beauty of this old table. The cottage was closed from Fall till Spring each year, and fogs and dampness must creep into it, but so well seasoned was this old table, that such things had no effect on its beauty.

In the centre of the table was an Early American pressed glass goblet filled with zinnias. This was really more like a chalice, about six inches across the top, and not really as tall as a goblet. The design was lovely. There were ironstone china plates in the wheat design here, an old mirror in a lovely frame, and other pieces of early glass. My hostess dismissed them by saying they were her aunt's, who had her grandmother's things.

I had thought this old pioneer county has about been cleaned out of antiques, but a dealer told me he didn't think the surface had been more than scratched. "They are hidden away," he said, "owned by families that don't know their value."

• • •

Later I heard of another summer home, where the young people and their mother spend their holidays, but go to an American city for the winter. Heirlooms from two old families have been handed down to these girls, and are assembled in this summer home. There is a dining room table and chairs in mahogany, a melodeon and a very old silver tea service, among the items. They have been offered one thousand dollars for the contents of the cottage, but, at least as long as their mother lives will not accept.

A young American who came to the county to live, decided that she would express her love for antiques in one bedroom. She started with a spool bed, and decided to take her time, and acquire other pieces, one at a time. Now her room is almost complete and is very interesting and beautiful.

• • •

Another visitor to the county each summer, from one of our cities, counted on taking back one heirloom peice each year. This year she was put out because she had found nothing. She went to call on friends near the end of her visit, and spoke of her hard luck. They had recently acquired one of the older houses. They asked her what she would have liked. She said: "A coal oil lamp, that could be made into a desk lamp". They produced a ruby glass one, that had been in the house, and gave it to her. Once again her holiday was complete.

• • •

Another woman I know loves antiques, particularly fine china. She has plenty of time, so attends many auctions, and private sales. She reads a great deal about antique glass and china and has a well trained sense of what to buy. She picks up authentic pieces wherever she finds them and puts them on her pantry shelves. When out-of-town dealers come along she gets in touch with them, and invariably sells what she has acquired at a very tidy profit. Then she has money to start out buying again. It is like a game with her.

Tea and Shower For Bride-to-Be

On Sunday afternoon the home of Mrs. Leonard Wilkes, 120 Catharine Street, was the setting for an attractive afternoon tea and miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Gladys Lummiss, of Kingston, the joint hostesses being Misses Lenore Wilkes and Hazel Smith. Having opened the twenty or more useful and beautiful gifts presented to her, Miss Lummiss graciously thanked her friends for their kindness in arranging the party, as well as for their gifts.

In the dining room, the table presented a most attractive appearance with its lace cloth, centred with a one-layer "wedding cake" with pink and white snapdragons and baby's breath standing in the central opening of same, and on either side silver candelabra each holding three tall white tapers.

After the tea Miss Lummiss returned to Kingston where she holds a lucrative position with the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

By MARY CRAWFORD

At this home in Hyde Park overlooking the Hudson River, Franklin D. Roosevelt was born, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt. He grew up on the banks of the majestic river, played and learned the lore of the woods and fields until he was old enough to go away to school. In this home, after his marriage to his distant cousin and childhood playmate, Eleanor, their children also grew up, while he embarked on his remarkable public career. It was from this district that he first campaigned successfully for office, and from 1911 to 1913 represented his neighbors as New York State Senator. To this home he came often while waging his long fight to conquer the infantile paralysis contracted in 1921. To its familiar ancestral surroundings he frequently returned for relaxation and refreshment from the turmoil of public life. In accordance with his expressed wish, his body was returned for burial there, following his sudden death at Warm Springs, Ga., on April 12, 1945.

Comfortble Home

The home is situated at the edge of a gently rolling plateau overlooking the Hudson River and is a product of many renovations and additions. The central portion is covered with stucco and is fronted by porch with a sweeping balustrade and a small colonnaded portico. On each end a two storey wing has been erected, giving the whole structure an H shape. It is comfortable home filled with the small treasures and knick-knacks so dear to the hearts of all family groups. The interests and way of life of the family are evident immediately upon entering the large rectangular front hall with its benches, sideboard, pictures and prints, grandfather clock, and built-in glass-covered case for the birds which the late President collected and mounted when he was a boy of eleven.

Opening off the hall are the dining room and the reception room, both of which overlook the Hudson River valley countryside. The dining room is subdued in tone but the reception room is light and elaborate. It is called the "Dresden Room" because of its delicately wrought Dresden china chandelier and matching mantel set and is filled with mementoes of the wide travels and interests of Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt.

The "Snuggery"

The south hallwy leads past the "Snuggery," Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt's sitting room, also filled with her treasures to the large living room, or library, which occupies the whole lower floor of the south wing. In this cheerful and spacious atmosphere the family met, played, read, and entertained. Between the two fire places, one at each end, a profusion of comfortable sofas and chairs, tables, bookcases, flowers, and plants fills the room.

On the second floor there is the same evidence of livable attributes. The small bedroom that was used by the late President as a boy, the guest bedrooms, occupied at various times by the many notables who visited the Roosevelts and the room in which he was born are situated along the hallway and at the end of the hallway, in the stone wing over the library, are the bedrooms of the late President and his wife. Lying on a chair is a dog harness and coat with the Navy ensign, belonging to the President's famous Scotty "Fala".

Grave in Garden

In a small garden northeast of the home almost completely surrounded by a century-old hemlock hedge, is the grave and was chosen by Franklin D. Roosevelt as his burial place. Here on April 15, 1945, he was laid to rest in the southern section of a large rectangular grass plot with a border of perennial flowers. The "Rose Garden" as the President and his family knew it, derived its name from the roses that fill the eastern half. A roses garden was traditional with the family, for the surname Roosevelt was adopted from the Dutch "field of roses "in the ancestral land and perpetuated in the family coat of arms, three roses on a shield, surmounted by a casque and three feathers. A white marble tombstone, with a slight trace of color highlighting its natural beauty, has been placed immediately north of the grave. Plans for the tombstone were drawn by President Roosevelt himself in a memorandum dated Dec. 26, 1937. The exact text of the note, containing instructions which have been followed explicitly reads:

Plain Monument

A plain white monument—no carving or decoration—to be placed over my gave, east and west, as follows: Length, 8 feet; width, 4 feet; height, 3 feet. Whole to be set on marble base extending 2 feet out from monument all around—but base to be no more than 6 inches from the ground. I hope that my dear wife will on her death be buried there also and the monument contain no device or inscription except the following on the south side;

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

1882 - 19—

Anna Eleanor Roosevelt

The site includes the home and the grave and various outbuildings, such as barns and a greenhouse.

Adjacent to the National Historic Site is the Franklin D. Roosevelt library, a depository for the papers, books, and other historical material acquired by the late President. The museum section of the library is open to the public during the same hours as the home, and many pictures, models and art obpects accumulated by Franklin D. Roosevelt are on exhibition.

Seaplane Lands in Hayfield

Bronte, Sept. 24 — (CP)—Paul P. Pearson, an executive of Fleet Aircraft, Fort Erie, landed his light seaplane in a hayfield here yesterday when he encountered dense fog on a flight from Noranda, Que., to Fort Erie. Pearson was uninjured.

The pilot said he believed he was as far west as Hamilton before circling back to the Oakville district in search of a landing place.

"I flew around and tried to hit the water but the soup got too thick," he said.

ment-conducted strike votes called for denunciation of the order-in-council and organization to resist its application.

William England, United Rubber Workers, Kitchener, called the "infamous clause six" of the industrial relations committee report the "most vicious piece of legislation ever brought in" and told the convention "we have to use every means at our command to fight it and try to have it thrown out."

Jack Robinson, Textile Workers' Union, Hamilton, moved an amendment referring the resolution back to the resolutions committee. He said he believed the Congress should go on record as supporting the idea of a boycott if the government instituted its power to call a vote.

J. McLean, United Automobile Workers, Woodstock, said that in several strikebound companies management was preparing to take strike votes.

If the government took action it should be mandatory that all C.C.L. affiliates "lay down their tools until this thing is corrected," he said.

C. H. Millard, national director of the United Steelworkers of America, outlined the plans of the Steel Company of Canada to take a strike vote among its employees in Hamilton. The ballots were to be marked and sent to W. H. Lovering, registrar of deeds.

"For all we know he may be a large shareholder of the steel company," said Mr. Millard. "I don't know — yet."

Brief Flurry

A brief flurry was touched off by J. Eldon, United Automobile Workers, Toronto, when the resolutions committee outlined its procedure for the 271 resolutions prepared for the convention.

Told that no resolution had been framed in connection with the "besetting and watching" charges facing George Burt, Tom McLean and Harry Rooney, members of the United Automobile Workers at Windsor, Mr. Eldon urged one be prepared on the floor of the convention.

President A. R. Mosher, who earlier called for labor unity in his opening address, said he could not accept a resolution submitted in that manner.

"Do I understand the convention is going to stand on a technicality (concerning this) greatest attack on organized labor?" asked Mr. Eldon.

He finally agreed to postpone the question.

Keen Fight Shaping

There was a general feeling among delegates that a keen fight will shape up over whether the Congress should continue to endorse the C.C.F. as "the political arm of labor," although none of 11 resolutions on political action prepared for the Congress deals specifically with the question.

The theme of most of the resolutions is that political candidates should be endorsed by labor, not on the basis of party affiliation, but upon independent consideration of the record of each candidate in each riding.

Unions in which left-wing elements are said to be strong — United Electrical Workers—(C.I.O.), Ford Local 200 of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), British Columbia Federation of Labor and other western unions — are expected to lead the fight to prevent the C.C.F. from acting as sole spokesman for Canadian labor.

Mr. Mosher said in his presidential address that the C. C. F. represents a closer approach to the principles and policies of Canadian labor than any other party.

"I believe further that it holds out greater promise of industrial peace, economic security and human happiness than any other paryt in Canada, and that it fully deserves the support of Canadian workers as a whole," he said.

My Backache Gradually Disappeared"

Could any woman tell a happier story about backache than this:

"About 6 weeks ago I started having awful pains in my back. At times I could not straighten myself and I got depressed and worn out. I could scarcely carry on with my household duties and everything was being neglected. It was then I saw a Kruschen advertisement and I decided to give Kruschen a trial. I started by faithfully taking a small teaspoonful in hot water in the morning, and in three weeks—my word, what a difference! The pains gradually disappeared and though I am now 46, I really feel years younger."—Mrs. H. M.

There is always a cause of backache: and in many cases it can be traced to toxins or poisons, which stay in the system instead of being eliminated. And that is where Kruschen saline treatment can be of real help to you. Kruschen is a balanced combination of mineral salts . . . and its action is to help your organs of elimination. By taking Kruschen faithfully for a few weeks . . . as Mrs. H. M. did . . . many people have found joyous relief from wearisome backaches and rheumatic pains. The Kruschen saline treatment costs so little to try . . . Use it in your own case. Kruschen has helped others. Why shouldn't it help you? All drug stores have Kruschen at 25c. and 75c.

Harry Brecheen Pitches, Bats Cardinals to Victory Protecting Half-game Lead

Brooklyn Dodgers Win From Phillies by Scoring Five in the Eighth

By RALPH RODEN
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

The St. Louis Cardinals' lineup is studded with some of the best hitters in the National League but in the last three victories gained by the league leaders, the pitchers have supplied the punch at the plate.

Relief hurler Ted Wilks helped the Cards to victory Thursday when he singled in the Red Birds' winning run. Saturday it was little Murray Dickson who doubled home the game-winner and yesterday Harry "The Cat" Bercheen pitched and batted the Birds to a 1-0 victory over the Cubs at Chicago.

Brecheen singled Joe Garagiola in the third inning with the only run of the game as the Cards protected their slim half-game margin over Brooklyn Dodgers, who trimmed Philadelphia Phillies 6-1 at Ebbets Field.

Garagiolia opened the inning by singling off Hooks Wyse who pitched the first seven innings for the Bruins. Marty Marion sacrificed the rookie backstop to second and Bercheen followed with a hit over second to register the recruit.

The veteran left-hander allowed the Cubs nine hits and was in trouble in seven of the nine innings but had it when he needed it.

It was Brecheen's third shutout and fifth victory over the Cubs this season.

Played it Tight

The Dodgers and Phils played it tight until the eighth inning when the Brooks scored five runs in two walks, four hits and a long fly.

With the bases loaded, Stan Bojek, batting for pitcher Rube Medton, dropped a pop fly back of first base to drive in one run. Ed Stanky bunted safely for another run and two more came home when Cookie Lavagetto singled. Augie Galan drove Stanky home with the fifth run of the frame on a fly to left.

Today, the Dodgers clash with the Phils while the Cards battle Cincinnati Reds under the lights at St. Louis. The Cards have five games left to play while the Dodgers have only four.

No other games were scheduled in the National League and in the only scheduled American League game, the third place New York Yankees topped the tail-end Philadelphia Athletics 9-6. Rookie righthander Vic Raschi went the route for the Yanks.

Feller, Boudreau Only Players Sure of Jobs

Bill Veeck Will Trade Any Member of Team to Get Out of Sixth Place

By JOE REICHLER

Cleveland, Sept. 24 — (AP) — Bill Veeck, energetic young president of Cleveland Indians, is prepared today to trade everybody on his club, except Bob Feller and Lou Boudreau, in an effort to lift his sixth place club into the American League's first division next year.

Now that his "oats-feeling" 3 months period is ended, (Veeck gained control of the Indians last June — and he has had an eyeful of his playing personnel) the sandy-haired, good-natured former marine knows exactly which of his 1946 players he wants to keep.

"Naturally, I cannot tell you who is going to remain besides Feller and Boudreau, and who is going to leave," Veeck said Sunday after the Tribe lost a double-header to Detroit Tigers. "Once I publicly announce who is on the market, his trading value takes an immediate nose-dive. But I certainly don't intend to stand for a sixth-place club."

It was known that Veeck had asked waivers on almost every member of his team, including several star performers.

"Feller, baseball's greatest pitcher, and Boudreau, the best shortstop, will be the background of my new club," Veeck continued. "Lou, of course, will manage the club in '47. That's final.

Veeck was high on Ed Robinson, the runs-batted-in king of the International League. He expects Robinson to be the Indians' first baseman next year.

Recently Veeck announced that as a reward for enabling the Indians to pass the 1,000,000-mark at the gate for the first time, he was inviting the fans to see tomorrow's game with Chicago White Sox "on the house."

Ancaster captains the Canadian boys. There's a little inter-sectional rivalry thrown in since the Canadian team has snaffled Jules Huot of Montreal, recent P.G.A. eastern Canada titlist and Stan Horne, 1946 Millar trophy winner, throws in his lot with the other team.

The team garnering the most points in two rounds will become the first winners of the trophy and proceeds from the day's event will go to the P.G.A. Benevolent Fund.

Among the top-notch pros competing are Bob Gray, three-time Millar winner, who is on the British team, and Gord Brydson, Elmer Blower, Jack Littler and Hugh Borthwick on the opposition.

On the British side are Willie Spittal, Cornwall; Bob Lamb, Waterloo, Galt; Lionel Ross, Cobourg; Lex Robson, Kawartha, Peterborough; Fred Hunt, Brantford; and Dick Green, Cataraqui, Kingston.

Watson's Arrival Will Complete Leafs' Roster

St. Catharines, Sept. 24 (CP) —Harry Watson, late of the Detroit Red Wings who was assigned to Toronto Maple Leafs in the weekend National Hockey League trading scramble, was expected today at the Leafs' training camp here, rounding out a roster of 20 players.

The 19 on the ice lanes at the Leaf camp yesterday shaped up as two goalies, five defencemen and 12 forwards. The goalies are Turk Broda and Bas Bastien; the defencemen are Car Boesch, Vic Grigg, Bob Goldham, Wally Stanowski and Jimmy Thompson.

The four forward lines as they worked yesterday were Syl Apps, Pete Langelle and Bill Ezinicki; Vic Lynn, Ted Kennedy and Howie Meeker; Gaye Stewart, Bud Poile and Gus Bodnar; and Nick Metz, Johnny McCormack and Joe Klukay. On these lines the centre players were Langelle, Kennedy, Poile and McCormack.

Manager Conn Smythe said the Leafs could carry one goalie, five defencemen and four forward lines in the coming season, which means that with Watson's arrival there will be two extra.

Smythe did not go into details, but he did say that "thirty games from now we should be in as good a position as any teams in the league."

Golf News

Sunday afternoon the finals of the two-ball mixed foursome were held at the Bay of Quinte Golf and Country Club. The results showed that Dr. and Mrs. Stobie of Belleville were the winners of the tournament and the trophy that is awarded to the winners.

This Wednesday afternoon Ken Reid, the Quinte Club Captain, is taking a strong team of over 20 golfers to Kingston, to play the return match with the Kingston Cataraqui Club. Quinte won out at their home course last Wednesday afternoon but Cataraqui are going to be all out this week to avenge their previous loss. In any case the Quinte Club players are in for a good afternoon of golf as the Cataraqui Club is reputed to be one of the finest championship golf courses in Ontario. Most of the men's tournaments have been completed at the Country Club. The only one remaining is the Club Handicap. In this competition Tom Carruthers and Mr. Jackson are the finalists. They played the final round last Saturday afternoon in the pouring rain to a tie. Eighteen holes will be played again this coming weekend for the Quinte Club Handicap championship.

THE MAYOR THE MERRIER

dear boss,

sneaking around the fair grounds over the weekend and list'nen to the grapevine today, i hear there's a lot to-do about this battle of the mayors which comes off at the fair grounds tonight, weather, wives, wind and whatnot permittin'.

• • •

fools rush in where angels fear to tread and likewise i can get where air gets, and boss there's plenty of that stuff around. anyway here's what i learned on the beat, and under the table.

• • •

mayor frank follwell, who has the ontario mayors' challenge mug on his parlor table together with a picture of the mayor from cornwall who he beat a little while ago, although what the cornwall mayor didn't know was that our chief clerk had an outboard motor hidden under the south side of his racin' trunks, has been practisin' faithfully for what he figures may be a forerunner of election or sumpin. not that the ex-mayor member of the parks board is figurin' on running for his old office, but just in case some other young or old upstart gets ideas of takin' that mayor's job away cum December.

• • •

anyway, i hear that the his worship has a new pair of gold and maroon trunks; has got a new permanent and has been takin- settin' up exercises ever since he drew a black cat brooch in one of the 25c boxes of candy he got hooked for at the circus. he's been doin' shadow boxin' in his room in front of a mirror and the other night he broke the dang thing when he thought he saw ex-mayor rollins grinning at him from the other side of the glass.

• • •

New he's bemoanin' his luck and is goin' around restaurants lookin' for salt shakers to upset so he can throw some of the stuff over his shoulder. But there aint no salt-shakers, nor no salt.

• • •

ex-mayor rollins, hasn't been lettin' any hay grow under his feet either—only in the fair grounds. i hear he will be escorted to the scene of battle by a special guard of toga-clad Kinsmen, who will gurgle the "Chant of the Light Brigade" or "When the Floodlights are Erected, twill be tulip time in Aklavik."

• • •

seriously, boss, mr. rollins has had a special pair of shoes made for the big event. they are equipped with special lead ballast so by the time he crosses the finish line, the judges may pin first price on him for being the best carriage nag in the show.

there aint no rules or regulations to the bout, except both runners will start from scratch, wherever that is. There was a suggestion that they be hitched to sulkies so that radio and newspaper men could go along and get a puff-by-puff description of the race, but that was ruled out because there are no two-legged hobbles in existence.

• • •

both men weighed in last night and both declared themselves fit: mayor follwell tipped the scales at 198 fighting weight, while the ex-mayor, after they took four sets of horseshoes from his trunks waggled the beam at 164.

• • •

the winner will be matched with the victor of wild bill longson-lee henning main bout at the hume arena friday night.

• • •

All joints must be oiled or greased five minutes before post-time. 8.25 that is, and when you hear the long groan, it will be ten o'clock and the race should be half ever.

hopin you're the same winnie—the office mosquito

A TIP TO SLIDERS

Before Pete Reiser acquired the habit of stealing home with considerable regularity, he virtually had to educate the umpires to the peculiar slide he uses. In the begining the ball would beat him to the plate and the Men in Blue would automatically call him out. It still beats him to the plate but Pistol Pete usually is called safe because the catcher can't tag him. He slides far to the right of the rubber and merely flicks it with his left hand as he flashes past.

• • •

The Brooklyn Dodgers and the Cincinnati Reds replayed their nineteen-inning scoreless tie the other day and it would not have startled anyone if they became involved in another marathon. It's an old Dodger habit. The record distance, of course, was the famous twenty-six-inning game between the Brooks and the Braves in 1920. But what few persons recall is that the Dodgers played the Phils a thirteen-inning game the very next day and returned to Boston just in time to win a nineteen-inning affair — or a total of fifty-eight innings for three successive games.

A customer claims that Babe Ruth would have hit 100 home runs a season if he had not been handed so many bases on balls. The records reveal the "At Bats" of the stars who pressed the Bambino the hardest. Here they are: Ruth, 60 homers in 540 times at bat; Jimmy Foxx, 58 in 585; Hank Greenberg, 58 in 546; Hack Wilson, 56 in 585. So the difference is not as great as some fans would suspect.

• • •

"It looks like the biggest night in many a season" said Arena manager Walt Gerow today, referring to the world title bout between Champion Wild Bill Longson and Lee Henning here on Friday night. "Longson is officially putting his National Wrestling Association title up and if Henning should get him in that rope tie-up of his, Belleville fans may see a world championship change hands" continued Gerow.

• • •

About the only man that the titleholder ducks these days is Whipper Billy Watson who gave him such a going over in St. Louis two years ago that Longson has refused a Toronto match with the Whip ever since. But in meeting Henning the Champion will be up against one of the hardest cases the mat sport has ever produced.

• • •

Outside of the night when Henning's neck was seriously injured here a couple of months back (and which put him out of action for five weeks) no one has ever been able to seriously cope with the wild man from Iowa. Henning has a trick of tying up an opponent's leg in the ropes or turn buckle and then beating the man's hanging body until the poor fellow is no use even when the referee does release him.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Sept. 24—(CP)—The intercollegiate football season is still two weeks away but already the senior teams are giving notice that their calibre of play this year is getting back to pre-war standards.

University of Toronto and McGill played their first exhibition games Saturday and both came through with victories, Toronto downing their home-town Indians of the Ontario Rugby Football Union 8-7 and McGill whipping Loyola College intermediates 46-6.

The fact that Indians had a league game the previous night should be taken into consideration in estimating the significance of Varsity's victory but the fact remains the Collegians won from the good senior team and won convincingly despite the closeness of the score.

McGill had been expected to beat Loyola but the power the Redmen unleashed in their triumph was beyond the expectations of their most ardent fans. Their offensive clicked on the ground and in the air and even dour Doug Kerr, the McGill coach, must have gained more than usual satisfaction from the showing.

On the strength of Saturday's games, University of Western Ontario would appear to have a tougher season ahead than last year when they romped to the title. The Londoners are pre-season favorites for the league crown, but if Queen's University can compare in any way with McGill and Toronto it should be a wide-open, crowd-pleasing race that will restore college football to former greatness.

• • •

School Stuff

Cancellation of high school football in Montreal this season will be a sad blow to the thousands of youngsters who turn out each Saturday for games which to them are more important than Big Four or college contests.

The American-style game that the schools play here has a big following and in past seasons crowds of 5,000 have not been uncommon for Saturday afternoon double-headers.

Protestant school authorities have decided, however, that the health of students is of greater concern that their sport and warned by doctors that over-exertion frequently results in poliomyelitis have decided to take no chances in view of the current epidemic of polio here.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Sept. 24 —(AP)— If you can believe all you hear, things are going to be very tough for big league baseball managers in the next couple of months — and the shake-up in their ranks is nothing compared to what will happen to their ball clubs next spring. . . . So far this season, Joe McCarthy, Bill Dickey, Luke Sewell, Jimmy Dykes and Bill McKechnie have gone out. Zach Taylor, Sewell's successor, will give way to Muddy Ruel next season. . . . The reports are that Frank Frisch is through in Pittsburgh the Yanks are expected to come up with a new pilot for 1947 — possibly Leo Durocher or Bucky Harris; and there even have been whispers that Connie Mack is losing his popularity in Philadelphia and that Joe Cronin might move up to the Red Sox front office. . . . Apparently the only guys who are safe now are Ruel and Steve O'Neill, who already have been signed by Detroit for next season.

Shorts and Shells.

Allegheny College at Meadville, Pa., has ruled that sports are a science, listing physical education courses in the same group with chemistry, biology, etc. . . . In one evening at Saratoga raceway recently, 65-year-old George Thompson, his son, Glenn, 42, and his grandson, John, 18, all drove harness racers. . . . Height of Something: Duke's football brochure describes tailback George Clark as "the reincarnation of Duke's immortal Ace Parker."

To Elva Tyme it is a sin to speak of mathematics. It makes her take an aspirin or reach for aromatics. She hates to have herself submit to calculating rigors. Not only that. She has a fit when I'm admiring figures.

A certain amount of adding must be done by every bridge player. If unable to do it in his head, he can use his fingers and thumbs and ears. These usually count up to 12; enough for his general purpose.

Ability to count comes in very handy when you try to decide how many tricks your hand expects to take. This information is needed to tell your partner, too. So, you must know a trick count.

In a pack of cards are four aces, four kings, four queens. These represent the 12 biggest cards in each deal. They are the cards most likely to take tricks at no-trump (when no suit is trump.)

Unless you have a closed mind, this should open a thought lane. If aces and kings and queens are the best no-trump cards, why not use them for counting no-trump tricks? Go ahead. Say something. Why Not?

See what I mean? Count one trick for each ace you have; one for each king you have; one for each queen you have. The total will tell you the total number of tricks you are most likely to take at no-trump.

You heard me. Count up your aces and kings and queens at one apiece. They will tell you the number of no-trump tricks your hand expects to take. Count nothing else. Just aces, kings, queens.

Take a hand like this:

♠ A 9 7 3
♥ K J 6
♦ A Q 8
♣ K Q 10

You have two aces, two kings, two queens; total of six no-trump tricks. Startling, isn't it? Why? Only because it looks to easy.

Funny thing about simplicity in bridge. It makes you worry as to its efficiency. I dare you to show me it is not sound. I dare you to show me a more accurate count.

Shows you how cumbersome methods have players buffaloed.

Hollywood Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Sept. 24 (CP) — There are two Hollywood empliyees insisting on a closed shop, and producers will probably accede to their demands. The workers: The team of Ballard and Ballard.

This is not a vaudeville act, but Merle Oberon and her photographer husband, Lucien Ballard. They have issued the ultimatum: She will be photographed only by him, and he will film only pictures starring her.

The reason for their professional inseparability is simple. "We want to work together," Merle said, "so we'll have our time off together." Also, she added slyly, "he's the best cameraman in the business."

So far the Ballards have made "The Lodger," "This Love of Ours" and "Temptation" together. She made "Night in Paradise" without him but then, mistakes do happen, even in the best of families.

Right now, they are lined up to do a sequence in "A Miracle Can Happen," co-produced by Burgess Meredith. Paulette Goddard wanted Lucien to film her sequence, but he said nay, his heart belongs to Merle.

"Hmmph," Mrs. Meredith replied, "I suppose I'll have to make my husband produce all my pictures."

It was interesting to watch Bing Crosby cut his first transcription radio show, particularly because it differed so from a live broadcast. For instance, the thing didn't have to start on split-second time; it began when Bing got good and ready.

The show ran many minutes overtime, but modern science will allow portions of the disc to be erased. This includes a number in which Bing lost the beat, then started all over again. First guest was Bob Hope, who ad libbed all over the place. At one point he looked at Bing's balding pate and cracked: "wearing your midriff a bit high this season; aren't you?"

Novel 52-player Golf Match For Hulbert Memorial

Toronto, Sept. 24 (CP)—There's promise of plenty of golfing thrills Wednesday when 52 professionals, the majority of them from the P.G.A. zone 4 (Central Ontario), tee off in the first Hulbert Memorial Trophy match. Pitting 26 Canadian-born pros against an equal number of British-born pros, the trophy is a memorial to the late Art Hulbert, Thornhill professional.

Bill Lamb of Toronto Lambton will direct the veteran squad of old country tee artists, while Dick Borthwick of Hamilton Ancaster captains the Canadian boys. There's a little inter-sectional rivalry thrown in since the Canadian team has snaffled Jules Huot of Montreal, recent P.G.A. eastern Canada titlist and Stan Horne, 1946 Millar trophy winner, throws in his lot with the other team.

The team garnering the most points in two rounds will become the first winners of the trophy and proceeds from the day's event will go to the P.G.A. Benevolent Fund.

Among the top-notch pros competing are Bob Gray, three-time Millar winner, who is on the British team, and Gord Brydson, Elmer Blower, Jack Littler and Hugh Borthwick on the opposition.

On the British side are Willie Spittal, Cornwall; Bob Lamb, Waterloo, Galt; Lionel Ross, Cobourg; Lex Robson, Kawartha, Peterborough; Fred Hunt, Brantford; and Dick Green, Cataraqui, Kingston.

AT THE McCARTHY — Screen comedy reaches new heights in the bridal chamber sequences of Universal's "Her Adventurous Night," in which co-stars Dennis O'Keefe (L) and Helen Walker share hilarious honors with Charles Judels, starting tomorrow at the McCarthy Theatre, along with a second new hit "Inside Job," featuring Preston Foster, Alan Curtis and Ann Rutherford.

Krol Leading All Scorers In Big Four

Toronto, Sept. 24 — (CP) — Versatile Joe Krol, Toronto Argonauts halfback, built up his individual total with a placement, a convert and a single as the Dominion champions edged Ottawa Rough Riders Saturday to take over first place in the Interprovincial Rugby Football Union.

Statistics compiled yesterday by The Canadian Press showed the big fellow well out front in the Eastern Canada individual scoring race with 25 points, 10 more than young Jack Toms of Hamilton Wildcats. Toms, going at a touchdown-a-game clip, took top place in the Ontario Rugby Football Union with his three majors.

Runner-up in the O.R.F.U. was Johnny Lake, big Toronto Balmy Beach halfback, whose 14 points was good enough to give him 3rd position in the over-all standing. One point behind came burly Ches McCance of Montreal Alouettes, who booted two placements and as many converts in their Saturday route of Hamilton Tigers.

Best individual scoring effort in weekend games was turned in by Gus Scheiers, Sarnia Imperials' quarterback, whose pair of touchdowns helped overpower Ottawa Trojans. The 10 points, his first scoring efforts of the season put six players in a tie for sixth place, one point behind Ken Charlton of Ottawa Rough Riders.

LIVE FOX CONFUSES HUNT

Toronto, Sept. 24 — (CP)—The Toronto North York Hunt staged its first post-war foxhunt Saturday at nearby King — and it was the unexpected arrival of a live fox which provided the excitement — and confusion.

Plans were for a "drag" hunt, with a creosote trail laid to give the hundreds of spectators the best possible view of the hunt. But the hounds were sidetracked by a live scent and it took about two hours before the field reached the onlookers.

TRENTON GOLF WINS ESQUIRE CHALLENGE CUP

Although tied on the day's play by the RCAF players, the Trenton Golf Club by virtue of their series total won the Esquire Challenge Golf Trophy on the Belleville Golf Club links on Sunday. The four competing teams, Belleville Golf, Trenton RCAF and the Bay of Quinte fielded their strongest representations for the event.

Trenton's total carried into the final round showed 61 points as against RCAF in the second slot with 59 1-2. Interest and excitement was held until the final foursome turned in their scores as the issue was in doubt until the end. The day's play found Trenton scoring 18 1-2 points, RCAF 18 1-2 points, Quinte 18 points and Belleville Golf trailing with 17 points. The scores turned in were by far the best of the year. The Belleville Golf Club was in excellent shape after Saturday's rain....all in all conditions were ideal. The final showed that the Trenton Golf Club, captained by Vic Auger finished on top with a total of 79 1-2 points, 1 1-2 more than the RCAF team. Quinte club finished with 65 1-2 and Belleville Golf trailed the field with 65. And so congratulations to the winning Trenton Golf Club team, who led from the start in this year's play. As the trophy now stands, since its inception four years ago it has made the rounds of the various golf clubs, each team winning it once. The donors of the Esquire Challenge Trophy announced after this year's matches that the winner of the trophy next year will retain permanent possession of same.

The low gross score was won by Tommy Carruthers of the Quinte Club, who yesterday showed that he is the most outstanding golfer in the Quinte District. Tommy added a sub-par round of 35 to his first round of 39, to post a 74 for 18 holes. Second low gross was won by Clair Niddery of the Trenton Club with a 79. Tommy Carruthers, by the way, won the low gross score during every round played of the recent Esquire Trophy matches.

Low net was won by Mr. Middleton of the RCAF team with a low of 64. Second lowest was won by Jimmy Gray of the RCAF team with a 66 net. After the matches yesterday all the participating players were entertained for dinner at the Old Tavern Bar B. Q., followed by formal presentation of the trophy and prizes.

INFLATION HITS SOCCER-PLAYER MART IN BRITAIN

Albert Stubbins Cost Liverpool $52,000 Besides Club Having to Find House for Player

By JACK SULLIVAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 24 (CP)—Inflation has hit Britain's professional soccer-player market.

If the auction battle for "name" players continues—and sports writers say it will—prices paid for stars in this "poor man's sport" are likely to relegate those eyebrow-raising national league deals to the chicken-feed class.

The latest prize knocked down was Albert Stubbins, 25-year-old red-headed centre-forward, transferred from Newcastle United to Liverpool for £13,000 ($52,000). It had a "rags-to-riches angle because Stubbins, who joined Newcastle as an amateur in 1937, didn't cost the club a cent.

At least eight clubs sought the services of Stubbins, whose educated toe has scored 201 goals in 164 games in the last six years. Contenders dropped out as the bids soared, leaving only Everton and Liverpool in the hunt. Stubbins, who had the final say, chose Liverpool.

The transfer fee is only part of the deal. Liverpool went on a house-hunting expedition for their new star, a stipulation players make in the post-war housing shortage. In addition, sports writers are quick to point out that players now make demands on the clubs to supplement their legal wage of their share-limited to £750—of the transfer fee.

Researches came up with the information the Liverpool "shell-out" was only £1,000 short of the all-time record price of £14,000 paid in 1938 by Arsenal for crisp-haired Bryn Jones. But the "extras"—a home and a good position—certainly eclipsed that mark.

The "inflated fee" era had one ironic twist. It happened at a time when the Players Union and football league management committees wrangled over wage rates. If anything, it was a tremendous boost for demands of the men who afford Saturday afternoon entertainment for an estimated 1,000,000 persons who pay one shilling three pence (25 cents).

Goodmans-Lizzies Game Postponed

The second game between the Toronto Lizzies, Queen City junior softball champions and the Belleville Goodmans, Eastern Ontario champs, originally scheduled for the Alemite Field tomorrow afternoon, has been laid over for one week. Goodmans officials were advised today. The Toronto team due to the fact that the original date is a Jewish holiday, informed local officials that it was impossible for them to play here tomorrow.

By that time it is expected the Fair Grounds diamond will be available, and the game will likely be played there.

CHAPTER 11

Peggy's house was Spanish in type, an enormous sprawling place of two low stories, with balconies, patios, cloisters, terraces irregularly jumbled about in farmhouse style. The low roofs ran into each other, little grilled windows were squeezed into angles of the red tiling, and framed in great sprays of wisaria, and bougainvillaea. The lights from the beautiful low-ceiled dining room shone out on the fountains, and on the arches and tiles and the great overhanging branches of the oaks. In tonight's streaming white moonlight, Isabel thought, the place was a scene of enchantment.

The floor of the dining room was of shiny dark red flags, partly covered with the rich overlapping oblongs of the rugs. The stout, low-backed chairs had been made in Spain of Black wood upholstered in brocade dimly patterned in crowns and crucifixes. The old carved candlesticks that stood on the floor were from Spain, and the braziers, and the ironwork at the doors and fireplace. A great fire roared tonight in the black throat of the chimney, but the grilled glass doors were open to the mild garden airs. The rain was over, but the air was still heavy and warm.

Peggy had everything she wanted. She was handsome, fifty, smart, much loved; she had two sons in the service and was proud of them; she was proud of her house, her flowers and silver, her guests and her gown. Her dinners were always perfection. She really loved her husband, too; they were often seen together at concerts or the theatre, or dining on top of the "Mark." Except for a secret wish that she were thirty again, Peggy had everything she wanted.

Tonight Isabel sat between Brigadier General Fargotson and mild little fifty-year-old weak-eyed Sather Cornwall. The general's conversation, punctuated by good hearty eating and some careful wiping of his walrus mustache, was bluff and military in type; Sather talked wearily of books and music and paintings; exotic music, unknown and unpleasant books, paintings by artists of whom no one ever had heard. His position was always one of pained surprise that his associates were so ignorant of the highest artistic achievements; there was no culture in America, he told Isabel. Schools were a farce, and colleges taught men nothing.

Knowing him to be American by birth, and that his great fortune was founded upon nothing more cultural than the tinning of Alaskan crab meat, Isabel found it a little difficult to listen to him sympathetically. Both her dinner partners bored her; she was glad when they were occupied elsewhere and she could look about her and wonder why women gave these elaborate dull dinners, and other women, like herself, came to them.

She was in white satin; with the emeralds that had belonged to Avery's grandmother at her throat; the matching emerald, that he had given her for an engagement ring, sparkled on her hand. She was as well aware as he was, in his pride in her, that there was no woman in the room whose beauty was even comparable. Merle Ingersoll was always cool-looking, classic, her taffy-colored hair in marble loops, her long earrings dangling to her shoulders. Caroline Napthaly, also a bride, was pretty in a saucy, top-nosed little way. Neither one was beautiful.

But beauty wasn't important, after all. Men liked to talk to anyone whose looks were pleasant to their eyes; homely women really had a better chance with women, and an almost equal break with men. The women who were laughing and chattering most easily at this table were by no means the best looking; they would presently dance with vigor, or play gin rummy or poker with passionate attention; they were well groomed, nice to look at; they were cultured.

So what did looks matter, after all? Charm, and being natural, and having brains—some brains, anyway—those were the things that counted. For after all men might admire a rare and unquestionable beauty—the firm smooth brown skin, the very blue eyes, the dark gold hair and clean-cut chin, the young straight body that dipped so far in at the waist and swelled so softly full at the bosom, the thin vital blue-veined hands and the slim ankles—only one man could have the woman. General admiration never warmed any woman's heart. It must be specific. It must be personal. To each one of all the others she must be second to his own woman or entirely unattainable; a woman could love and marry a Dennis, and afterward see some other man who offered her everything she desired in the world and change mates—but there she had to stop, homely or beautiful. Women who married three times, four times, were admittedly and obviously the most wretched creatures alive.

A vague discontent suffused her.

"Yes, I'm glad he's in," Isabel said cordially. "I confess I'm a little dazed," she went on, repeating what she had already said many times that night. "Avery told me only this afternoon. He's been down at Catalina, where he ran into Colonel Chapelle, and it was all fixed up very suddenly."

"Women are playing a very important part," the old man said sententiously. This didn't seem to apply especially, but Isabel answered respectfully.

"Indeed they are. They're actually in the services, of course. You man the WAVES and the WACS—"

"Yes, yes, yes!" But his tone dismissed their efforts as worthless. "But I meant the ladies at home, too—you ladies at home—ha? That's a very important part of it—ha? Not the easiest thing in the world, for these young wives to be faithful, eh?"

"No, I suppose not," Isabel agreed slowly.

"Now take my granddaughter there, Betsy Lou," said the general, wiping his mustache scrupulously. "She's been married to that lad there for two months. Now he's got his orders to go overseas. What does she know about marriage, eh? Nothing. She'll cry and write letters—maybe for years. Well, she says she'll wait, she'll be loyal. But how many of them are?"

"She seems to be so young," Isabel said vaguely, with a suddenly dry throat.

"Now it's a little different with older wives," the old man rumbled on. "Question then of character—courage. There may be children—every reason then to keep the home fires burning, eh? A woman is proud of her man, facing what those fellers are facing, out in that hell. She plans for his home-coming, ha? She knows that the world is all wrong—that we've got to work—all of us, eh?—to get it right."

The waitress intervened with a second offering of the mousse aux fraises, and the general helped himself generously.

"Yes, yes, we've all got to be loyal now," he said.

"You don't know anything about me, I'll bet you're not faithful to that Roman-nosed old battle ax, your wife, down there at the end of the table in that birthmark-color dress," Isabel thought, under her pleasant smile "I hope I never see you again!"

Avery's sudden burst of patriotism and sacrifice seemed unreal; everyone's admiring assumption of her own loyalty seemed unreal; everything about this dinner was supremely unreal. When Pidgy, Countess della Farese, came up to her after dinner, that was the most ridiculous thing of all.

The women had sauntered across a moonlight patio to Peggy's bedroom then. The bathroom was to the last degree modern, but the bedroom looked like the corner of a Spanish museum. The low beds, with dark red silk showing behind carved spindle heads, were canopied in fringed brocade; the chairs wore tassels and fringe. There were praying benches, tapestries, Madonnas, Pietas, church candlesticks, and spread vestments. If the sleeping apartment of a Spanish lady, two hundred years earlier, had had anything of medieval clumsiness or discomfort about it, Peggy didn't know it. Everything in her room was a museum piece, and the more likely it was to fall apart with age and decay, the better Peggy liked it.

The women drifted in and out of the bathroom, powdering noses and fluffing curls; they sat gossiping on the monastery benches and the hard-buttoned blackwood chairs.

"Isabel—"

Isabell smile, paused expectant.

"Mind my calling you Isabel?"

"Why, no."

"I'm just back," said Pidgy.

"Weren't you at dinner?"

"I started dinner. I had to go home. I'm right next door, you know."

"You felt ill?"

"I'd just heard," Pidgy said simply.

"Heard?"

"About Avery."

"Oh." There seemed to be nothing to add.

"You'll think I'm a fool," said Pidgy.

"I know," Isabel began lamely, "that you were great friends."

"Oh, great friends!" Pidgy dismissed this dry summary of their affair with a suffocating breath. "You don't know, what I went through in that last year with Arturo," she said. "Italians are beasts. Arturo was, anyway. And to have him there!"

"Avery?" Isabel said dispassionately.

"Avery—yes. Like a brother —like an arm about me. A voice saying, 'Don't be afraid, little sister. I'm here.'"

"It must have been a great comfort." Isabel's tone was lifeless, but she was inwardly raging. "What does she expect me to say?" she thought. "Should I say 'Were you lovers? I'm so glad if you were'? What a fool she must be."

"I knew Avery never would want to marry me," Pidgy pursued the enthralling subject gently. "But I had that little time. We left Rome together, went to Paris. He told you that—I'm not telling you anything, am I?"

"Oh, no. Avery's quite frank about those things." As a matter of fact he'd never been frank about it. With his gift for forgetting anything he didn't want to remember, he'd forgotten this—and why not?

"I know he is. I had my hour, dear—I had my scraps from the full table of life. And now you have everything, and he adores you, and that's as it should be. And you're happy? Oh, be happy, Isabel—I couldn't bear it if you weren't!"

"He's a happy person," Isabel said. She must keep a casual, half-serious, half amused exterior before this fool of a woman.

"He's a divine child," the countess expressed it. "Well, I'm not a very proud woman, am I? To come to you white as a sheet — I did rub some rouge on, I probably look like a clown — and tell you I'm in love with your husband. But it's not that now—truly it isn't—"

"Isabel!" said the hostess, from the room. "We're going over, now."

"Coming," said Isabel.

The beautifully dressed women were moving their richly rustling gowns, their shining curled heads, their bare flawless shoulders toward the door. In the setting of heavy brocades and dark carved wood, dimly burning candles and the moonlight beyond the grilled door they made a picture worthy of Velasquez.

"Isn't that a lovely thing to see?" Isabel asked. Pidgy clutched her for a last word.

"I want something terribly from you—a favor," she stammered. She was a slight, small woman, overdressed, with plump little exquisite hands loaded with rings.

"I'd be glad—" Isabel answered, uncomfortably.

"I want Avery — just to myself—for dinner—one dinner," Pidgy said in a rush. "He's going now—I know what that means to you, and I know what it means to me. God! What it means to us both. I want him to take me to dinner—just once—I want to talk to him—just once. Will you, Isabel?"

"Why, Avery would have to decide that," Isabel said, in strong distaste.

"No, but I asked him—I asked him before dinner! And he said, 'I'm a married man now, dear.'"

"If he wants to, I've no objection," Isabel said, in the tone she might have used while arranging a servant's day off. She saw the homely, animated little face flush. Pidgy was not pretty, but she had all the mannerisms of a beauty and they had carried her a long way.

"Isabel!" Peggy was out in the patio now; she felt responsible for this guest who was still something of a newcomer. Also perhaps she felt responsible for anyone left long alone with Pidgy, Countess della Farese. Isabel went with her quick young graceful step to join the others.

Pidgy had provided only one more uncomfortable moment in an evening that was somehow a failure. Nothing was going just right. What did she care what these people thought of her ivory satin and the winking emeralds? She didn't really know anyone here.

"Where will letters catch Avery?" asked old Mrs. Pomeroy, who loved to write crossed and crisscrossed letters.

"Why, we don't know." Isabel widened her sapphire eyes ruefully. "He'll be everywhere — and nowhere."

"And her first husband went off to war, too," said a voice from behind palms. Isabel started, feeling a bullet in her heart, but the speaker was not alluding to her. "Anne behaved magnificently through the whole thing, I must say."

CARELESS DRIVING LAID

Toronto, Sept. 24 —(CP)— A charge of careless driving was laid today against William James Osborne-Dempster, central figure in the "Gestapo" charges in the 1945 Ontario general election, as a result of a traffic accident yesterday in which Mark Mundir, 43, was killed. Osborne-Dempster's car was involved in a collision with another in which Mundir was a passenger.

Osborne-Dempster was dismissed from the Ontario Provincial Police following royal commission investigation of charges by C.C.F. leader E. B. Jolliffe that the Ontario Government maintained a secret political police and that Osborne-Dempster was involved. The commission's report exonerated the government.

Reception Held For War Veterans And Their Brides

Ivanhoe (Special)—The citizens of Huntingdon township, under the auspices of the Patriotic Association, sponsored a reception in the Ivanhoe town hall on Friday evening for two more of its returning veterans in the persons of Arthur Beaulieu and John Howard each of whom brought with him a charming young bride from the war theatres of Holland. They were also given a hearty welcome from the many people present and especially from those of the different communities where they are to live. Mr. and Mrs. Howard will reside on a farm in the sixth concession of Huntingdon and Mr. and Mrs. Beaulieu are opening up a service station and grocery near White Lake.

The welcoming committee consisted of Mr. Arthur Jones and Mr. Elmer Wood, members of the township council; Mr. Arthur Hagerman and Mr. Wm. French veterans of World War No. 1, Mr. T. E. Fleming, ex-Warden of Huntingdon who represented the township Patriotic Association, and Mrs. William French, president of the Ivanhoe's Women's Institute representing White Lake community. Each veteran was presented with the township's customary fifteen dollar cheque by Mr. Reginald Haggerty. Each member of the committee gave a short speech of welcome expressing appreciation for services rendered by the veterans to the community and the nation, and assuring them of continued interest and sympathy as they endeavor to adap themselves to the quiet routine of normal civilian life. Other numbers on the evening's program were: Music by Young's orchestra, song by the Ivanhoe girls, a reading by Mrs. Amy Geraldi, piano solo by Miss Gordan and a duet by Mrs. Clarence Reid and Shirley.

The highlight number of the evening was an address by Mr. Roscoe Robson, M.P.P., for South Hastings who brought a message of inspiration and encouragement to all, and especially to those who had served in World Wars One and Two.

Mr. Robson a life long resident of Thurlow township was a member of the public school staff of that township before enlisting in World War One. He is a valued member of Bethel United Church on the Plainfield Pastoral charge. The speaker was ably introduced by Mr. T. E. Fleming.

At the close of the above program the residents of White Lake community presented Mr. and Mrs. Beaulieu with a floor lamp, end table, toaster and clothes hamper. An address was read by Miss Vivian Wood and the presentations made by Messrs. Raymond Downey and Kenneth Holland.

During the evening Mr. Clifford Mitz gave a financial report of the Huntingdon township Patriotic Association.

IVANHOE

Falling Brick Causes Injury

Ivanhoe — (Special) — Mrs. Ward Holland of White Lake narrowly escaped serious injury a few days ago when a brick slid from the roof of the family dwelling, where her son Kenneth was repairing a chimney, hitting her a glancing blow on the back of the head and making a bad gash in her left arm just above the wrist. Mrs. Holland was assisting in raising a small pail of water to the roof when the loose end of a rope became entangled and caught the brick causing it to slide from the roof.

Mrs. Blakely, a native of Cooper and for several years a resident of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, and her daughter, Mrs. Speers, of Ottawa, are the guests of Mrs. Samuel Kilpatrick.

Among those persons from Ivanhoe who attended the anniversary services at West Huntingdon on Sunday evening were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Goldie McInroy and Rev. J. F. and Mrs. Everson.

Rally Day services were held in the United Church on Sunday morning with a good attendance. The regulation program prepared by the Ontario Religious Educational Council was followed and was directed by the Sunday School superintendent Mr. Stanley Prest. The offering was received by Clare Hagerman and Larry Mitz. Miss Jean Reid contributed a story, "Truly Brothers." Joyce Read a solo and the intermediate girls a hymn. The Scripture lessons were read by Ross Twiddy, Wanda Reid and Clifford Mitz. The following boys were given promotions, Gerald Reid, Glenn Reid, Ross Twiddy and Clare Hagerman. The address "Crusaders All" was given by the minister, the Rev. J. F. Everson.

Dr. S. Eggleton of Madoc paid a visit to the public school on Monday and vaccinated a number of the children.

roads. Either our price stabilization policy will fail and the boom and bust periods that we had planned to avoid will take place, or stability will win out and enable the ship of state to ride thru on an even keel until demand and supply can be brought into balance."

Both ministers congratulated the T. L. C. on the manner in which it had avoided strikes and had used government machinery for settlement of disputes.

Mr. Mitchell said the time was rapidly approaching when wage controls could be eliminated and normal collective bargaining resumed. He hoped that the Dominion-Provincial labor conference opening Oct. 7 would provide a basis for peace-time legislation recognizing the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively.

Receiving the report of secretary-treasurer J. A. (Pat) Sullivan, the convention learned that paid-up membership had reached a new record of 330,000.

The convention protested conviction of Conrad Sauris, Montreal business agent of the Canadian Seamen's Union who was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for violation of the Canada Shipping Act.

Resolutions were adopted asking for the certification of seamen, expansion of the Canadian Merchant Marine and routing of trade through Canadian ports.

Fifi, Famous Clown, Had to Overcome Physical Handicap in Early Youth

Behind the grotesquely painted face of Fifi, famous clown of the Billy Garden Shows, who has played here on several occasions and is a prime favorite with young and old alike, is a story of near heart-break and a grim determination to conquer a physical handicap.

Those who have seen the quaint mannerisms of this professional funny man; who have laughed until they cried at his antics, at his originality and his clever mimicry, have no idea of what this determined young Englishman experienced in one of the bitterest battles of Life, a fight to overcome a barrier Mother Nature endowed him with when but a child.

For Fifi when but a toddling kid in the small English village that gave him birth, made up his mind to become a clown. This decision became as firmly implanted in his mind, as did a later one.

Handicapped by Stuttering

Fifi was born, a "stutterer". He grimaced when he attempted to talk. He could not articulate properly. He was the butt of the village kids' jokes.

He grew up in an atmosphere of handicap. He developed a trait of shyness when among strangers. At times he was afraid to try to speak.

Time went on. The determination to become one of the world's funny men was strong in his heart. But he realized that such a goal was impossible to attain until he was rid of his impediment.

He sought professional advice. He took treatment. But there was no improvement after years of this.

Then came the realization that the only way to effect a curt was to do it himself. And he faced the toughest problem that any boy has ever been called upon to confront.

Overcome Defect

But he met it with a determination to conquer, that ultimately resulted in victory and success.

For years he studied voice culture. He watched people talk. He noted how they sounded their words. And he worked out and practised his own lessons, a grim hard trying experience that took hours, days, weeks and months and years of relentless effort before final success was achieved.

He stood in front of the mirror in his bedroom night after night, day after day. He practised until he cried with fatigue. He learned to pronounce his words and say them slowly, gradually quickening the tempo until improvement was noted.

Success was slow in coming. Painstakingly he followed his course and finally came the day when Fifi could stand in front of his mirror, or his friends and converse in a normal manner.

Today his admirers, and they are legion, thrill to Fifi's comic efforts. The children shout with joy as he goes through his clownish pranks.

But in his every day performance, known to but a few, Fifi is reaping the harvest of the seeds of a determination and will to win in a fight against the grimmest adversary of all, Nature herself.

Evening Classes at B.C.I. Will Commence October 1, N. Smith, Shop Director

Registration Fee Set at $3 With Refund if 80 P.C. of Classes Attended

Authorization for the organization of evening classes at the Belleville Collegiate was given at the last meeting of the Board of Education, classes to commence on October 1st and to continue on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and if necessary, Monday and Wednesday evenings.

Registrations for the evening classes will take place at the Collegiate on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of the week with a nominal registration fee of $3 to be collected from each pupil. This registration fee will be refunded if 80 per cent of the classes are attended.

Permission was granted for the organization of classes in machine shop, welding, motor mechanics, drafting, technical mathematics, woodworking, sewing, cooking, shorthand, typing, bookkeeping and art, according to the demand. Mr. Norman Smith will be shop director for the evening classes and will be paid a salary of $200 for the season. A secretary for the night school will also be hired at a salary of $2 per evening.

Recommended by Principal.

Authorization for the above was given by board members following recommendation from Principal George E. Currie in his report to the advisory-vocational committee.

In his report Mr. Currie also stated that the collegiate curriculum has been brought in line with the Department of Education regulations in respect to the Grade XI technical mathematics option. This option was prolonged in this school for several years after the Department of Education had discarded it with the result that it was with considerable difficulty that certificates have been obtained for students who took the option. The above option has now been replaced by the proper shop option which should have been started several years ago.

880 Students Enrolled

In his report to the Collegiate management committee, Principal Currie stated that a total of 817 students had registered for the Fall term with all 36 staff members on duty. The student registration had since increased and is now approximately 880. Approximately 60 per cent of the school students are attending collegiate while about 40 per cent are attending vocational classes.

Permission was granted by the Board for evening classes in Junior and Senior matriculation courses.

The timetable at the collegiate has made provision for the courses needed by all students and particular attention has been given to providing an open road through for those students who were required to repeat certain subjects. The time table was constructed in the light of a pre-registration conducted throughout the school early last June.

The principal reported that increased use by students of the collegiate cafeteria has made it necessary that other rooms be opened up for this purpose. If enrolment maintained its present increase it might be necessary within the next two years to provide other quarters for the cafeteria.

Drill Brought Into Line

The fire drill system in the collegiate has been brought into line with and approved by the local fire department, it was stated. The principal recommended that the Board consider having large "fire exit" signs painted in red on the walls above the fire bells in full view down the corridors on all three floors. In case of fire or panic it was thought this would prove effective in directing traffic that might be unfamiliar with the lay-out of the building. A committee of R. McCulloch, H. C. Seldon and G. E. Currie was appointed to look into the matter.

J. E. Atkinson, director of the Canadian Bureau for the advancement of music, requested permission to conduct piano class in the school buildings following the school hours. The request was refused by the board, members expressing the opinion that it was not within their jurisdiction to permit private enterprise to conduct classes in the building.

A similar request from Mrs. John Deacon regarding Allan Cameron carrying on art classes in Queen Alexandra school was refused on the same basis. However, Dr. Macdonell, former national president of the University Women's Club was granted permission to conduct a class of current events once per month in the collegiate.

One new teacher had been added to the collegiate teaching staff, it was reported. The new teacher, Miss Eleanor Plumstead of Clinton, will teach English, Economics and Art.

Students Asked To Complete Full School Terms

With the war over and the necessity past for school students to leave classes to accept emergency employment in war factories, members of the Belleville Board of Education are strongly urging the return to classrooms of those students who, because of war exigencies failed to complete their school terms.

During the war years the Belleville Collegiate in keeping with other such schools across the province, adjusted its curriculum so that pupils might take temporary positions. Many of these jobs kept students away from school both before and after the summer holiday and, before the Christmas holiday.

School authorities were fully aware that the academic future of the pupil was being impaired to a considerable extent by this condition but it was agreed that the war must be won and the schools must render all assistance possible.

However, board members point out the truth of the ancient saying "there is no royal road to education" and state that the full time and effort of the pupil is required to absorb the higher collegiate courses. Acceptance of a student at college or university is determined by the scholastic standing in collegiate and a mere pass is not sufficient. Therefore a curtailed or shortened school term is a distinct handicap to collegiate students.

From a further standpoint board members point out that a large modern school such as the Belleville Collegiate is an exceedingly costly institution to maintain and they feel it is their duty to the taxpayer to endeavor to have the school conducted at its maximum efficiency for the complete term. Also it must be noted that government grants to schools are based on attendance, punctuality and regular attendance.

Principal Currie on different occasions has pointed out that the chief job of the school boy or girl is to attend school. While it may be a laudable motive for the pupil to accept a pre-Christmas position to earn pocket money for gifts, the present that will be most appreciated by the parents will be a high standing in the year's work at school.

The co-operation of parents and all others concerned is requested by the Board of Education and Principal Currie in making it possible for all pupils to attend a full school term.

Christian Influence Could Be Factor In Overcoming World Differences

Possibly a simple yet influential factor in overcoming world differences may be the Christian faith. The world still has a problem of living in a decent way together but getting down to rock bottom its peoples are all one. J. Hartley Fowler, World Service Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. told the Rotary at its Monday luncheon.

Christian ties hetd despite the fact the world was at war, he said. "What the world needs is loyalties stronger than national sentiment. If we get this there will be no need of atomic bombs."

The world is still in dark days, he said. There is unrest everywhere and the situation abroad is terrible. There is civil war in China; India trying to gain her independence; trouble in the Holy Land and what the end will be nobody knows: There is unrest in Russia and talk of a third world war. "We have won a great military victory but we have not yet tasted the fruits of peace."

Much Property Destroyed

The war hit the YMCA hard, Mr. Fowler said. Eighty-three buildings were destroyed or damaged and 606 homes of secretaries destroyed. Many of its men were sent to prison camps or driven from place to place with the health undermined.

Ten buildings were lost in China but over there the Y is not lying down waiting for help. It is staggering but still on its feet. They have plans and the United States Army is helping by turning over buildings to them.

The Y is not allowed in Russia but the amazing thing is that it is permitted in Poland with the full authority of the Polish government and the blessing of the Roman Catholic Church.

Active in Poland

Buildings have been opened in Warsaw, Krakow and Lodz and other cities of the country are clamoring for them.

There are 450,000 orphans in Poland and the Y has started 15 boys' camps. It will take care of some 15,000 boys this year. One orphan who had spent six years of war in Warsaw, remarked after his period at camp had concluded, "It was a holiday from hell."

Russel Durgan who spent 25 years in Japan and was recalled home before the war and who went back as an adviser to General MacArthur tells an amazing story, Mr. Fowler said. Eight Y buildings had been destroyed in Tokyo alone and his reception was startling. The people of Tokyo ar disillusioned and disagreeing with their leaders. Their attitude towards the Y now is one of appreciation and not hostility.

Only one Y member survived the atomic holocaust at Hiroshima, he went on, but re-organization has now started and there is a membership of 400 with a site in the centre of the city.

Support Urged

Referring to the forthcoming Community Campaign for the Y.M.C.A., the Children's Aid Society and the Victorian Order of Nurses, Mr. Fowler stated that the test of any community is in its interest in its social institutions. If this lapses then the civic structure must collapse.

People today, he went on, are living better than before. For every dollar spent on churches, $25 is spent in luxuries. Communities and nations along with political and economical problems must take care of their social obligations.

He quoted five basic requirements for a successful campaign. These are: a strong case; t leadership; informed enthusiast workers; sufficient number prospects and campaign dynamic

The speaker was introduced b Rotarian Newt. Thompson an club appreciation expressed b Rotarian Mac. Macklem.

'SMALL SCALE CIVIL WAR' WAGED IN GREECE

Authorities Ponder Next Move as Vets Seize 2 Buildings

20 Families Take Over Naval, CWAC Barracks at Ottawa

By DENT HODGSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Sept. 25—(CP)—While worried authorities pondered how to get them out, 20 families of the Militant Veterans' Housing League settled today into a housekeeping routine following the strategic seizure here last night of a naval building at H.M.C.S. Carleton and a former C.W.A.C. barracks at Lansdowne Park.

Twice during the hectic, two-hour operation, police apparently intended to arrest the league's diminutive leader, F. E. Hanratty, former R.C.A.F. flying officer, but each time the veterans and a crowd of sympathizers set up such a howl of protest that he was permitted to proceed with the occupation.

The league, which in the last three weeks has seized empty barracks for 28 other families and now has installed more than 200 persons in new quarters, planned the night's operations well.

Move Out of "Hovels"

Moving out of what they termed "hovels" the squatters used force where necessary, once to smash down the entrance gate at H.M.C.S. Carleton and later to gain entry into the building. Hopelessly outnumbered, police offered only what amounted to a token resistance.

The operation began by a ruse action apparently aimed at the Princess Alice barracks, an R.C.A.F. building on Argyle Street. Then, led by Hanratty, who stood on the running board of the leading automobile, a heavily-laden truck convoy moved through downtown Ottawa at the height of late-day traffic.

They doubled back past the Princess Alice barracks, then speeded up and headed for the southwest section of the city where the naval reserve station is located on the shore of Dow's Lake.

Before R.C.M.P. could intervene, they were at the gates. A brief but dramatic scuffle ensued as the duty officer, Lieut. P. G. Chance, refused them entrance at the outer barrier.

"You can run over me if you want to, but you can't come in here," he shouted.

However, the officer, a small complement of ratings, and two automobiles were brushed aside in the brief fracas, and the convoy of trucks rolled in. The squatters ranged from tots to grey-haired women, but mainly were veterans with set faces.

The trucks and squatters poured in and quickly moved their furniture into a two-storey naval building housing $500,000 worth of naval radar and asdic equipment on half of the upper floor. The lower floor, formerly W.R.E.N.E. quarters was vacant.

The occupation complete with the installation of 11 families, the veterans made their second sally—to Lansdowne Park — with the target a one-storey former C.W.A.C. barracks hut. The hut, part of the wartime army establishment at the park, now is under city control.

Pried Doors Open

Although four squad cars filled with city police attempted to stop them, the veterans pried open doors and windows and clambered in. In short order, nine families were housed in the cubicled interior.

While Hanratty argued with police at the front of the building — an army "H"-type hut — league members executed a flanking attack and began to move in furniture through the rear entrances and windows.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, September 25 (CP)—Synopsis: The weather is generally clear throughout Southern Quebec, Southern Ontario and Central United States. In Northern Ontario it is generally overcast with a few showers reported in the James Bay region. Cool air continues to move from polar regions south across the Prairie Provinces and the relief which they had yesterday from the below normal temperatures of the previous two days will be short lived. Minimum temperatures in Southern Ontario are expected to be about forty degrees tonight, but there is a risk of some frost in low lying areas.

Grand Jury Returns True Bills Against 3 Hamiltonians

Hamilton, Sept. 25 (CP)—The sensational torso-slaying of John Dick, whose mutilated body was found on the Hamilton mountainside last March, progressed another stage yesterday when the Grand Jury at the Fall Assizes returned true bills in charges of murder against three Hamilton residents. Trials are expected to open about Oct. 7 before Mr. Justice F. H. Barlow and a petit jury.

Charged with the murder of the 40-year-old street railway driver are his pretty 25-year-old widow, Mrs. Evelyn Dick; her father, 88-year-old Donald MacLean also a Hamilton street railway worker, and William Bohozuk, 26-year-old Hamilton steel worker.

Mrs. Dick and Bohozuk are also charged with murder in the death of a new-born baby, known as Peter David White MacLean, whose body was found in a cement-packed suitcase in a closet during police investigation of the Dick slaying.

True bills were returned after two days of hearings of a procession of crown witnesses. None of the defendants appeared before the grand jury yesterday although Mrs. Dick had been taken there from the Barton Street jail.

Return of the true bills set the stage for what is expected to be one of Hamilton's sensational trials. The case opened last March 16 when school children on a Saturday morning hike found the mutilated remains of John Dick on the Hamilton mountainside, the head, arms and legs missing.

At preliminary hearings last April Mrs. Donald MacLean, the victim's mother-in-law, also was charged with murder but this charge was dismissed and she was held as a material witness.

SUGAR PLACED IN TANK

14 PASSENGERS, FIVE CREWMEN, KILLED IN CRASH

R.A.F. Plane Rams Into Hillside Shortly After Taking off From Kai Tak Airport

Hong Kong, Sept. 25—(CP) — Fourteen passengers and five crewmen were killed today when a big R.A.F. plane crashed shortly after leaving the Kai Tak airport for Singapore. Most of the passengers were military personnel.

The R.A.F. said the cause of the accident was unknown. A court of inquiry was set up.

The disaster occurred shortly after the plane took off for Saigon, Indo-China. An eyewitness said the Dakota was flying over the Kowloon housetops when smoke suddenly poured from it. The aircraft rapidly lost height and crashed into the hillside, narrowly missing Chinese farmers working in the fields.

Names of the victims were withheld pending notification of next-of-kin.

Mrs. Ella Rose Acquitted On Murder Charge

Goderich, Ont., Sept. 25 (CP)—Less than 12 hours after Mrs. Ella Rose went on trial for murder of her 16-day old daughter, Sheila Lily, a Supreme Court Jury last night acquitted her of the charge after 2 1-2 hours deliberation.

The Jury returned once to report they could not agree the evidence was sufficient for a conviction and were instructed by Mr. Justice G. A. Urquhart a new trial would be necessary if they failed to reach a verdict, and if there was reasonable doubt the verdict should be "not guilty."

Mrs. Rose, 43, was found sitting on a park bench the afternoon of May 25, after Dr. John Wallace had been called to the Rose apartment by her husband and found the baby, lying on her back in the crib, dead from asphyxiation. Dr. Wallace said the woman was apparently in a dazed condition when he found her and showed no emotion.

Defence counsel called no witnesses and told the jury the only evidence linking Mrs. Rose with the death of her baby was the contention she was alone with the child when medical experts estimated death occurred. Dr. Wallace said the girl probably died three hours before he arrived at the apartment.

Dr. Wallace said bed clothes covered the baby up to her chin. There were no marks of violence and there did not appear to be any violent cause for death.

Rebellion of Powerful Tribesmen Seen As Biggest Threat to Iran's Govt.

(The background of the tribal rebellion in southern Iran is discussed in the following article by Joseph C. Goodwin, Associated Press correspondent now stationed in Jerusalem after six months of service at Tehran.

By JOSEPH C. GOODWIN

Jerusalem, Sept. 25 (AP)—The current rebellion of the powerful Qashquai tribe in southern Iran confronts the crisis-racked Qavam government with the biggest potential threat to its rule since last March, when Russian tank columns crept to within 20 miles of Tehran.

Two hundred thousand Qashqais (pronounced "Gosh Guys") and their subordinate tribes control some 80,000 square miles of southern and central Iran. Their arms and wealth make them disdainful of the Tehran government and give them a balance of power among rival internal elements.

Their present moves—cutting off Shiraz and Bushire and demanding the release of Backtyari tribal leaders recently arrested by order of propaganda director Mozaffar Firouz—indicate they are seeking a general tribal coalition against Tehran. Such a coalition experts agree, probably would result in bloody general warfare.

The Qaishqais have a standing army of at least 10,000 riflemen, superbly mounted and hardened to year-around patrolling. All their men—nearly 50,000—live a semi-nomadic existence with side arms as part of their gear. The Backtyari—Iran's second tribe in power wealth and size—is equally well-armed.

These two tribes, which cover almost all of southern and central Iran, were negotiating for an alliance even before I left the country in June.

The open rebellion of the Qaishqais now places the government troops between two unfriendly forces. The Azerbaiajanis to the north, who gained semi-autonomy during the Russian occupation, continue to play a high-handed game, collecting customs on imports from the rest of Iran, shipping all food products to Russia and denying government troops and officials entry to Tabriz. Iranian officials here and in Tehran insist the Qashqais trouble is "purely internal and local." However, Tehran government spokesmen long have charged that British sources have been arming the Backtyaris. A foreign office spokesman denied this Monday.

Moscow Radio Claims U. S. Papers Trying to Create The Impression War is Inevitable

London, Sept. 25 (CP)— The Moscow radio, commenting on Prime Minister Stalin's assertion that he could see no real danger of a new war, broadcast today a declaration that there were "few countries where so much clamor was being raised" about a new war as in the United States.

American publications are trying to create the impression that war is inevitable, that it may break out at any moment and that preparations for this war are being speeded up," the commentator Analyzer said in an English language braodcast.

Britain's press, meanwhile, front-paged world reaction to Generalissimo Stalin's statements and filled editorial columns with expressions of welcome for the Soviet Prime Minister's words.

The Times urged the Labor government to revise its foreign policy to a "middle course" between the "extreme positions" of the United States and Russia. The editorial implied strong criticism of the recent course followed by British Foreign Secretary Bevin.

"If the issue which lies behind many of the debates in Paris is the issue between Adam Smith and Karl Marx, between an American leaning towards unregulated private enterprise and a Soviet predilection for a fully regimented economy, Great Britain is committed to neither extreme," the Times said.

Robert Waithman, diplomatic correspondent of the Liberal News Chronicle, wrote that informed persons in the British capital believed the statement "could be the first indication of an important change in the direction and technique of Soviet policy." The Laborite Daily Herald's bannerline read: "Capitals Awaiting Next Stalin Move."

No Reaction

Although a Foreign Office spokesman said the Stalin statement was being studied "with interest," there was no official reaction by the government.

In Paris, one diplomat said the Stalin replies to questions by a British newspaperman supplied ammunition for "both the pessimists and the optimists."

In Moscow, the public reaction was reflected in the comment of a house-wife who said she had been alarmed by the talk of a new war, "but now I am not going to worry about a new war. Stalin had said there is no real danger."

Close readers of the English translation of the statement were mystified by Stalin's comment that certain politicians were using the spectre of war to wring concessions from "counter-agents." The Soviet Monitor in London said the word probably was not "counter-agents" at all, but a Russian word having no exact English translation and meaning, broadly, a person, or firm or country with whom one has dealings.

BROAD HOUSING PROGRAM WANTED BY LABOR BOARD

Claims Government Failing to Meet Problems of Reconstruction

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Windsor, Ont., Sept. 25 —(CP)—Delegates to the annual convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada today, seventh day of their sessions, considered a variety of resolutions.

Yesterday the convention had received and adopted a lengthy report from its reconstruction committee criticizing the Federal Government's reconstruction policies and asking adoption of a broad housing program.

The report presented by John Bruce, Toronto, committee chairman, said the government had failed to meet the problems of reconstruction with the same energy and enthusiasm that it had used in war time.

"It is regrettable to now report that in our judgment we are facing the possibility of a very chaotic and unsatisfactory situation," it said. "With the government showing a measure of indifference that is alarming, and no real construction measures are being taken to meet the future that will remove the fear of unemployment and want."

There were signs that private enterprise was unable to meet the situation and production should be stimulated, if necessary through subsidies. The committee also favored nationalization of financial institutions.

Proposes Many Changes.

Of housing particularly, the report proposed allocation of short materials to partially-completed houses, government construction of low-rental homes and a broad slum clearance plan, use of national victory housing loans to provide funds, and financing of National Housing Act loans through the Bank of Canada rather than through private institutions.

The committee asked for an immigration plan to be drafted on the basis of studies by a parliamentary committee, and opposed the selection of immigrants through the method adopted under the plan to bring polish army soldiers to Canada.

The convention also adopted a report of the committee on racial discrimination which said: "We feel that for our movement to exist we must eliminate from our ranks any traces of racial antagonism and religious intolerance. These dangerous ideas are being used by our enemies to divide labor and to distract the attention of the working people of this country from the real issues facing them."

THREE BURNED ABOARD BLAZING OIL TANKER

Planes Rush to Stricken Vessel With Medical Supplies

New York, Sept. 25 — (AP)—A third man died early today aboard the blazing tanker Bennington as coast guard amphibian planes raced to the stricken vessel with life-saving medical supplies, the United States Coast Guard reported.

The Bennington, with a fire in its forepart and two other men critically burned aboard, is proceeding toward port at Wilmington, N.C.

The planes, one of which left Charleston, S.C., and another from Cherry Point, N.C., are carrying medical supplies wrapped in rubber boats. The pilots will determine whether to parachute the supplies directly on the ship or to drop them on the water when they reach the vessel, the coast guard reported.

A message from the ship, Marine Corporation said, stated it was 10,172 gross tons, built in 1942 and owned by the Keystone Tank Ship Corporation of Philadelphia.

War Criminals To be Sentenced Next Monday

Nuernberg, Sept. 25—(AP) — An official announcement said today the judgments of the international military tribunal against 22 Nazi leaders of Germany and seven German organizations on war crimes charges would be handed down on schedule beginning next Monday at 10 a.m. (3 a.m. E.S.T.).

Tentative plans call for the four-power court to spend the first day in a review of the entire case, which took prosecutors and defence lawyers almost nine months to present. The verdicts and sentencing would follow on the second, and if necessary the third, day.

Hundreds of correspondents from all over the world have applied for places in the press box for the climax of this, the world's first international war crimes trial, and many applications have had to be rejected. Each wire service has been allowed three seats, while individual papers were limited to one seat each, except several large circulation British newspapers, which were given two.

REGISTRAR WILL TAKE NO FURTHER PART IN VOTE

Attorney-General Cuts Short W.H. Lovering's Participation in 'Back-To-Work' Stelco Vote

Toronto, Sept. 25. (CP)—W. H. Lovering of Hamilton, Wentworth County Registrar of Deeds, will take no further part in the "back-to-work" vote being taken among employees of the Steel Company of Canada, Attorney-General Blackwell announced today.

Mr. Lovering previously had agreed to count the ballots mailed to him by the steelworkers.

The Attorney-General said his department had told Mr. Lovering that it considered that he, as an official of the administration, should take no part in a labor dispute except with authority of the appropriate department.

Mr. Blackwell said his department's attention had been drawn to a Stelco advertisement which said Mr. Lovering volunteered to count the votes "as a public service".

Must Regard Considerations

"This department has to have regard for these considerations:

"First, by terms of the Dominion Order-in-Council dated July 10, the Steel Company of Canada plant is being operated by the Dominion Government through its controller and the authority of the management to conduct the affairs of the company was by the terms of the Order-in-Council suspended.

"Second, by a further Order-in-Council of the Dominion government, Statutory provisions have been made vesting authority in the Minister of Labor, (Ottawa) to conduct a vote of employees by secret ballot.

"Thirdly, the department of the Attorney-General had not been consulted by anyone as to the propriety of an official of the provincial administration undertaking the task of acting as returning officer in the proposed vote.

"Inquiry was immediately made of Mr. Lovering as to whether or not he had been asked to undertake the task by the Minister of Labor (Ottawa) or the Steel Controller, with a view to establishing whether the proposed vote might be deemed to be one taken on the authority of the Minister of Labor under Dominion Order-in-Council.

The company last week sent a letter to each employee with a ballot on which the worker could indicate if he was willing to return to work. The votes were to go to Mr. Lovering for tabulation.

The union urged its members to vote "yes" i nan attempt to destroy the usefulness of the vote in determing the general view of the workers.

Most Unique Case in Australian Jurisprudence Closes After 10 Years

By J. C. HOLDSWORTH
Canadian Press Correspondent

Sydney, Australia, Sept. 25 —(CP)—A criminal case unique in Australian legal history, involving the passage of a special act of parliament, has just come to a final close after 10 years' legal battle.

The story begins in 1935 in Sydney when a taxi driver was murdered. A student, Boyd Sinclair, 17, was arrested in 1936 and charged with the murder. Police alleged that he confessed and two doctors who examined him declared him insane.

The doctors said that he was a schizophrenic—split personality—and that, while he had periods of normality, he had longer periods in which he lived in a dream world. Sinclair was confined for life to a criminal mental asylum without appearing before a jury.

Relatives and friends of Sinclair, including prominent lawyers and members of the New South Wales parliament, campaigned in parliament and in the press to have Sinclair brought to trial, but they did not achieve success until early this year.

The New South Wales parliament passed a special act to enable a jury of laymen to decide on if Sinclair were fit to plead to the murder charge. The jury was assembled and Sinclair, together with doctors who had first certified him insane, appeared before it to give evidence. The jury decided Sinclair was sane enough to plead and stand trial.

Sinclair was tried before a criminal court jury. He contended he had not made a confession and he was not the murderer. The court decided there was ample evidence of his guilt and sentenced him to life imprisonment. The court could not impose the death penalty because Sinclair was under 18 at the time of the crime.

The trial lasted three days and aroused tremendous public interest. Newspapers devoted pages to reports of the case. Public galleries in the court were crowded every day.

Sinclair then appealed against his conviction and sentence to the state' full court of criminal appeal. The court dismissed his appeal and the New South Wales Minister for Justice ordered that two doctors examine him to determine his mental state.

The doctors recertified Sinclair insane, and he will now spend the rest of his life in a mental asylum in a Sydney prison.

Rebellious Forces Armed by Albania And Yugoslavia

Fighting May be Connected With King's Return to Greece

By ARTHUR GAVSHON

London, Sept. 25 (AP)— A Foreign Office spokesman declared today the heavy fighting in northern Greece now amounted to a "small scale civil war" and said evidence presented British representatives by the Greek government indicated the dissident forces were being armed from Yugoslavia and Albania.

British troops could be called upon to act only "in a last resort," the Foreign Office official said, and would not be used unless the Greek government specifically requested such aid.

On the eve of King George II's return to his throne, the Greek government presented evidence to the British that the forces now being opposed by Greek troops were being armed "from the outside," the spokesman said. Pressed to identify the countries involved, the official said they were "Yugoslavia and Albania," he added, however, that no units of foreign troops were involved, so far as he knew.

"We have no reason to doubt the Greek government's evidence," he said.

He said that military measures being taken by Greek government forces were not the result of consultations with the British Commander in Chief in Greece.

The Foreign Office spokesman explained that maintenance of law and order in Greece was first of all the responsibility of the Greek gendarmerie. If the gendarmerie is unable to cope with the situation, he said, the Greek army could intervene.

Still Receiving Arms

The spokesman said he "did not know" whether the present fighting in Northern Greece was in any way connected with the pending return of King George II to his throne, the Greek monarch was expected to leave London today.

Greek armed forces still are receiving arms and equipment from Britain, the spokesman said.

A Greek government spokesman in London predicted "military operations on a fairly big scale" in an attempt to suppress the revolt, which he attributed to "militant communism encouraged from the other side of the border."

"The Greek government is up against a difficult situation and all we can do is to try to re-establish order," he said. "We must expect this kind of thing for some time to come."

The Greek official said that since the E.I.A.S., the military arm of the left wing E.A.M. (National Liberation Front) coalition was broken up, some of its remnants had taken refuge in Albanian and Yugoslav territory and formed raiding bands which he said attacked gendarmerie posts. The strength of these bands, he said, is from 300 to 400 men each.

He said combined military operations to round up the raiders were under way, with the Greek 4th army corps assigned to the Salonika area and the third army corps to the Thessaly region.

A spokesman for the Leftist E.A.M. in London declined comment.

Salonika, Greece, Sept. 25 — Premier Constantin Tsaldaris declared today that the violence in northern Greece was actual war against the staff, and that the state would crush the resistance at any cost.

The Greek premier said the turmoil created by attacks of leftist bands in Thessaly and Macedonia was "not a question of order, which would have been settled long go, but a question of war."

"The state will emerge victorious by using all the means at its disposal and without any hesitancy in taking any measures," he said in a speech prepared for an outdoor audience here.

He said there was no imminent danger to Greek Masedonia, but added that the increasing activity of the leftist bands in the past few weeks had exhausted the patience of the government.

DEFER SENTENCE AFTER CONVICTION ON BANK ROBBERY

Three Found Guilty of Tecumseh Holdup in Which $14,000 Was Secured

Windsor, Ont., Sept. 25 (CP)—An assize court jury deliberted for 6 1-2 hours before returning a verdict of guilty early today in the trial of three men charged with the armed robbery of the nearby Tecumseh brance of the Provincial Bank last June 13 when more than $14,000 in cash and bonds was stolen.

Twice during its long consideration of the evidence the jury returned to the courtroom for further instructions from Mr. Justice Dalton Wells—at 7.37 p.m. E.S.T. and at 12.43 a.m.—and there were indications of a possible agreement as it sought further information on evidence about clothing worn by the accused on Peche Island where they were arrested shortly after the robbery. Shortly after the jury returned the giulty verdict.

Mr. Justice Wells deferred until completion of the assizes passing sentence on the trio—John Zero, 26, and Clifford Renaud, 24, of Windsor and Donald Lowry, 26, of Rouyn, Que.

The arrest of the men shortly after the holdup followed an intensive search in which a Flying Fortress, a Catalina flying boat and members of six Canadian and United States police forces took part. Strong to make the arrests and recover the money, concealed in a pillow case and buried under two feet of sand.

The first tim the jury returned last night it sked about evidence given by Ray Copetiuk. The second time the foreman, G. R. Gardner said: "My Lord, we seem to have one gentleman who cannot come to a decision without the clearing up of some points."

Mr. Justice Wells discussed the identification of the clothing further and then said: "Is there any point in you gentlemen going back for 20 minutes of half an hour? Then if you can't agree come back and tell us."

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME ENDS SATURDAY NIGHT

For at Saturday midnight, Daylight Saving passes into history for the time being, and time resumes normalcy once again.

So set the clocks back on Saturday night before you retire, or if you wish, you can wait until the alarm rings on Sunday morn, give it a Bronx cheer and roll over and go to sleep for another hour.

Last spring a number of people were late for church because they failed to remember to set ahead the family timepieces.

Some Hunters Obtain Fair Bags On Opening Day

Continuous reports of the guns in the early morning indicated a plenitude of the feathered game and later statements of returning hunters revealed that during the early hours the ducks were fairly numerous.

Hunters were greeted with ideal weather conditions with a fair wind blowing.

Along the marshes bordering the bay, hunters lay in "potholes" greeting flocks of ducks with continuous barrages of gunfire.

R. A. Pringle, who brought home a bag of three blacks and one teal and "knocked down" four more which he will get later, stated that the ducks were numerous along the marshes up to nine o'clock when steady firing finally drove them to the safety of the bay.

Bags were small averaging from four to eight birds, according to a survey of five hunters.

Blacks appeared to be more numerous than is usual at the opening of the season, the most prominent duck at this time of the year being the teal.

Diamond Mine In Tanganyika Enriches Canadian

Dar-Es-Salaam, Tanganyika, Sept. 25 (Reuters) — Dr. John Thorburn Williamson of Montreal and Quebec tonight was described as potentially the richest man in the world following official confirmation that a diamond mine he discovered in Tanganyika is eight times as large as a Kimberley, South Africa mine hitherto considered the world's largest.

Dr. Williamson, a quiet, studious scientists, is a graduate of McGill University, Montreal, and a former senior geologist with the Quebec Geological Survey.

(London diamond producers said today that Dr. Williamson's bonanza was "probably not epoch-making." They said there was no indication that his mine would compare in value with Kimberley or Brazilian mines.)

Dr. Williamson came to Tanganyika in 1934 and pegged claims at various points in a diamond-bearing area. He discovered a central diamond-bearing "pipe" in 1941 and produced diamonds during the war which were invaluable to the far effort. The largest stone found in his mine weighed 136 carats — 28 15/16 carats more than the famous Koh-i-nor. South Africa's largest diamond, the Cullinan, weighed 305 3/4 carats.

It is reported that machinery now on order will raise the Williamson mine's output to 2,000 tons of diamond-bearing diggings daily.

Dr. Williamson recently paid the Tanganyika Government £25,000 toward the cost of a spur rail line to his mine which is 16 miles from the Town of Shinyanga.

Mayor (Fleetfoot) Follwell Retains Title Defeating "Rocket" Rollins In Challenge Race at Belleville Fair

Mayor Frank (Fleetfoot) Follwell is still the undisputed champion 100-yard dasher of the mayors of Canada. Last night before three thousand voters in the grandstand at the Belleville Fair, the Mercury-heeled chief magistrate successfully thrust off the challenge of ex-mayor Harry (Rocket) Rollins to his title.

"Fleetfoot" beat the Rocket to the paper-pardon-wire by three puffs and two toenails to retain the Ontario Mayors Challenge Trophy and to add to his collection of racing souvenirs the "Royal Roll" of honor—or sumpin.

The affair was a sports spectacle rarely seen here. It was a cross between a foot race, a boxing match, a strip tease, a motor accident and a male beauty contest for the title of "Mr. Belleville" with only two entries.

The bunion derby entrants drove to the scene of conflict like ancient Roman Emperors arriving at the gladiatorial games. There was a fanfare of vocal trumpets and the procession heralded by the Martin Funeral Home ambulance complete with equipment including a pretty nurse, arrived at the track.

Roared to the Start

The challenger buried beneath the folds of a gaudy bathrobe and attended by his seconds, or thirds, Harry Knott and Bert Farrar roared to the weighing-in paddock in a jeep. A moment later in proper majesty and chauffeured by a uniformed policeman, the champion arrived in true mayoral dignity in a police cruiser with Man Friday Harold Armstrong in attendance and a Rooseveltian guard, Doc Jack Marshall riding the running boards in typical FBI manner, one hand in a pocket clutching his wallet.

The Unveiling

Then came the unveiling ceremonies. On the stage in full view of the crowded amphitheatre, the champ and the challenger started to strip for a medical examination

Ten minutes later "Fleetfoot" stood half buried beneath eight sweaters, a kimona and four pairs of pants and stood forth in all his glory plus a pair of blue trunks with white stripes. Nearby stood the Rocket, his knees submerged in fifteen white sweatshirts and six pairs of pants, with his nether limbs encased in knee-length blue scanties upon which were emblazoned in daring colors the letters "H.R."

Doctor "Nig" Ross after ascertaining that no outboard motors or paddles were secreted on their persons, examined their teeth and feet. He stethoscoped their tonsils, found the heart conditions good, and finally pronounced them fit, "Why, I don't know".

The 'Rocket' Faints

Then in the glare of footlights, Fleetfoot and Rocket, escorted by their handlers walked down the track to the start line. Both were given vigorous rub-downs with what looked like water and crouched low on the mark, like actual sprinters. Pistols cracked and they leaped away like frightened fawns. Came a resounding crash and the Rocket buried his nose in the earth. Fleetfoot halted and it was judged a false start. The Rocket who had fainted, came to, discovered a pretty nurse was holding his head—and promptly fainted again, with one eye open.

Eventually they got away to a flying start. They came down the track neck and neck and as they passed the fifty yard mark, the Rocket was heard to say, "Didja hear the one about the sailor..." Fleetfoot smiled and spurted to a two-inch lead. He had heard it.

Near the finish wire-pardon — paper held by ex-Major Glen Thompson and Alderman Bill Harvey, who was holding the tape-paper in a death grip, the two spurted but Fleetfoot stretched his neck and won by a scant three inches.

Given Applause.

With sweat oozing out of their ears and eyes and mud out of their toes, the contestants wended their way slowly and laboriously to the grandstand where a cheering crowd gave them a thundering ovation.

Ex-Mayor Thompson, with the coveted prize secreted beneath a blanket, motioned the pair to the stage. The Rocket leaped blithely to the platform, but Fleetfoot took his time, humming to himself, "When the Roll is Presented Up Yonder, I'll be There." He was.

Both made brief addresses to their admirers, with the Rocket promising he'd be back next year "better and bigger than ever."

The first annual challenge race for the Ontario Mayors' Trophy was history.

15,000 People Jam Grounds As Perfect Weather Greets Second Day of Exhibition

Skies Clear in Afternoon and Huge Throng Enjoys All Phases of Fair; Stage Show Provides Splendid Entertainment; Fair Closes Tonight

The Board of Directors of the Belleville Exhibition had no qualms yesterday afternoon and evening as to the popularity of the 1946 edition of their fair. Fully ten thousand people jammed the grounds last night while the afternoon attendance was 5,000 one that approached a near record despite the fact that rain fell up till twelve o'clock noon.

Stubborn rain clouds slowly dispersed shortly after one o'clock and by three the sun was shining brightly from a cloudless sky. The weather last night was perfect and a huge throng took advantage of ideal atmospheric conditions to enjoy an exhibition that easily lives up to pre-opening announcements that is the "biggest and best in years."

As on opening night, although under much more comfortable conditions the grandstand was crowded to capacity fully forty minutes before 8.30 the scheduled time for the presentation of the Billy Garden stage extravaganza.

By opening time, the crowd had spilled out onto the track. The bleachers were overflowing and special seats placed on the track proper were crammed with people. In addition a standing crowd surged across the track fully ten deep at the south side of the grandstand and the space arranged for show personnel on both sides of the stage was filled with fair patrons. The grandstand crowd equalled if not surpassed the record turnout of the night previous.

Colorful Stage Show

The Billy Garden presentation was another of those colorful variable stage shows for which the popular producer has earned an enviable reputation in entertainment circles each act.

It was high class entertainment with each act meriting top billing. It was clean, and wholesome with a variety of acts that kept the huge crowd in good humor throughout its ninety minutes of presentation.

Against a colorful, brilliantly illuminated stage setting with Ken Good's tuneful orchestra providing appropriate musical backgrounds and accompaniment, the show went forward without a hitch under the sprightly comedy patter and introductions of Al Harvey, well-known stage and radio master of ceremonies.

Harvey kept the show running at a high-speed tempo with his laugh-getting humor and contributed a vocal solo with ukelele accompaniment that made an immediate hit with the crowd. His impromptu remarks during the preliminaries of the Mayor Follwell-ex-Mayor Rollins running epic had the crowd in a continuous state of merriment.

The Royalettes, a bevy of clever attractive dancing girls opened the show with a smart tap routine. Their dancing was well on a par with the usual Garden choruses and their timing and rhythmic presentations of Scotch, gypsy and straight routines drew well-deserved applause.

Clever Musical Act

Highlighting the show from a musical point of view were Gus Mauri, accordeonist and Ruddy Spratt, banjoist. This duo of clever musicians, each an artist in his own right, presented duets and solos and showed a marked mastery of their various instruments, Mauri's handling of his instrument was a treat to hear while Spratt gave his own impressions of Eddie Peabody, one of America's outstanding masters of the banjo. Their act was cleverly done and well received.

The Wong sisters, two dainty Chinese dancers gave a finished display of acrobatics and dancing. Their symmetry and grace in the dance and in difficult acrobatics was an outstanding feature of their act.

Billy and Kay Arnott, in "Sophisticated Impressions" proved a magician act that was different. Arnott produced "Scotch" from mid air and did several tricks of magic never seen here before.

His "guillotine" act, in which he cleverly removes a small boys' head from his body and replaces it without bloodshed is his piece de resistance and was a clever example of the magician's art.

Another outstanding act was that of Hal and Rene Marquette, two young people whose manipulations of marionettes was skilfully and cleverly done. They brought out several dancing dolls among them a hula dancer. Scotch dancer, a Zulu chief and a skeleton. They make a puppet trapeze artist go through his tricks on a tiny trapeze and concluded the act with a trio of dancing girls.

The Sanfords, a bar act consists of two young men, one a clown and their performance on the bars is well worth seeing. They perform difficult whirling tricks in midair and wind up with both doing similar stunts on a bar that is just big enough for one. The comedy is good.

Attractive Singer

Louise Linden, a soprano, is the only vocal act on the show and is on a par with the best. Miss Linden, a very attractive brunette was in delightful voice and showed she was as clever an accordeonist as she is a singer. She sang several numbers including "My Hero" from "The Chocolate Soldier" and received a fine ovation.

The show finales with a patriotic parade of flag-bearing chorus girls with Miss Linden singing "Land of Hope and Glory."

Ken Good, who is well-known here, has an orchestra that is on a par with the other Garden presentations. The young saxophonist-maestro, who has played here for several years has lost none of his musical ability and his handling of difficult background music as well as inter-act melodies left nothing to be desired.

And last but not least was Fifi, the clown. Long before show-time the Garden funny man was "doing his stuff" in front of the grandstand and in his own incomparable manner kept the large crowd in merry humor with his fine mimicry, clown antics and other laugh-provoking routine.

Fair Ends Tonight

The midway both during the stage show and following was a kaleidoscope of black massed humanity and brilliantly colored lights, noise and ballyhoo of the barkers and the general atmosphere that belongs to the midway alone. Crowds milled about the various rides, the tented shows, the wild animal presentations, the games and the refreshment booths.

It was fair-time at its best and the huge crowd was in holiday mood.

The exhibition will continue this afternoon and will close tonight. With the Wednesday afternoon holiday in mind, directors anticipate a record-breaking attendance at both performances today, and if yesterday is a they should get just that. criterion, and weather permitting

All-Kiwanis Orchestra Heard At Luncheon

Believed to be the first all-Kiwanis orchestra in Canada, a party of nine Kiwanis club member musicians under direction of Reg. Hinchey had their preview before other members of the club on Tuesday when they staged their first musical program.

A varied program of musical numbers including marches was given for the appreciation of Kiwanis club members who expressed their approval of the newly organized orchestra in no uncertain terms.

Orchestra members include Reginald Hinchey as leader; Leo Riggs, piano; Jack Sills, string bass; William Wonnacott and Ralph Clapp, clarinet; William Lockyer, trombone; Garn Dobbs, tenor saxophone; Don LaFrance and Ross Hunter, violinists.

At the conclusion of the program President Mark Vanner commended Mr. Hinchey on his efforts in getting the orchestra together and expressed his belief that it was the only all-Kiwanis orchestra at least in the Ontario-Quebec and Maritimes district.

Ross Hunter, bandmaster of the Belleville Municipal Band and one of the all-Kiwanis orchestra, spoke briefly following introduction by Reg Hinchey, recalling 17 years ago when the local Kiwanis club had been instrumental in the organization of the first band at the collegiate.

"The then school principal P. C. MacLaurin thought that a school band would be a splendid thing," stated Mr. Hunter. "A survey of the school had shown a tremendous interest in music, but there were no instruments. Funds for 24 instruments had been provided by Kiwanis and six weeks later the school had a 'playing' band."

The foresight in organizing a band at the collegiate years ago had been instrumental in making Belleville citizens music minded, according to Mr. Hunter who stated that when he recently took over as bandmaster of the Belleville Municipal Band, no less than 17 of the original members of the first school band were members of the present senior organization.

In closing Mr. Hunter assured that in the Belleville Municipal Band, this city had a "good" band coming up. He urged they be given the moral support of the citizens.

It was rather "music day" at Kiwanis with W. E. Fletcher, director of music at Belleville Collegiate, and former member of the Lindsay Kiwanis club being admitted to the club. Mr. Fletcher was introduced by George Currie, principal of the collegiate and was officially installed as a member by past district governor Cliff Baragar.

Another Request Made That Questionnaire Be Returned by Monday

Merchants of the city were again urged today by the Retail Merchants Division of the Chamber of Commerce to complete and forward the questionnaire mailed them a few days ago relative to six o'clock closing on Saturday nights.

Chairman Harold Seldon of the Division emphasized the fact that all merchants in the city should record their opinions on the matter whether they are members of the Chamber of Commerce or not. Only in this way, he pointed out, can a correct conclusive opinion on a subject vital to all, be obtained.

Due to the fact that the Chamber has not a complete list of city merchants and business men, there is a possibility that some were overlooked when the questionnaires were mailed. These merchants are urgently requested to record their opinions on a post card and forward it to the Chamber of Commerce offices on Front Street.

It was pointed out this morning that unless a seventy-five per cent vote of the merchants in the city is obtained, and unless a seventy-five per cent of this vote is for or against, no action on the matter will be taken.

The committee has set the deadline for the receipt of questionnaires on Sept. 30.

Leader Jailed, Helpers Face Arrest in Strike

Pittsburgh, Sept. 25 — ([illegible]) — One independent union leader was under a one-year jail sentence and nine others faced arrest today unless they put a quick end to a day-old power strike which already had made idle more than 20,000 workers in the Pittsburgh coal and steel area.

The struck firm — Duquesne Light Company — said about 45 per cent of the current ordinarily supplied was flowing today through lines in the 817-square mile area served in Allegheny and Beaver counties.

There was enough current to furnish home and street lighting and to permit necessary office activity, but not enough to keep all mills and coal mines operating normally.

A general appeal to the public "to save electricity" was issued through newspapers and over radios.

A three-judge panel yesterday sentenced 35-year-old George L. Mueller, president of the Independent Association of Duquesne Light Company employees, for contempt of court on the grounds he had called a strike in defiance of a temporary injunction issued Sept. 9 by Judge Walter P. Smart.

Mueller, who previously had called the court's injunction "less than a scrap of paper," admitted making this statement and refused to apologize to the court. He also refused to obey a court request that he call off the strike.

The other nine men summoned before the judges are the remaining members of the strike "committee of 10" of the union.

The union seeks a 20 per cent pay raise among other demands.

BORE WHITE HOUSE LABEL

Kansas City, Sept. 25 —(AP)— A jar of regular damson plum preserves with a special label brought a high bid of $2 at the Woman's City Club annual harvest festival here. The preserves were contributed by Mrs. Harry S. Truman, and bore a White House label.

A LUCKY BABY

Guelph, Sept. 25 — (CP) — There's a lucky baby and a thankful mother in Guelph today. Yesterday Hugh Grant Heron, 22 months old, pushed out a window-screen and fell 15 feet to the ground. His mother ran out and found him lying in a flower-bed unhurt, just a few inches from the concrete sidewalk.

BLACKBURN — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, William Blackburn, who was taken away one year ago today, September 25th., 1945.

I am sad within my memory,
Lonely is my heart today;
For the one I loved so dearly
Has forever been called away.
I think of him in silence,
No eye can see me weep;
But many silent tears are shed
When others are asleep.

—Lovingly remembered by wife Marjorie and daughters, Marlene and Beatrice Ann.

OVENS — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Edward Ovens, who passed away September 25th., 1945.

God called him home, it was His will,
But in our hearts we love him still;
His memory is as dear today
As in the hour he passed away.
We often sit and think of him
When we are all alone,
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.

—Ever remembered by his wife, family, Wellington, Ida, and son-in-law, Donald, and grandchildren.

District Rural Young People Show Increased Interest In Junior Section of Fair

150 Contestants Take Part in Judging and Demonstration Competitions; Day Closes With Banquet

A vastly increased interest by district rural young people in the junior section of Belleville Fair was evidenced this year with approximately 150 contestants taking part in the judging and demonstration competitions.

Following a full day of judging of livestock and of homemaking exhibits by the girls approximately 170 young people and fair officials enjoyed their annual Junior banquet at Holloway Street Church where prize winners for the day's events were announced.

The judging competition was in charge of A. H. Martin, Department of Agriculture, Toronto, and H. L. Fair, agricultural representative for Hastings county. Judges were: horses, F. J. Webster, Picton; dairy cattle, Ayrshires, A. W. Sirrett, Kingston; Holstein, F. C. Patterson, Peterboro; Jerseys, H. W. Burns, Stirling; Swine, R. C. Banbury, Brighton, and beef cattle, C. W. Drive to Recruit More Members For Farmers' Strike

Edmonton, Sept. 25 —(CP)— Leaders of more than 50,000 Alberta and Saskatchewan farmers staging a 30-day delivery strike of all farm produce renewed efforts to obtain additional support from non-striking farmers today. The 19-day-old strike was called in a bid to force federal recognition of farmers demands for parity between farm costs and returns.

The Alberta Farmers' Union scheduled several mass meetings in Alberta this week in a drive to recruit new members to picket lines already supported by more than 20,000 union members. Meanwhile the United Farmers of Canada, with an estimated 30,000 membership confined to Saskatchewan, opened a strike office in Regina to try and win new supporters in the southern part of the province.

Reports from both provinces indicated strong support in the northern sections. George Bickerton, publicity and research director of the U.F.C. said more than 210 communities had expressed their support to the union — about 150 of them in the northern regions.

The 66-year-old U.F.C. director who has farmed just west of Saskatoon since 1912, opened the Regina strike office yesterday. He said memory of the depression days of the 1930's and fear of going back to them "started farmers at this strike."

Carl J. Stimpfle, tall farmer-president of the A.F.U., continued to supervise the dispatch of ballots to union members asking them if they wished the strike continued past the 30-day time limit as U.F.C. Secretary Frank Eliason announced his organization would "fall in line" with the decision reached by the Alberta farmers.

Farmers in both provinces waited anxiously today for word from Ottawa on the outcome of Federal Cabinet discussions believed to be considering the delivery strike problem.

Dr. David Shugar Will be Committed On Spy Charges

Ottawa, Sept. 25 (CP)—Dr. David Shugar, former navy anti-submarine detection expert, will be committed for trial next Tuesday on a charge of conspiring with members of the Soviet-inspired spy ring to send secret information to Russia.

Magistrate Glenn Strike, who will make the committal and set the date for trial, decided yesterday after a one-day preliminary hearing there was sufficient evidence to commit him. Shugar once before faced a conspiracy charge but was freed because of insufficient evidence.

Magistrate Strike announced his decision after hearing Dr. F. E. H. Beamish, director of the analytical division of the University of Toronto, testify he had taken steps to bar Dr. Shugar from his laboratory, where research was being done on an improved recording paper of anti-submarine devices.

He said that Dr. Shugar, then a navy lieutenant acting as liaison officer between the university and naval headquarters, had made a "highly irregular" suggestion that he be permitted to send reports on the research work to a British laboratory through unofficial channels.

Dr. J. E. Currah, assistant to Dr. Beamish in the research work, testified Dr. Shugar once had asked him for the formula of all the ingredients in the recording paper. He gave him the formula, but left out one chemical because of the need for secrecy and the fact there had been "distrust" of the accused.

Igor Gouzenko, former Russian cipher clerk who originally exposed the espionage activity, said that when he worked at the Soviet Embassy the name "Shugar" had appeared in telegrams sent to Moscow by the head of the spy ring in Ottawa.

BOYS IN CLASSES

Norwich, Sept. 25 — (CP) — For the first time in three years seven girl pupils of the high school here have boys in their grade. Four boys joined their class this year.

Western Wheat Rolls to Ocean Over Railways

Winnipeg, Sept. 25 (CP)—They may lack the romance of the silk specials and the hauteur of the crack trans-continental flyers in the nation's economy the harvest trains now rolling east through Winnipeg will take to a siding for no one.

Night and day, almost every hour of the 24, a locomotive pulling 65 or 70 cars laden with the wealth of Canada's Prairies grounds to a stop in one of the Winnipeg district yards of the country's two great railway systems. The annual grain movement to the Lakehead is on.

The magnitude of the movement and the wealth it brings directly or indirectly to Canadians is in direct ratio to the size of the crop. This year's estimated wheat yield of 440,000,000 bushels and coarse grain harvest of 567,000,000 bushels isn't the greatest ever. But it ranks well up.

At the peak of the 1946 rush—and that's just about now—the Canadian Pacific Railway expects to be handling 16 trains daily east-bound. Some days the total may reach 4,500 cars with perhaps 3,000,000 bushels of grain.

The Canadian National's expectations are about the same.

Already the headaches are developing. With more than 5,000 cars of grain in the Lakehead terminals of the C. P. and C. N. earlier this week, both railway and elevator officials found themselves hard pressed to unload them and provide room for the continuing influx. Some of the elevators were beset by lack of labor.

But by the time snow flies and Great Lakes navigations closes, Canada's Lakehead grain "cupboards"—bare this year because of last year's low crop and heavy exports—will be overflowing again.

DENIES CHARGE

Moline, Ill., Sept. 25 —AP)— Police Judge Ralph Stephenson fined William Osberg $100, but suspended payment, after he denied a charge of assault and battery preferred by his former wife, Jessie Barrows. But a few seconds later Judge Stephenson ruled the fine would have to be paid. He told Osberg that the manner in which he had looked at his former wife was "the most vicious stare I have ever witnessed in the courtroom."

Painted for Calvert by Adam Sherriff Scott, R.C.A.

In 1836 McGILL said:
"Create a Spirit of Enterprise"

A century ago, in Laprairie, Quebec for the first time in British North America the shrill whistle of a railway engine split the air. Under the guidance of the Honourable Peter McGill, the Champlain and St. Lawrence railway prospered and became the first link of a mighty chain—the Canadian National Railway System — 24,000 miles of railroad, greatest on the continent.

In 1622 CALVERT said:
"Encourage the building of this country"

CALVERT, Man of Vision of the 17th century, said to his New World settlers, "seek to advance . . . there is nothing beyond reach."

300 years ago Calvert foresaw prosperity and growth through united effort. "Be partners," he urged, "Promote industry . . . and public benefit."

Founder of colonies in the New World and clear-headed pioneer of unity, Calvert, far back in the 17th century, may well have foreseen Canada's unbounded future through unity of purpose.

The full measure of our stature as a nation depends upon unity of purpose. There is only one Canada for clear-headed Canadians.

Wet Pavements Traffic Traps

Some time ago a local physician in commenting on traffic accidents stated that after every dry spell he could look for extra cases by reason of accidents on the highways. He said that motorists become unwary during the fine weather and subconsciously get in the habit of driving faster than they should knowing they can bring their cars to a fairly quick stop in emergency. But with the fall of rain the pavements are treacherous and bring many a driver to his downfall.

The constant drip of oil on the roadways accumulates over a period and when this becomes moist presents a slippery surface that demands more than ordinary care. Leaves on streets, too, often hide a wet spot and this has caused many accidents.

Well we have had a fairly dry season and the time for careful driving is at hand. Accidents can be rather gruesome and costly affairs for all concerned — so what's all the hurry, anyway?

British Papers Expand

A news dispatch yesterday announced that British newspapers will be allowed to cut loose in a battle for circulation. Up to now they have been permitted to print only four-page papers but this is being increased. The Government has allotted them enough paper to print two extra pages three days a week and they may print all the papers the public will buy. It is expected they will cram all the attraction they can into the extra six pages a week.

Even with the small-sized newspapers the British press must consume a tremendous quantity of newsprint. The London Times which is probably the best known is said to have a circulation of about 200,000. The London Daily Telegraph is another fine paper which appears on important breakfast tables and has a circulation approaching the million mark.

Some other London dailies have circulations running into huge figures with Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express nearing 3,000,000. This great production is made possible by simultaneous publication in Manchester, Glasgow and Belfast, by the density of the population, and by fast train and in some areas, plane transport, which covers the entire United Kingdom in a few hours.

The London Sunday papers which are actually published on Sunday, also have huge circulations running into millions. New of the World claims leadership with 3,000,000 papers but the Newspaper World stated recently that the latest figures were nearer 4,000,000 than 3,000,000. For comparison in amount of paper used daily, the Toronto Star with a circulation of over 300,000 would serve to print well over 2,500,000 copies in Britain.

The purpose of the increase in newsprint being granted, we presume, is to give the government an opportunity to see what supplies are needed to take care of the home markets to the fullest extent. The newspapers will, also, be able to consolidate the extra circulation they have gained in whatever period they have been allowed.

Toot Not Sweet

Talking about weddings again, we see that Ottawa civic authorities have decided to put a stop to the continuous tooting of automobile horns by the processions which accompany a newly-wedded pair from the ceremony to the house of the bride's parents, or the train, or wherever it may be that they go. If Ottawa can do it, any city can do it, and it sounds to us like a thing that ought to be done comments Toronto Saturday Night.

The automobile horn was invented and attached to the vehicle for the purpose of communicating news of its approach to people in front of it, and should be used only when needed for that purpose. No purpose whatever is served by continuous tooting by the bridal party, except the enjoyment of the tooters; and if people who enjoy tooting are permitted to toot continuously at weddings they will ultimately begin to toot continuously at christenings, Sunday School picnics, golf tournaments, meetings of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the Canadian Authors' Association, and just plain ordinary binges. There is already far too much tooting, and there will be more if it is not suppressed. Let it be suppressed, too sweet.

What Sort of 'One World'?

Mr. Henry Wallace, orphaned of the official Democratic party, says he is going to fight for "one world."

Here we have the sort of slogan-talk which in these confused, strident days passes for thought.

What sort of "one world" does Mr. Wallace want? Clear it should be to any dunce that it is not whether we have "one world" or a score of worlds that matters, but only the character of whatever world or worlds we have. Yet this loose talk about "one world," first popularized in a superficial book by Wendell Willkie after an airplane flight to Russia and elsewhere, is gobbled up by the unthinking as the core of wisdom states an Ottawa Journal editorial.

Mr. Wallace's "one world," judging by one of his recent speeches, would be largely one Soviet world. The United States would withdraw from Europe and Britain from the Middle East. The Danube, Trieste, the Dardanelles would be under the hammer and sickle, the Mediterranean a Russian lake. The thing we denied to Hitler we should hand over calmly to Stalin.

The world is afflicted by slogans — or by people who permit themselves to be victimized by slogans. The slogan about "one world," without thought or care of whether it is a world of good or a world half under tyranny, is the limit in dumbness.

Bearing

Occasionally the Vice-Chamberlain of the Household is required to present at the Table the King's reply to such "loyal and dutiful addresses" as the Commons may cause to be sent to His Majesty, says The London Graphic.

This duty involves a lengthy walk backward from the Table to the Bar. When performed surely the feat prompts a cheer from the members.

The other day Captain J. W. Snow, M.P., the present holder of the office, earned the customary acclaim. Had he cared to look down he would have noticed a useful seam running from the centre of the Table to the Bar by which he might well have retraced his steps.

But Captain Snow is a gunner. He fixed his eye on the Speaker's chair and took a back-bearing from that. His calculations were accurate and he reversed faultlessly to the Bar. Gunners do not look down.

Hollywood Censors Dickens

A visit to London by Joseph Breen, chief Hollywood censor, was the occasion for loud protests by British motion picture producers against the production code which Mr. Breen administers. An example: suicide as a means of cheating justice is banned unless it can be attributed to insanity. Therefore, reported "The Transatlantic Daily Mail," a Charles Dickens classic, "Nicholas Nickleby," will have a special ending for American audiences. British audiences will see the suicide of a sane Ralph Nickleby, as Dickens wrote it. A line of two will be inserted to establish him as insane for American theatres.

Bye's one golfer I can trim.
Badly though I often play,
I have never lost to him.

This I mutter with a grin,
When the tourney list I eye:
"There's a match I'm sure to win.
I can beat that fellow Bye."

Dear old Bye! The gentle soul,
Playing handicap or scratch,
Never has he won a hole.
Never has he won a match.

He belongs to every club,
Used one bracket to supply.
He's the world's most famous dub.
Good, old, gracious loser, Bye.

Hospitals in Dilemma Over Nurse Shortage

(By Dr. Harvey Agnew in The Canadian Hospital)

It may all be part of a general postwar hysteria, but it is difficult to fathom the present public attitude toward the shortage of personnel in hospitals, and of nurses in particular.

This Spring the serious shortage of staff attracted widespread press attention, especially when it became known that hospitals were being forced to close down whole wards despite waiting lists for admission. Then came the repercussions. Letters to the press blaming the hospitals for present conditions appeared.

While some have been reasonable and factually correct, most have been distinctly otherwise. Seldom have we seen such utter mis-statements and distortion of facts. Assertions were made which might have been applicable in part to many hospitals before the war but which have little, if any, application today. Even editors and feature writers, who should be more careful to verify their information, obviously take it for granted that hospitals work their nurses and others seven long days a week and pay starvation wages.

We read of nurses having to "scrub floors." In some 30 years of intimate contact with many hospitals, we have yet to see on this continent a nurse scrubbing floors; wiping up something from the floor, yes, but that not scrubbing floors.

• • •

This negative publicity does not tell how hospitals have increased wages and nurses' salaries time and again during the war—and since; or how they have reduced hours, improved the schedule of shifts and added to holiday time. In writing of remuneration, such correspondents fail almost invariably to add in the board, laundry, room and other emoluments provided.

As for student nurses, we read much of the terrific grind, the long hours, the endless duty between classes, the lack of pay. We hear nothing about the magnificent training given to them in the modern school, or of the drastic reduction in their hours of practical work on the wards to provide time for their academic courses. Critics should keep up to date.

It is not realized that the cost per student nurse in a present day school runs over one thousand dollars a year. Yet they pay no fees for this valuable training as do their sisters taking a business course studying music, or at the university. In the United States many schools for nurses charge heavy tuition fees. They do work hard, quite hard, but it seems to agree with them for it is a common observation that girls in a class will gain up to 10 pounds or more on the average in the first year.

This negative publicity is serious. Much needed hospital personnel is being kept away. Graduate nurses are getting an obsolete, not an up-to-date, picture of the situation. Potential student nurses are being frightened away from an honored and remunerative profession. And of paramount importance, the public is not getting the service which is so urgently needed. One large hospital, despite a long waiting list of patients, has eighty private and semi-private beds closed today because of lack of nurses. It is typical of others.

We believe that our patients are still getting care of a high standard, but a survey would probably reveal that few, if any, hospitals are able to provide the number of nursing care hours per patient which is considered desirable.

If the public thinks hospital employes should be paid more and work fewer hours—and there seems to be acceptance of the idea that if this is good for certain groups in society it should be avalable to others—why not do so and add another dollar or two to the hospital room rate? The public pays 25 to 100 percent more for practically everything else, thanks to the many ways of circumventing price controls; why not more for one of the services most essential to our well-being?

Why not charge, say five dollars at least for the paying general ward and proportionately higher rates for private and semi-private care? And because municipal and provincial payments for indigents will probably continue to lag far below cost, let us add another 25 percent to the room rate for all paying patients at all levels. Why not be realistic in appraising the situation?

But if we adopt a 44-hour week (now the law in British Columbia except for nurses) or agree to a still shorter schedule, how can we possibly carry on with the present scarcity of help? The answer is that we cannot If that is what the public wants, all right, let us close down one quarter or one third of each hospital to meet the staff shortage, jump up the rates on paying patients, find ways and means of reducing the percentage of public patients and say to the public: "You asked for it!"

In many communities we cannot buy food after six p.m. or gasoline on evenings or Sundays. Strikers see to it that we cannot get clothing, coal or tires, or even, on occasion, get to our offices. Try to get a burst pipe fixed between 4.30 p.m. on Friday and Monday morning! Why should hospital personnel toil so conscientiously for a public that wants service at once—and at less than cost — but talks a different language when we went something?

The trouble is that hospitals have always provided such conscientious service, pay or no pay, and have always been backed by such public spirited people—trustees, Sisters, doctors, aids—that they are being taken for granted by the public. Come hellfire or tidewater, the hospital is expected to be on the job, day in and day out—and it always has been. In this post-war letting down other group seems to feel justified in jockeying or battling for better wages, better prices, more group power. But the hospitals? No!

If hours and wages, despite repeated adjustments, are basic factors in this quest for the necessary personnel, hospital trustees must meet the market price for help. There is no alternative. Hospital trustees must then tell the public, plainly and bluntly, that it costs so much to provide hospital care and that the rates have been adjusted accordingly.

Peat Bogs Contain Much Raw Wealth

Ottawa, Sept. 25 (CP)—A new industry for Canada lies in the undeveloped resources of the country's 37,000 square miles of peat bogs, C. W. Davis, National Research Council chemist, said in an interview today.

There are more than 30 uses for peat, which once was regarded primarily as a fuel, said Mr. Davis, who has been engaged for 2 1-2 years on research into the subject. Among these he mentioned soil conditioner for dry soils, manufacture of ceramics and a source of many chemicals.

Within a radius of 50 miles of Ottawa three peat bogs contain 100,000,000 tons of the material. The largest in Ontario, they are situated at Alfred, Marsh Hill and Moose Creek.

FOG DELAYS AQUITANIA

Halifx, Sept. 25 (CP) — A fog bank 200 miles wide, stretching from the shores of Nova Scotia to Sable Island, today brought ship movements almost to a standstill along the coast and promised to tie up shipping in and out of Halifax harbor for at least another 24 hours.

Already more than 24 hours behind schedule, the liner Aquitania was still lying at anchor off Chebucto Head near the harbor entrance, and indications were that the big ship carrying 2,600 passengers will not dock until some time tomorrow.

The fog has also affected air traffic and all Trans-Canada Airlines planes have been grounded at Dartmouth airport since Sunday.

STOREKEEPERS WARNED

Toronto, Sept. 25 (CP)—Prices Board officials and police today warned Toronto storekeepers to be on the watch for a man posing as a board investigator attempting to obtain money illegally by offering to settle pending court cases. They said that he asks a fee of as high as $200.

STALIN BREAKS RECORD

London, Sept. 25 (CP) —Joseph Stalin has outdone Karl Marx as a best-selling writer, the Moscow radio reported today. Stalin's book, "A Short Course of the History of the C. P. S. U. (Bolsheviks)," was published Oct. 1, 1938. In the eight years since, the broadcast said, 31,317,000 copies have been distributed in 61 Soviet dialects and 16 foreign languages.

KEEP THAT BOSTON BREEZE BLOWING

That refreshing breeze from Boston, hailed here recently — remember?—the dean of Harvard Public Health School and the Massachussetts state health commissioner now say "Bosh!" to the bugaboo of catching your death of pneumonia from sitting in a draft and all that old hokum bunkem — the breeze has not yet developed into what you could call a wind.

A house organ prints a "condensation" of an article that was published in a medical journal. The medical author of the article, speaking of rheumatic fever, is quoted thus:

"Exposure to cold is a great factor in precipitating severe attacks . . . Sometimes polyarthritis" (that means inflammation of several joints) "follows a single exposure, as after swimming in cold water . . .

"Helpful prophylactic measures include maintenance of good general health" (if that isn't as inane as the rest of the article, I, Doc Brady, must be pretty feeble aloft) "and avoiding exposure to cold and infection."

I don't know any more than any other doctor does about the cause or treatment of rheumatic fever (formerly known as inflammatory rheumatism, now sometimes called acute multiple arthritis or acute infectious polyarthritis), and I certainly can't prove that vagrant drafts, wet feet, swimming in cold water, going without a hat or overshoes or coat or heavy underwear or insufficient heat in the house, store, school or elsewhere doesn't cause this or some other illness. Neither can I prove that it isn't caused by the phase of the moon or the signs of the zodiac. It is not easy to prove a negative.

To the best of my knowledge, based on reasonable familiarity with current medical research and practice, rheumatic fever is caused by a Streptococcus infection and the strain of Streptococcus that lodges in the joint linings or, sometimes, in the heart lining and covering of heart valves, is carried there in the blood. The Streptococcus invades the blood stream, in most instances, through the tonsils or through the lining of nose and throat, some time after one or more episodes of tonsilitis, acute sore throat or acute inflammation of nose-throat cavity lining (rhino-pharyngitis) in the post-nasal area, the neighborhood of the third or pharyngeal "tonsil" better known as adenoid, and the orifice of the Eustachian tube which is an air duct connecting the middle ear cavity with the rear of nasal passage or naso-pharynx.

I'm sorry I brought that up now, for I suppose all these dreadful medical terms will just bounce off harmlessly. Anyway, that's all I know about rheumatic fever. Of course I can't guarantee a kid won't get it from going in swimming when the water is very cold, if he likes, or from leaving off his overcoat or his heavy underwear, when the weather is cold, if he likes, or from going barefoot or bare as he likes when he likes—but if he were my kid the question could not arise, so what do we care?

I'm glad to join Drs. Cecil Drinker, dean of Harvard Public Health School and Vlado Getting, Massachusetts state health commissioner, as far as they may dare to go on this question of the effects of everyday "exposure" — even if we incur the disfavor of all the old quacks in practice.

Of course everybody feels sorry for the youngster who is unlucky enough to have rheumatic fever — or pneumonia, or cerebro-spinal meningitis, or poliomyelitis or any infectious illness for which we has no effective immunization. But in the name of all that is reasonable, sensible and kind, why keep parents constantly worried lest their children be "exposed" to a breath of cold air, a cold bath or other trifling everyday discomfort and so "predisposed" to such illness? This traditional medical hokum is, I say, arrant quackery—and I offer this space in my column to any physician of standing who may care to answer or refute what I say, provided, of course, the physician does not attempt to conceal his or her identity.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Do amputated limbs sometimes ache?

Persons who have had arms or legs amputated often feel heat, cold, pain and other unpleasant sensations that seem to be in the lost limbs.

In the same way extracted teeth sometimes seem to ache.

These sensations, though illusory as to location, are occasionally very acute and vivid.

Medical scientists generally explain this phenomenon by saying that the nerve centres from which the nerves led to the absent members remain intact and receive impressions from the ends of the severed nerves. When the cut-off nerve ends are pressed or stretched the stimuli are transmitted to the brain, the real seat of physical feeling, and create images and sensations similar to those formerly received through the extended nerves in the amputated limbs. The correctness of this theory appears to be supported by the fact that in some cases the illusion can be dispelled and the phantom limb relieved from pain by injecting cocaine or other anesthetics in the scar.

It has been suggested that sometimes the "feeling" in amputated arms and legs may be owing to the retention by the subconscious mind of "a picture of a complete body" and that the pain is merely mental and not physical at all. Occasionally a person with an amputated leg or arm has the illusion that he possesses and can control the missing member; again he imagines that the phantom part follows the movements of the stump.

Not a few accidents to cripples are the result of illusions in which the cripple imagines he still has a missing limb and attempts to move accordingly. A curious case in point was that of a horseman who had lost a hand. Imagining that he was holding the reins with the phantom hand, he struck the horse with the other and was thrown.

There used to be an old belief that if an amputated limb, even though buried, was in any way disturbed, molested or injured, the stump would register a corresponding sensation.

She claimed Hughes, a building contractor, beat and kicked her and by "threats and violence" forced her to sign property documents she had not read.

The disturbers were whit ducks, unloaded by some one in the rear of a restaurant and left untended, which provoked the ducks to loud squawking.

No Trespassing Notices of British Sportsman Another Passing Privilege

By STUART UNDERHILL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Old-fashioned Britain is supposed to be the land of privilege for wealthy landowners, but the wealthy landowner will tell you that fairy tales were not meant to be believed.

The first summer of peace has demonstrated that the average Britain may go most of the places he wants in spite of the frequent notices claiming that paths are private and that trespassers will be prosecuted. This is because of the work of right-of-way enthusiasts, people who are determined that nothing short of a government will prevent them from following the paths their ancestors trod.

The victory of the ordinary tramper over privilege is seen at its purest in the Scottish highlands where the wealthy go to shoot grouse and stalk stags. these shootings are highly expensive, the least of them costing hundreds of pounds if let for the season.

A sportsman, of course, wants to be left alone with his prey. but sometimes he has lifted his rifle for a hard-won shot and found the stag gone to the distant crags and replaced by a hiker with big boots and an innocent expression.

What the tweedy hunters learn is that the paths among the heather, apparently made by the leisurely deer, sometimes were mountain highways in the past when highlanders went south on raids and returned with cattle. If it can be proved that these paths were used extensively at one time, a right-of-way may be declared and no landowner can deny access.

The development of hostels throughout the United Kingdom was encouraged by the King even before the war, but now thousands more men and women who learned the attractions of outdoor life in the forces are spending their holidays on roads and paths.

In cases where landlords have been difficult, court cases have been fought by the right-of-way associations with extensive quoting of old traditions and searching of yellowed records. Usually, however, the give-and-take spirit has prevailed and the landlord has come to respect the hiker who respects the place he visits.

Cut in Trolley Operations Due To Power Strike

Pittsburgh, Sept. 25 (AP) — The third power strike in seven months hit this steel city today, curtailing steel operations and street car transportation in an area of 1,500,000 inhabitants.

As the walkout of Duquesne Light Company employees got under way, the Pittsburgh Railways Company announced a 50-per-cent cut in trolley operations. Trolleys normally transport about 1,000,000 persons daily here.

Shortly after the strike got under way—at 9:30 a.m., E.D.T., the first effects were reported at steel mills, although power continued to flow to home dwellers and buildings in the city and the numerous neighboring communities in an 817 square mile area.

The United States Steel Corporation reported the American Bridge Company, a subsidiary, closed its Ambridge, Pa., plant because of "lack of power." About 2,500 men were laid off.

The strike was called by an independent union to enforce a demand for a 20-per-cent wage increase among other things.

Some buildings downtown were equipped with emergency power units and expected to carry on business best as possible. Pittsburgh's three daily newspapers were publishing as usual, being equipped with emergency power.

Some shifts of production workers had reported for work as usual at the company's four power plants.

Other groups collected in a courtroom for a hearing on a city-obtained injunction prohibiting them from striking.

Police said the girl had been raped.

HOLLOWAY STREET YOUNG PEOPLE ENTERTAINED

The young people of Holloway Street United Church were guests at Miss Shirley's Hitchon's home, 186 West Moira Street, following the evening church service on Sunday.

A lively sing-song was capably led by Miss Rosslyn Robertson and the enthusiastic young people enjoyed singing their favorite songs many of which they had formerly learned at Oak Lake Young People's camp.

Harry Denton, in his usual enthusiastic manner, amused the group with a few brain-teasing games. Mr. William Connor contributed a great deal to the entertainment as he delighted the group with several piano selections, after which refreshments were served.

A friendship circle was formed by the young people at which time Miss Doris Scott thanked the hostesses of the evening for their hospitality.

A meeting of rich fellowship concluded with "Blest Be the Tie" and a short prayer offered by Rev. Lloyd Shorten, of Foxboro.

Fashion Flashes

SOMETHING NEW — cited for theatre wear by a London designer—is a tailored coat of fine black and white checked tweed studded all over with silver sequins. He uses these coats to top plain black crepe gowns.

Fine details mark dresses designed for a smart woman's afternoon. Black crepe makes a frock detailed with deep front and back yokes and sleeve tops of fine black Chantilly type lace. Horizontal appliques of lace on the bodice is a nice touch, as is the outlining of the rose design in the lace by black sequins. Shirring releases the skirt below a contour flange seam that gives a long torso effect.

The look for suit jackets is long and slim. A smart suit in green and pale pink striped woollen has a long, belted jacket with a cutaway line. High closing below a convertible club collar. Slightly deepened armhole sleeves.

Definitely part of the new fashion scene is the fine wool frock in bright colors. Tangerine yellow is used for an afternoon coat-dress in soft woollen, with tiny gilt filigree buttons in triple-brested formation down the snug bodice. Dress has push up sleeves

The covered-up look teams up with the longer torso line in many of the new frocks. Nice for street wear is a frock of red and black checked woollen made with high neckline and a pointed yoke that extends to the dropped shoulder line. To achieve the long torso effect, cross bands swoop low over the hips, and are trimmed with large gilt buttons.

LOOSE COUPONS FOUND

Toronto, Sept. 25 — (CP)—Investigation of the finding of 2,700 loose sugar coupons in a house on West Adelaide Street yesterday led to arrest of two men charged with breaches of Prices Board regulations. The two were Roger Dikn, 23, and Angelo Merulla. Police said the coupons were not connected with recent thefts of new ration books.

PREDICTS EARLY END

Chatham, Sept. 25 — (CP) — Ira Burgess, president of the Kent County Meat-dealers Association recently predicted an early end to meat rationing in Canada, probably before April 1. Claiming that people have lots of meat and coupons, he said, "It's just a headache for butchers."

London (CP)—Public telephone boxes in Britain and Northern Ireland now number more than 52,000.

Forty Babies Presented At Fair Baby Show

Tuesday afternoon the music in the building known as the Dancing Pavilion "changed its tune" to the tempo of almost forty babies, waiting anxiously for ex-Mayor Harry Rollins to raise his baton for the "down beat" as he directed them in "The March of the Baby Show", at Belleville Fair.

During the forenoon dull skies promised a possible repetition of Monday's inclement weather but with the coming of the noon-hour, came also the warm sunshine; and long before the hour set for the formal opening babies were arriving from every direction, in cars, in prams and in their mothers' arms—fair-haired, blue-eyed, curly tops and dark-haired, brown-eyed laddies, all "bonnie and bra'". Belleville Fair never entertained a finer group of beautiful babies than were weighed, measured and judged by the nurses who gave freely of their time and knowledge to promote the success of the show.

Large Entry

The number of entries this year far exceeded that of 1945, probably due to improved weather conditions.

Speaking from the platform, Mr. Rollins said, "If the crop continues to grow, the population of the Dominion of Canada will be considerably augmented by Fair time next year, where there may be "more", but there can hardly be "better" babies."

In the show this year there were but two classes since no twins were entered. The first group included babies from one to six months; the second those in age from seven to eleven months, girls predominating in both.

While the five registered nurses were deciding upon the most nearly perfect babies in points of weight and height, according to government standards, the parents and babies relaxed and rested, many of the "Cherubs" journeying easily to "The Land of Nod".

Prize Winners

At last a list of the prize-winning babies was presented and Mr. Rollins asked the mothers to bring them to the platform where they might be seen and where a photographer flashed their pictures.

In Group 1 the following babies were designated for prizes:

3rd— Rosanne Benson, 7 Murphy Street, Trenton.

4th—Judith Ann Dafoe, Corbyville, Ont.

5th—Gail Marie Ray, Harold.

In the second group the following were chosen:

1st—Mary Frances Walker, Mountain View.

3rd—Dianne Houston, 284 Albert Street.

4th—Sharon Bradshaw, R.R. 5, Belleville.

5th—Dianne Marie Ford, 102 Chatham Street.

Later in the afternoon photographers took pictures of all the mothers with their children, and the directors were happily able to write "finis" to another Belleville Fair Baby Show.

The Experts Say

Ottawa, Sept. 21—(CP)—September abundance of fruits and vegetables means a well-stocked larder for the coming winter. Many homemakers will include pickles and relishes in their late preservation program and there will be no sense of hoarding as there would have been during the war years.

First quality pickles are attained only by the use of first quality vegetables or fruits, good vinegar and fine spices. Wilted vegetables make pickles of poor texture and flat flavor. The need for freshness is particularly true if the vegetables are cucumbers, which should be pickled within 24 hours of gathering, while they are still firm and crisp. Too long standing makes hollow, rubbery pickles.

Shriveled pickles may be caused by over-strong brine, too much sugar or too strong vinegar. With the careful use of sugar and salt at the present time, there should be no need to emphasize this point, but a brine that is too weak will make soft pickles.

One type of pickle that is usually a success is the chopped mixed variety. Whether it is called chutney, picalilli or chow chow, there is still a necessity for good vegetables with the right amount of salt, vinegar and spices.

Chutneys of vegetables and fruits simmered a long time until reduced to the consistency of jam and seasoned with vinegar and a subtle blend of spices are always popular.

Mixtures of two or three fruits and vegetables make good chutneys and as many as six are often combined. Apples, plums, peaches, pears, rhubarb, tomatoes, vegetable marrow, turnips, beets may be used. To these, onions and celery are usually added.

Mixed pickle spice, nutmeg and cinnamon give a delicious flavor milder than the high seasoning usual in tropical countries.

Fruit Tamale: eight large or 12 medium ripe tomatoes (three pounds); three peaches (1½ cups chopped); three pears (1½ cups, chopped); three apples (two cups, chopped); three medium onions (1½ cups, chopped); one cup of celery, chopped; one small hot red pepper (two tablespoons, chopped); or six small dried chili peppers; two tablespoons whole mixed pickling spice, 1½ cups brown sugar; two teaspoons of salt; one cup of vinegar.

Blanch, peel and chop tomatoes and peaches. Peel, core and chop pears and apples. Peel and chop celery. Remove stem and seeds from pepper and cut finely.

Tie spices (including dried chili peppers if used) loosely in a cheesecloth bag. Add spice bag, sugar and salt to vinegar, bring to boiling point and add other ingredients. Cook uncovered until thickened — about 45 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove spice bag; pack pickles in clean hot jars and seal. Yield is about four pints.

Denmark in Commanding Position To Bargain on Butter, Bacon Trade

By JAMES McCOOK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Copenhagen, Sept. 25 (CP—By Mail)—Denmark is playing her trade cards close to her chest but her spokesmen declare that her policies represent only the necessary firm trading required of a small country.

While it is obvious that Denmark must keep on the best possible terms with powerful neighbors, officials say:

1. That recent arrangements for sale of butter and perhaps some bacon to Russia have nothing to do with prices charged the United Kingdom for similar products. Russia needs Danish goods and prices and quantities were negotiated in the ordinary way.

2. Denmark still considers Britain her major market.

3. No trade war is being waged with Canada for the British bacon market. Danish farmers are going out of hog production and cannot obtain feed to maintain herds of pre-war size. They also recall Agriculture Minister Gardiner's statement that bacon prices paid by Britain to Canada, while less in the current years, will exceed Danish prices in the third year of the Anglo-Canadian agreement.

Russia Wants More Food

Meanwhile Denmark has a Russian request for whatever additional butter and bacon can be supplied with the suggestion payment will be in dollars instead of the sterling British offers. But Britain has the manufactured goods Denmark wants in reconstruction and the prestige of an old and essential customer.

This year Denmark expects to export to Britain products valued at more than 500,000,000 kroner ($100,000,000) and import British goods worth 800,000,000. In 1937 her bacon, butter and eggs sales to Britain were worth 770,000,000 kroner and her imports from Britain 500,000,000 to 600,000,000.

Russia pays more for Danish butter than Britain, which buys at the rate of 420 kroner per 100 kilograms (220 pounds) compared with 470 for Russia. But Finland pays 575 kroner for the same butter and prices vary to other countries.

"In setting and negotiating prices many factors have to be taken into account and we make the best bargain we can," a Dane said.

"But we always remember that 90 per cent of our bacon and 65 per cent of our butter goes to the United Kingdom."

OWN PAPER 'SCOOPED'

London, Sept. 25 (CP) — The Kremlin's method of handling replies by Prime Minister Stalin to queries from the press left the Sunday Times in the lurch journalistically today.

Alexander Werth, the Sunday Times correspondent in Moscow, in writing asked Premier Stalin nine questions about international affairs and the Generalissimo answered them.

But the Moscow radio and the official Soviet news agency Tass distributed the full text of Werth's questions and Premier Stalin's replies today, five days before the Sunday Times will get a chance to publish them.

NOT PERMITTED TO WED

Newport, Isle of Wight, England, Sept. 25 (CP)—Two persons cannot live on £3 10s ($14) a week, Magistrate Lady Baring said as she refused the application of Leslie Butt, 18-year-old butcher's assistant, to marry Peggy Arnold, 17-year-old grocer's assistant. Butt said he earned £2 a week while his fiancee earned 30s. The girl's mother asked the magistrate to deny permission.

NONCHALANT KILLER

George Norman Bilton, 23, who was sentenced to be hanged Dec. 10 for the murder of Mrs. Theresa Laurie, Ajax woman, leisurely smoked a cigaret on the way from the courtroom to the adjoining jail after the jury returned its verdict. He was escorted by Provincial Constable Harold Quantrill, one of the two armed guards who were assigned to attend him during the last two days of the trial, after his Sunday attempted suicide.

London Letter

By WILLIAM ROSS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 23 (CP Cable)—London's 52nd annual "prom" season is over. The fountain and the fish bowl have been removed from the centre of Albert Hall and two orchestras, three choirs and three conductors have gone home after seven weeks of "good music for everyone."

Even the bust of Sir Henry Wood, who conducted the first prom and presided over virtually every one until the 50th season, has been removed. Sir Henry died in 1944 but his bronze bust has watched the proceedings from an illuminated niche in the organ loft.

The season just over was in the Henry Wood tradition. New works and new artists — both British and foreign—were introduced. The major works performed included 39 symphonies and concertos by British composers.

Before the war the proms were held in Queen's Hall which accommodated 3,000 persons. Queen's Hall was destroyed during the blitz and the proms were moved complete to Albert Hall.

From the start the Albert Hall proms succeeded. This year the hall's 8,000 capacity averaged 95 per cent filled for each of the 48 concerts. Hundreds were turned away nightly, unable to get into the prom section on the main floor where, for half a crown (50 cents), music lovers can stand throughout the concerts.

In one breath, critics said the playing night after night was superb and voiced incredulity that the orchestras should retain their freshness of approach. At the same time they sighed that—perhaps because none of the three maestros who have taken Sir Henry's solitary place can talk to the musicians with a Cockney accent—some of the old fire and sparkle seemed to be lacking.

Of the three conductors now wielding Sir Henry's baton — Sir Adrian Boult, Basil Cameron and Constant Lambert—perhaps the lean and bald Sir Adrian most typified the old prom spirit.

He was as often off the podium among the orchestra as he was on it and frequently when he was on it he let the orchestra take things in their own hands, helping them over possible pitfalls with an occasional gesture.

Prom musicians now are trying to raise enough money to build themselves a permanent home, a Sir Henry Wood memorial hall. Already £50,000 has been raised, £2,000 from half crowns for having artists autograph promenaders program.

TRENTON

19 Cases Heard In Police Court

Trenton—Nineteen cases were heard in Trenton police court on Tuesday afternoon last before Magistrate T. Y. Wills and Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C.

Francis W. Coleman and Dunbar Hooley, both of the R.C.A.F., Trenton, charged with attempted theft of an auto, had their cases enlarged for one week.

William Lambert, Jr., Wooler Road, charged with having stolen goods, was given one month in the county jail. A local citizen observed Lambert trying car doors in a parking lot and reported to police. Lambert when searched was found to have stolen goods on his person. On a second charge of being intoxicated he was given a further ten days.

Arthur Lockwood charged with assault had his case withdrawn after paying costs of court of $2.50.

John Dash and Robert E. Westlake were each fined $12.50 for speeding.

For having liquor in a public place Ivan Stewart and Percy Dafoe were each assessed $13.

Two local residents were charged under the Vicious Dog Act and were ordered to have their dogs destroyed and pay the costs of court.

William G. Maund, a new partner in the firm of Maund's Service. Maund's Service (Domestic Cleaning Service) was organized by Fred Maund in Belleville and began operating in October, 1945.

"Bill" Maund has recently been retired from the R.C.A.F., where he served for five years on the East Coast and Newfoundland as Flying Control Officer.

Belleville is not new to Bill as he was born here, son of the late William H. Maund, Assistant General Manager of the T. & N. O. Railway, and Mrs. Maund, the former Ethel Walton, of Belleville. Bill spent many holidays visiting relatives here through school years. His wife and young daughter will be taking up residence in Belleville shortly.

Nickel-Return Slot Fails To Function for Ilsley

Ottawa, Sept. 25 (CP)— Finance Minister Ilsley, the guardian of Canada's treasury, today subconsciously disclosed a segment of the human side of his thrifty, Maritime nature.

Completing a call in a pay telephone in an uptown restaurant, the Finance Minister was seen to step away, then turn and feel in the "nickel-return" slot. He gave a barely noticeable shake of his head as he withdrew his hand empty.

Blue Ridge, Ga., Sept. 25 (AP)—Bill Lovell made a fine shot on the No. 7 fairway but it wasn't an eagle, or even a birdie. It was a 325-pound black bear. Mr. Bruin wandered onto the course, presumably from nearby mountains. Lovell brought it down after several others had shot at it and missed.

Cards' Ability to Pull Games Out of Fire in Late Innings Reason Why They Are on Top

Erv Dusak, Rookie, Pounds Ball Into Stands in 10th to Defeat Reds 2-1

(Associated Press Sport Writer)
By RALPH RODEN

The ability of St. Louis Cardinals to come from behind in the late innings and then go on to win, is one of the primary reasons the Red Birds lead Brooklyn Dodgers by a full game today in the torrid National Pennant race.

Several times during the present campaign, the Cards have pulled seeming defeats out of the fire in the waning part of a game. They did it again last night when Rookie outfielder Erv Dusak hammered one of southpaw Johnny Vander Meer's offerings into the left field bleachers at St. Louis in the 10th inning to enable the Cards to down Cincinnati Reds 2-1.

Stan Musial set the stage for Dusak's bow last night by singling in a run in the ninth to tie the score. Until then, Vander Meer had blanked the Cards 1-0 on two hits.

The Dodgers' scheduled game with Philadelphia Phillies was postponed because of rain. The Brooks met the Phils in a single game today while the Cards tangle with the Reds again under the lights.

Brooklyn will play off yesterday's postponement Thursday, with a doubleheader that day if rain cancels today's tilt.

Elsewhere in the National League, Chicago Cubs split a doubleheader with Pittsburgh Pirates, winning the opener, 13-1 and dropping the eight inning nightcap 13-0.

In the American League, Hank Greenberg smashed three home runs to pace Detroit Tigers 4-3 and 10-1 victories over St. Louis Browns.

The twin victories also stretched a Tiger winning streak to 10 games and clinched second place for the Bengals as the pennant-winning Red Sox nosed out the third-place New York Yankees 5-4.

A scheduled National League twin bill between Boston Braves and the Giants was postponed because of rain while the other American League Clubs were not scheduled.

EIGHT GOOD BOUTS LINED UP FOR ARENA SHOW

Don Mogard to Meet Al Knapp of Oshawa in Main Bout on the Card

Belleville and district "swat" fans are in for a real treat tonight at Hume Arena when, once again, the leather-pushers hold sway. In the main event, a five-rounder, Toronto's Don Mogard will meet Al Knapp of Oshawa, in a heavyweight bout that should provide lots of action.

Local fans have seen Mogard in action. They know he's a heavy belter and a good, clean boxer, not to mention the fact that he moves around like a featherweight.

While stationed at nearby Mt. View Air Station, Mogard won the No. 1 Air Command heavyweight championship. In the "go" on a special "Victory Loan" show in Montreal in the Spring of 1945, he knocked the ears off an American golden gloves champion of the previous year. Mogard has been beaten just once in his fistic career. Oddly enough, that was in his first bout when he dropped a close decision. He has been out of the service less than two months and has taken up residence in Toronto.

As for Knapp, Oshawa boxing coach Murray Swartz says that Knapp is about on a par with "Tiny" Ainsworth and if that's true, Knapp is a long way from being a slouch.

To Meet Goulding

In the semi-final, Trenton's Glen Dafoe, a boy that has been improving every time out, will meet Harry Goulding of Oshawa. Both of these lads are fine scrappers with plenty of moxie all of which makes for a very interesting battle. It's bound to be a rip-snorter from the opening bell until the end.

The preliminaries are all good matches. Belleville's Ron Mansfield will tangle with Grant Howard of Peterborough, in a bout that's bound to be rugged; Carl "Kid" Clapper of Belleville, will trade punches with Danny Dillon of Oshawa; Belleville's John Murray meets "Kid" Amandela of Toronto; "Jumpin" Jerry Downes goes against Oshawa's 'Bud' Henry and 'Fightin" Joe Wilson of Belleville, will try to take the measure of Toronto's "Al" Rowand.

The other bouts will round out the eight fight card. The first bout will get underway promptly at 8.30.

"WILD BILL" LONGSON

Nope, he's not the newest Hollywood sensation, nor the latest matinee idol to flash across the Broadway stage. The good-looking, smiling, young gentleman pictured above is none other than Wild Bill Longson, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, who will be here on Friday night to attempt to teach the villainous Lee Henning the error of his wrestling ways. And Wild Bill is so confident that he can do just that that he has laid his title on the line with the invitation to Lee Henning to "come and get it." Try, that is. Longson is one of the smoothest mat performers in the current circles of pachyderm society. He is the one man that Whipper Billy Watson looks at askance. In fact the Whipper always has another date when Bill is around. And M'sieu Henning isn't the least bit scared of what appears to be in store for him. "Who told you he was champion?" he scowled in his best Cornhusker grimace. "He may be now, but he won't be on Saturday. I've got a trick or two reserved especially for guys who think they are champions. He might be champ at 8 Friday night, but at midnight he'll be just plain chump."

Speaking of referees, it is likely that Ernie Powers will be appointed to handle Friday's big bout. In spite of the importance of the title match, all the battling will not be confined to that bout. The semi-final brings together the rip-snorting Karl Davis, and the smooth, handsome Frankie Taylor of Hollywood. In the third bout Frank Hewitt meets the far-famed Swedish Swivel expert, Olaf Olsen. Matches start at eight-forty-five and patrons are advised to come early.

HANK GREENBERG LIKELY TO WIN HOME RUN CROWN

Critics Ready to Call Him "Washout" After Failure to Hit in Spring

Detroit, Sept. 25. (AP)—Hank Greenburg, 35-year-old Detroit first baseman whose critics were ready to call him a $65,000 "washout" last Spring because of his failure to hit in training camp, was trying on the 1946 major league home run crown "for size" today after smashing three circuit clouts in one day to hoist his season total to 41—three ahead of his nearest rival, Ted Williams.

While the Tigers were sweeping a twin bill from St. Louis Browns, 4 to 3 and 10 to 1, to run their longest winning streak of the year to 10 games and sew up second place in the American League, Greenburg really went on a slugging binge yesterday.

Hard after his third American League home run title in 11 years with the Tigers, Hank has clouted 13 four-baggers since Sept. 1 to come from far back and overtake Williams, who had led the league all season.

"I'm getting 'em with my own bat now, too," Hank said today, explaining that after hitting a dozen homers with a bat that teammates filched from Williams he broke it last week batting Phil Marchildon, Philadelphia Athletics' hurler from Penetanguishene, Ont.

Over the 40 mark in four-baggers for his fourth time in the big leagues, Greenburg promises to finish the year with the second best homer total of his career.

He collected 40 for the first time in 1937, won the homer title with 58 in 1938 and hit 41 in 1940.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

The Batawa Shoemen are gambling all-out on their chances to win the Ontario Intermediate "A" baseball title this year. They are staking their chances on a double-header on their home diamond on Saturday, Sept. 28 with the Niagara Falls entry. The first game is scheduled for 2 p.m. while the second will be played directly after the first. Arrangements have been fully completed for the double-decker and fans who attend the jousts are assured of a full afternoon's baseball entertainment.

• • •

St. Thomas Legion Intermediate A's are still in the thick of the playoff fight, and if Batawa can dispose of the Falls gang, don't be surprised, as this column predicted before to see another clash between "Smoky" Smith and Lefty Jack Garten, who is smokin' 'em over for the St. Thomas crew.

• • •

Don Thomas and Red Townsend will likely do the officiating at the twin bill. Batawa interests are looking for a bumper crowd and after the seasonal exploits on the diamond of the Bill Easton crew they should not be disappointed.

• • •

It was learned from Ottawa today that the reason Umpire Cam Johnson of that city was not slated to officiate at the Belleville Kiwanis - Ottawa Wrightvilles game last Saturday was because of a severe cold. However, he has now recovered and according to Convener Ernie Summers will don the pad and mask with Eddie Schrieder when the two teams clash in the postponed tilt in Megaffin Stadium, Kingston, on Saturday.

The Red Sox "are in" and are watching with more or less interest the battle between the Brooklyn Dodgers and the St. Louis Cardinals in their stretch run for the National League pennant. It is one of those typical last minute pennant drives that have characterised so many races to the wire in the past.

• • •

Many strange things have happened in the month when baseball teams go wacky, the fans go nuts and the players wonder if the end will mean a padded cell. Anything is liable to happen when the pennant wire heaves in sight and teams either crack under the strain or in a spirit of desperation launch winning streaks that even their most rabid rooters can scarcely believe. Both have happened in the long history of baseball.

• • •

That's the exasperating part of about trying to discuss pennant races. They follow no logic, fall into no pattern. Like Topsy, they jes' grow. And that's likely the way it will be this year. You never can tell.

• • •

Arthur Daley, well-known N'Yawk baseball writer recalls some of these hectic instances in pennant races that will live forever in baseball history. He recalls teams suddenly coming up with lengthy winning streaks that overhauled the leaders, and other instances where a single play settled it all.

• • •

One of these occurred in the American League race in 1933. The Washington Senators were battling the Yanks then, leading them 4-2 in the ninth inning of the decisive game of the decisive series.

Lou Gehrig singled. Dixie Walker now a Dodger but then a Yankee singled to advance Lou to second. One of those dreaded Yank rallies was under way apparently. Tony Lazzeri lashed a sizzler to right field. Fearful that Goose Goslin, Senator outfielder, might make the catch, Gehrig hung fast to second, with the impatient Dixie a foot away from the same bag. When the ball bounced safely they both lit out for home, a stride apart.

• • •

According to all the rules of geometry, that ball should have angled into the turf and skidded past to the fence. But it struck the embankment and bounced crazily upwards—right into the Goose's glove. The Goose threw home.

• • •

Gehrig slid in on one side of the plate. Walker slid in on the other. But acrobatic catcher Luke Sewell, tossing off his mask lunged for the speeding ball and then lunged for both base runners tagging them both out with the same motion for one of the most unusual double plays on record. This one slick manoeuvre broke the back of the Yankee challenge and Washington won the pennant.

• • •

The final standing in 1908 in the National League was interesting, Daley recalls the Cubs had a record of 99 won and 55 lost. Tied for second were the Giants and Pirates at 98 and 56. But here's the catch to it: When the Cubs and Pirates met in the final game of the regular campaign, the sturdy Ed Abbaticchio of Pittsburgh stepped up to the plate, with the bases full, and walloped the ball a country mile into the bleachers for an apparent jack-pot home-run.

• • •

"Foul ball!" intoned Umpire Hank O'Day. The Corsairs yelled bloody murder—with the usual result. It stayed foul, although 4 runs in those days loomed larger than Mt. Everest. The Cubs then went on to win the game and the pennant. Had the Abbaticchio hit been ruled fair, those final standings would have found Pittsburgh at 99 and 55, the other two at 98 and 56. On such trifles do pennant races sometimes hinge.

• • •

—But don't go yet. This episode has a curious aftermath. A damage suit against the Cubs was filed that winter by a Chicago bleacher fan, feminine gender. She claimed that the Abbaticchio drive had struck her and injured more than her feelings. On the witness stand and under oath she solemnly swore that she had been sitting in fair territory.

• • •

Off the Sports Record — Or is it?

The two drunks staggered down the main stem on Monday eve after viewing the Belleville Fair. One crashed into the other as they attempted to round two oncoming pedestrians. The stricken one turned and snarled: "Wash whereya goin' willya. Whodye think y'are, Lucky Lott?"

• • •

And now we're away. "Gargangu is here".

Chas. J. Tesreau, Former Hurler Of Giants, Dies

(By The Canadian Press)

Charles M. (Jeff) Tesreau, ace twirler of John McGraw's New York Giants for many years prior to 1919, died last night at Hanover, N.H. after suffering a stroke last Friday while unhitching a boat on a nearby New England lake. An outstanding spitball pitcher, he figured prominently in three World Series before retiring from pro ball to coach at Dartmouth where he remained 27 years.

Playing a part of the 1911 season with the Toronto Leafs, Tesreau, registered 14 victories against nine defeats before being recalled to the New York National League team.

The fastest racers of the Grand Circuit have assembled in Kentucky to compete in the traditional Lexington trots commencing today. Headline entries include Chestertown, Hambletonian winner; Ensign Hanover, leading money winner of 1946, and His Lady.

Lou Klein, Harry Fieldman and Max Lanier, three former major-leaguers who disappeared from the Vera Cruz team of the Mexican loop all had the same story yesterday. The reason for their absence from the Tampico Park was that they did not feel very well.

Yvon Petra of France, winner at Wimbledon, eliminated Tom Falkenburg of Los Angeles in two straight sets yesterday from the singles in second-round competition of the Pacific Southwest tennis tournament at Los Angeles.

Dorothy Kirby of Atlanta, Ga., yesterday rounded out the 36-hole qualifying competition for the National women's amateur golf tournament at Tulsa, Okla., with a two-over par 152, 2 strokes better than Miss Louise Suggs, also of Atlanta.

Death ended the turf career yesterday of Charles F. Kurtsinger, 39, at Louisville, Ky., after a month's illness. He gained fame as a jockey by riding War Admiral to victory in the Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont to take the triple crown in 1937.

Boston Red Sox took over the contracts of seven players of their Louisville farm team in the American Association yesterday for 1947 delivery and sent seven other ball-tossers to the Colonels.

Regina, Sept. 25 (CP)—Saskatchewan Roughriders' unhappy showing in the western senior football circuit this season brought disgust to the booming voice of Tare Rennebohm.

Tare was a Rider in the 20's and to hear him talk it was tough in "them thar days."

"Just before every game each linesman put a dollar in a hat. The money went to the first guy who drew blood."

He was particularly acrimonious referring to Dean Griffing, Calgary Stampeders mentor, who he said "talked a good game."

All Griffing had to do was just utter a few well-chosen phrases and Stampeders rolled over for their opponents—"no blood, no fights, no nuthin'."

However, Tare does not include in his tirade young Tare, Jr. who is currently blocking holes in Riders' line.

But still, it's a shame about modern football.

The sensitive feelings of Nipawinians, residents of that boomtown up at the edge of Saskatchewan's wild north land have been hurt.

Recently they announced plans for a mammouth bonspiel with shiny new autos as prizes, but the entry fee was to be $100.

The news got out to the executive of the Saskatchewan Curling Association and the howl of "professionalism" went up—unofficially, since the executive hadn't a chance to meet.

But unofficially or not, Nipawin's sensibilities had been trampled.

Countered the Carrot River Valley curlers: "....the town is suffering growing pains and is finding it difficult to finance some of its expansion requirements...."

It's tough all over these days—even in boomtowns.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Half-a-trick Hotsy and Plus-value potsy talk a very good game. They speak of fractions in the most familiar terms. It is a pleasure to listen to them. They make the walls sound so good.

Pieces of eight or halves are so unnecessary. They are part of a cumbersome method of counting tricks. There is an easier method of determining how many tricks a hand is expected to take. Much easier.

It is the Horse Sense method of counting high cards and short cards. High cards only for no-trump tricks. High cards and short cards for suit tricks. Simply count one trick for each.

A high card is an ace or a king or a queen. Count one trick for each high card in your hand. That will tell you the total number of tricks your hand expects to take at no-trump.

A short card means each card short of three in any suit. Count one trick for each high card and one trick for each short card in your hand. That tells you how many expected tricks at a suit bid.

Each player is entitled to an average of three cards in any suit. Each card in addition to three in any suit is a long card. Each card less than three in any suit is a short card.

Thus, a suit with three or more cards counts no short cards. A suit with two cards counts one short card. A suit with one card has two short cards. A void suit has three short cards.

Count one trick for each short card in each suit and one trick for each high card in all suits. That tells you the number of tricks to expect in your hand if the contract ends in a suit bid.

Take this hand:

♠A K J 4
♥8 3
♦Q 10 9
♣A 9 7 6

Four aces, kings and queens; one short card in hearts. You have four no-trump tricks. At a suit bid, however, you have five tricks.

Some learned to count in the years BHS (before Horse Sense.)

Hollywood Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Sept. 25 (AP) — Here is the news in the movie capital today:

Behind locked doors, Charlie Chaplin is busily cutting his new picture, hoping to get it ready for release before the end of the year. That would put it in the academy race.

Despite denials, MGM is due for the next big studio-shakeup, and changes will be made from the top down.

The American Legion will give Bob Hope its Legion of Merit award at the San Francisco convention next week. Only 32 citizens have been so honored.

Dec. 13 will be a happy day for the Lauritz Melchiors. That's when they become United States citizens.

Ray Milland is fed up with the "golden earrings." He has an infection under both lobes because of the darn thing.

Roz Russell's first picture with her own company will be a comedy. She will have done four heavy dramas in a row before she starts calling her own shots.

Purely personal: Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Alan Hale for celebrating their 32nd wedding anniversary and showing Hollywood it can be done...the MacDonald Carey child is due Oct. 5....Linda Darnell is so pleased with her new "amber" blond hair she wants to keep it ....Do I detect a note of irony in the announcement that Wally Beery is going to christen a blimp?

In the film palaces....The Cockeyed Miracle (MGM) is the latest Hollywood conception of the afterlife. It shows how the shades of Frank Morgan and his father, Keenan Wynn (that's right, his father) return to straighten out their family troubles. Most of it takes place on one small set, providing a static quality. But it is good fun in a small way.

KEEN RACING DESPITE MUD AT THE FAIR

Teressa B. and Bracken Boy Winners of Races Staged on Tuesday

Despite the inclement weather of the night previous and over a track in spots deep with mud, the directors of the racing committee for the Belleville Fair decided to stage the two scheduled races on Tuesday and although the time was not according to standard of the classes, the heats were keenly contested and the large crowd in the grandstand were treated to some rousing finishes.

In the 2.27 class Teressa B a glim trotter and perfectly handled simply toyed with her field and won in straight heats. Being a trotter the mare had an advantage over the hoppled pacers in the race and being in front most of the time could pick her spots. In the three heats she did not show a semblance of a "bobble" and after the races many went over to the barn to inspect this beautiful specimen of horse flesh. The owner had her nearly "hog" fat but in racing trim and she will take some beating on any man's track.

Mr. B. Weiner of Brandon, Manitoba, who for some years past has made the Belleville Fair a stopping place came in with a number of good ones. He was most co-operative with the committee and placed Laurel Prince in the 2.18 class to fill the race, the mare racing out of her class. Nevertheless she was the winner of the first heat but in the next two Bracken Boy, owned by Stewart of Peterborough had too much foot and could stand the heavy going better and captured the last two heats.

Fine Horse Exhibit

Of great interest to the grandstand was the showing of light harness horses, carriage and roadsters on the track and ring. Never in the history of Belleville fair has there been so many beautiful driving horses. The roadsters were shown once around the track for speed and many in the stands wished they could get behind the lines and take a whirl. For the racing out of her class. Nevertheharness, J. A. McKay of Georgetown won with R. Sadler. Mr. McMillan also of Georgetown won the prize for a team over 15 hands high.

In the class for roadsters over 15 hands I. Cochram of Nestleton won the special with W. H. Lindsay of Campbellcroft second and A. Reycraft of Warkworth third. Mr. Cochram also won the class for the best team under 15 hands. The best team in harness went to Mr. McMillan and in the class for best open pair Mr. McMillan again headed the field. This team can win in any company and it is the intention of Mr. McMillan to take in the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto.

The racing results.

CHAPTER 12

"So-o-o hard on you young wives, I always think," Mrs. Pomeroy crooned sympathetically.

"Yes, we'll have to live on letters," Isabel said, "and Avery is notoriously a bad letter writer!"

That was the thing to say of course. But the brief words overheard had started her thinking of Dennis; this was no time to question her loyalty to him. That was all water over the dam; she had been honest with him, and he with her, and now everything was changed. No good purpose served in going back.

But here at Peggy's, with the young perspiring man, whoever he was, furiously playing the violin, and herself and her satin and her emeralds sunk into a deep chair, she did go back. Back to the day when war came — that bewildering winter Sunday, when the sunshine was so bright in San Francisco's streets, and she and Dennis and the small girls were getting ready for a picnic, and the words Pearl Harbor suddenly came into America's vocabulary never to leave it again.

Dennis had grown so grave; so quiet. The picnic lunch had been packed, they had planned to go over to Sausalito—they had actually gone. But right then and there Dennis had said quietly "They'll need me."

At first he hadn't expected to be gone months and months. He had said he would probably "shuttle" between the South Pacific and the home port; he'd be home every few weeks to take Isabel to a show and see how the girls were coming on. Isabel and his mother had been quite cheerful about it.

But as the dark news came in and came in without ceasing, and the islands were gone, and the costly sieges began—Guadalcanal and Truk, Leyte and Bataan—Dennis had written less of coming home. He was held at the great generating plant; he was working twelve, fourteen hours on end; he could not stop. The men were beyond belief in courage and resistance; a young M. I. T. man with whom he was working was son of one of his old professors; a young Swedish-American was dying of shrapnel wounds; "I've got the job of writing his wife. He would have made a great name for himself, and perhaps done something for all of us," said Dennis's letters.

His letters had naturally stopped, of course, after he received hers asking for a divorce. Isabel, sitting in the deep Italian chair at Peggy's, listening to the violin arpeggios, tried to remember the phrasing of that letter. She had made it simple, honest, brief.

"I want very much to marry Avery Latimer, Dennis. If you object, that's enough. We've grown very fond of each other; I've been lonely, he's never married, and in this upset, lopsided time we need each other."

Terrible days had followed, when she wondered what he would answer. Isabel had felt almost a sensation of flatness, of anticlimax when she had received an epistle as brief as her own. Dennis had written that he would not hold her; he would want his children often with him, if he returned from the South Seas and was in a position to give them a home.

"Why was he fool—fool—fool enough to let me go!" she whispered in her soul. But the last words were just audible, and the woman nearest her turned with a dreamy smile.

"Lovely, isn't it?" she breathed, with a nod toward the musician.

"Lovely," Isabel said.

If Dennis had objected she would be at home with his mother now. Or rather they would all be over in Sausalito; the small girls running wild in country freedom; herself with no greater obligation than to keep them happy. How simple!

Well, here she was, beautiful and beautifully gowned, at Peggy's dinner. Mrs. Avery Latimer in sweeping ivory satin and the stunning emeralds. Mrs. Cope had on her diamonds tonight, and Virginia her famous pearls. As for the countess, she was ablaze; most of her jewels, Sally said, she had redeemed herself in Roman pawnshops, after capturing the heir of the Della Fareses.

"All this feels like a charade," Isabel reflected. "I am going to stop this thinking about Dennis. I am going to stop."

The music moved to its hysterical end, the brown thin oily fingers of the violinist moved with rapid bony precision on the last furious cadenzas; everyone began to drift into the library, drinks were being poured. Most of the men had vanished somewhere to play poker; furiously the women took possession of backgammon boards and card tables. Avery and Sather Cornwall came in, and Avery pleaded that he was dog-tired—after all, he had driven more than four hundred miles that day, and he wanted to go home to bed.

"Avery, did the countess catch you?" Isabel said, in the car.

"Pidgy? Sure. She was lying in wait."

"Make a date with her?"

"I did not. With that little queen cobra!"

"It appears that you're the love of her life."

"She can forget it," said Avery, on a rending yawn.

"That's just what she can't do. Her little homely heart is true."

"Gosh, she is homely," Avery said with a chuckle.

"What's the attraction, then?"

"None, as far as I'm concerned." He yawned again. Nothing more was said of the countess, and presently Avery went comfortably to sleep with his head heavy on Isabel's shoulder.

The home clocks were striking midnight as the Latimers stumbled into the bright lights of the hall; Yeats was solemnly in attendance, and Edna fluttered about their bedroom when they went upstairs. A few moments later Edna and Yeats were dismissed, downstairs lights were out and clocks clicked; another moment or two and Avery was asleep, his evening clothes tumbled about anywhere.

Isabel undressed slowly, musing. The thoughts that had suddenly taken possession of her mind were intensely disturbing, and already she was aware of fear.

She was tired, too. The impulse to take the girls and drive sixty-five miles to see their Jordan grandfather had been a sound one; she had felt closer to her children, closer to her old, free, comfortable self on that drive than she had felt for months. Something in the sharp sweet mountain air of Sutro's Mill had braced her, awakened her; of values she had long ignored she had become keenly conscious again.

Suppose she were to go on this way, thinking of Dennis? Because that, she acknowledged, was the trouble. Yes, she was really in trouble, and it was because she was thinking with a sort of homesick longing of Dennis.

Isabel is awful," she said, under her breath.

She was in Avery Latimer's room; she was his wife in name. But at heart she was still Dennis Hardisty's wife; she had never been anything else. Like a great wave the thought went over her that she might still be waiting, in the old Hardisty house in San Francisco, for Dennis to come back. How very simple and uncomplicated life would be under those circumstances! This was a frightening thought; she drew back from it. Heavens, one mustn't speculate on such impossibilities!

The girls would naturally belong to their father, mother, and grandmother, then. They would never have had to be introduced to a strange man as their "new Daddy," never moved away from their familiar environment. There would have been no Reno episode, when they had seemed so oddly to belong to no place and nobody. They would never have had the presents Avery had sent them from New York; Pussy had had a little clown who rode a bicycle up and down a brilliant chromium spiral; Catherine had had a little mustached French waiter who, when wound up with a key, bowed with a tray and said "Oui, mademoiselle," and both girls had had larger-than-life-size rag dolls with bright yellow string hair. They would never have seen Yelta. How extraordinary to think that they never would have seen Yelta!

"I must stop thinking this silly way," Isabel said, half aloud.

She got into bed, opened her book. The big luxurious room was absolutely silent except for Avery's audible breathing. Her night reading lamp burned softly at her elbow; there was no other light. She had opened one of the big windows, the frilled transparent curtain moved to and fro across the sill in the night breeze; the soft air from the garden was scented with new leaves and lilac and the smell of rich wet earth. A glorious night, with the moon still bright and high. Isabel felt as if there were no such things as sleep.

"What curious things human hearts and souls are," she mused. "A woman can do a thing in one mood that in another would be utterly unthinkable!"

If anyone, for example, had told Isabel Jordan, some ten years earlier, that she would marry a San Francisco engineer, with a good social position and an assured future, it would have seemed a very bright prospect to Isabel.

"Yes, but what would she have thought if the prophet had gone on to say that some six years after that marriage a war would break out, enveloping all the earth, and that the engineer would be among the first to go. After which a more brilliant match would be offered his wife, and after a quick divorce she would find herself married to another man—very rich now, envied by half the women she knew—

Or was she envied, and did it matter much if she was? Money meant surprisingly little to Isabel now. She could have her purse filled with it whenever she wanted it, but she found herself carrying the same bills about, week out and in, with no reason for spending them. There was no smart shop in the city that was not glad to carry an account for young Mrs. Latimer; there was no restaurant whose waiters did not present her with a card to sign, rather than a bill. Some little tipping she did; sometimes she picked up a toy or two for the children. But perfumes, hats, stockings, extravagant writing paper, costume jewelry—she could walk through a very paradise of them at any time she liked, and make her choice, and there was no talk of payment.

"I suppose a man like Dennis is utterly incapable of understanding a woman," Isabel thought, looking off her book. "I suppose if I ever tried to tell him—not that I will, for I'll probably never see him again!—but I suppose if I ever tried to tell him how it all happened, what I was thinking about when I did it, he would think I was the weakest, craziest fool he ever knew. Maybe I am."

Those first weeks in New York; had any other woman, bored with loneliness, and the dull life of a quiet city house with only babies and an old woman for company—had any other woman ever had anything like them? The thrill of them, the glamour that hung over every hour of them!

Looking back, she remembered them scented with flowers and costly perfumes, lighted by the glitter of the greatest city, with the spring sun on the bare trees of the park. Avery coming up to the hotel rooms, throwing off his belted coat and his thick worn gloves, gripping her hands with his hard cold hands, radiating confidence and eagerness.

The round would begin again, the bright streets, the jewel-like shops, the display of handkerchiefs, clips, furs, and his voice in her ear saying, "Because I want to give it to you that's why."

He had given her the mink coat on the day she had half promised to write Dennis. She and Avery had been walking down the Avenue in sharp sweet sunshine that was rapidly melting the piles of dirty snow left by last week's April blizzard. At one window she had paused in admiration; one more arresting window among all the marvelous windows. It showed only a great high-backed chair upon which a coat, gloves, and a handbag were flung. The little sign said, "Oh, Jean's here! That's her lovely coat!"

"Aren't they ingenious?" Isabel had asked, radiant.

"That's squirrel," Avery had observed dispassionately.

"Pretty!"

"Let's go in. My mother might like that coat."

He abruptly opened the door; they went in, Isabel somewhat wondering at his manner. She said to the beautifully groomed middle-aged woman who came forward that they liked the coat in the window.

"Oh no, we don't." Avery had taken the situation in hand. He and the saleswoman wandered away and murmured. Then she disappeared. When she came back the soft, silky generous folds of the mink coat were over her arm.

"This is the coat I had in mind for Madam the moment I saw her," she said simply. Isabel dutifully slipped her arms into it, with smiling eyes that said to Avery, "Don't think for one instant that you're going to get away with this!"

Half an hour later she wore it to the restaurant. She remembered now the looks of strange women, the rustle and brilliance all about, the sudden sharp pleasant stab of hunger, the delicious food. Avery always knew important persons at the adjoining tables; they would come over to chat with him, and he introduced to Isabel and Nancy; critics and actors, newspapermen and story writers. And the coat was on the back of her chair.

But all that, it came to her with a sudden frightening stab of clear vision, all that wasn't enough to make a woman write to a good husband, fighting for his country so far away, that she wanted a divorce. Women did it; many women, in the course of years, had cast off the shackles of a dull marriage for a more brilliant one—but not women like Isabel Jordan.

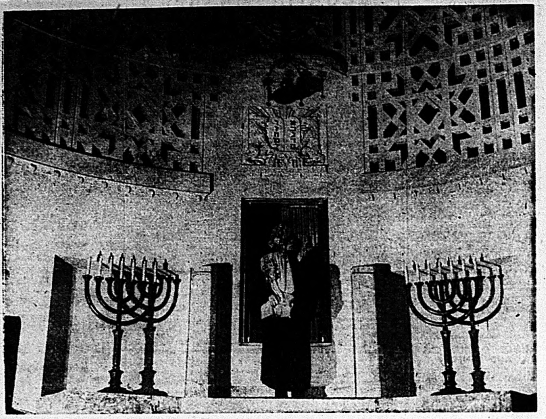
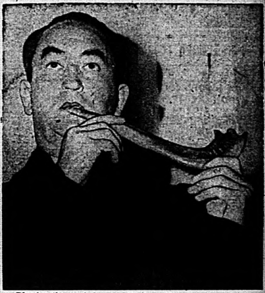
COLORFUL JEWISH NEW YEAR SERVICES BEGIN AT SUNDOWN



Welcoming the year 5707 in the Jewish calendar, special Jewish services will be held in synagogues throughout the Dominion. In Toronto, at Holy Blossom, Rabbi A. L. Feinberg, carrying the Torah from the Ark of the Covenant, hesitates under the eternal light which is to be dedicated. Under this light is a plaque with the Ten Commandments in Hebrew.

Following the reading of the sacred Torah, the Rabbi turns and holds it aloft so that all may see the Law.



Blowing the ram's horn or Shofar will be heard in the Temp summoning Jews to worship, as demonstrated by Rabbi Feinberg Holy Blossom.

Approach of Thanksgiving Holiday Another Headache for State Dept.

By H. DENT HODGSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Sept. 25 (CP)— With Thanksgiving Day—Oct. 14 —approaching the State Department is once more undergoing a mild siege of questioning about what kind of holiday it is and about holidays in general.

This has been going on for years and Dr. E. H. Coleman, Undersecretary of State, is subjected to repeated queries from a confused public as to whether a certain holiday is "statutory" or "legal" and "since when did Easter Monday become a holiday?"

An example of this confusion cropped up recently in an Ottawa court, where Magistrate Glenn Strike remanded a case "until Oct. 14." It was some time before anybody realized that was Thanksgiving Day.

No Change in Decades

Actually, statutory holidays set by the Federal government are quite simple and haven't changed much for decades. They are 10 in number and were incorporated in the statutes of 1934, although all have been on the statute books in various acts much longer.

And there is no difference, Dr. Coleman patiently explains, between a legal holiday and a statutory holiday.

The statutes simply set out holidays which are "to be observed throughout Canada," but the Dominion government has no power to call for general observance of any day except Sunday. This it can enforce under the Lord's Day Act.

Actual observance of any given holiday is up to the provincial governments. Labor relations regarding overtime pay and working on holidays usually are fixed by contractual arrangements between the parties concerned.

Days Named

The days set aside for observance in all provinces are Sundays, New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday, Victoria, Dominion Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, Remembrance Day, Christmas, and the day designated for observance of the King's birthday.

During the war an order-in-council temporarily removed the restrictions on Sundays, Easter Monday, Victoria Day and Remembrance Day, but the order-in-council was cancelled last spring and the full list again is in force.

This year June 10 was proclaimed as the King's birthday because of the proximity of His Majesty's actual birthday—Dec. 14—to Christmas.

None of these statutory holidays is observed in any province unless proclaimed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, who may also proclaim any other day a holiday which is so designated by provincial statute. In addition, any city, town, municipality or other organized district may appoint any day a civic holiday.

Mrs. E. Roosevelt MayBeConsidered As Ambassador

By ALEX H. SINGLETON

Washington, Sept. 25 (AP) — President Truman's freshly stressed emphasis on surprise appointments served to widen the field today in the 'guess who' contest over a new United States Ambassador to Great Britain.

The President's unheralded selection of W. Averell Harriman to step into Henry A. Wallace's post as Secretary of Commerce caught even some of his closest friends way off base. Now, they are trying to first-guess him for a successor to Mr. Harriman in the prized London diplomatic post.

Four factors dominant in the speculations are the possible candidate's pocketbook, political stature, personal health and past record.

Alphabetically, here is how they stack up:

1. Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia, soon to be out of a job due to the state law which prevents an incumbent from succeeding himself.

2. Will Clayton, Undersecretary of State, a successful businessman with personal assets equal to the financial and social obligations involved. Mr. Clayton, however, now holds down a post of such far reaching economic responsibility that it is unlikely he would be sidetracked to Britain.

3. Gen. Mark W. Clark. Speculation here has centred chiefly around the fact that a number of Mr. Truman's recent diplomatic appointments have been from military ranks. But Gen. Clark's tasks in Austria remain of such magnitude that there is doubt he would be transferred to even as important a post as Ambassador to Britain.

4. James Dunn, now Ambassador to Italy. Wealthy enough to maintain the post, he has been mentioned chiefly because of his stand in favor of close Anglo-American co-operation.

5. Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson. His choice could serve the double purpose of filling the post with a Democrat who has gone along with new deal policies, and at the same time ease a strained situation on the country's high tribunal where he and Justice Hugo Black are at odds.

6. Joseph P. Kennedy. Here the speculation stems chiefly from the fact that Mr. Kennedy's choice might prove welcome in the political see-saw territory of the northeast.

7. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. Diplomatic observers with a penchant for long shot odds eyed this possibility on the double grounds that she is familiar with and sympathetic to the problems of England and possesses a politically potent name.

Police Chief Orders Full Investigation

Toronto, Sept. 25 (CP)— Police Chief John Chisholm today ordered a full investigation of charges by Harold Shales, 58-year-old retired industrial sales manager who has a serious heart condition, that he was beaten by three police officers in North Toronto police station Sunday night.

"I cannot comment further on the charge," said the Chief. "Everything will be presented to the police commissioners at their next meeting." The commission is scheduled to meet Friday.

Mr. Shales said he was out for a walk when he was arrested during a conversation with a rookie officer on a drunk charge. He denied he had been drinking.

LAMA TOO SMART FOR DOG

Cornwall, Sept. 25 (CP)—The "Mounties" may always get their man, but here's one case where the R.C.M.P.'s highly-trained dogs can't. Constable J. L. Thompson, handler of R.C.M.P. dog "Duke" has given up an attempt to track down William Lama of nearby Harrison's Corners, wanted on murder charges. Thompson admitted today that Lama, a fugitive for 38 days, was "too smart a woodsman" for the dog, confusing him by sticking to farm trails well-used by other persons.

CAT GETS PRIZE COD

Sandwich, Kent., England, Sept. 25 (CP)—A lucky black cat got away with the heaviest cod in a fishing contest held on the beach in a gale. The 3 1-2-pound fish was caught by Walter Jones of Folkestone who laid it on the promenade. When he looked again the fish had disappeared. Later, a much lighter cod and a heavier cat were discovered under the pier.

Should Adopt New Approach To Russia-Eden

London, Sept. 25 (CP)— Anthony Eden says the United States and Great Britain should adopt a "new spirit and a new approach" to Russia to allay an "imminent threat of war."

"It is for the governments to judge how such a new approach could be undertaken," the Conservative party leader and wartime Foreign Secretary told an audience at suburban Watford last night.

"Too often suspicions, however groundless at the start, harden into facts," he said. "A positive effort to dissipate these suspicions is required from the great powers. They cannot be content with the day-to-day wrangles of the Paris peace conference and the security council."

Mr. Eden declared "vehemence and antagonism" had grown week by week to produce a "profoundly disquieting" situation, but added he saw no reason why Communism and Capitalism "should not live together in peace if both will....not back their fancies in every other land."

Taking exception to Henry A. Wallace's recent criticism of "British Imperialism," Mr. Eden insisted the British Commonwealth was a "family of free nations."

He echoed Winston Churchill's call for a United States of Europe.

Retail Milk Price Boost to Follow Subsidy Abolition

Will Pay Two to Three Cents Qt. More for Milk Sept. 30

Ottawa, Sept. 26—(CP)—Comment from officials across Canada on abolition of the federal subsidy paid milk producers today made it clear that Canadians will pay from two to three cents a quart more for their milk after Sept. 30.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced last night that cabinet reconsideration of the milk question had resulted in a final decision to end the subsidy of 55 cents a hundred pounds and return "full jurisdiction" to "established and experienced" provincial milk boards.

Mr. King also announced the subsidy of 23 cents a hundred pounds on milk used to manufacture concentrated milk products also will be discontinued Sept. 30 but added that the Prices Board will authorize an equivalent price increase for evaporated milk, condensed milk and milk powder.

Increase General

Last May, the government discontinued its consumer subsidy on milk and increases of two cents a quart were general throughout the country. The produced subsidy is equal to approximately 1½ cents a quart, and R. C. Smellie of Ottawa, president of the National Dairy Council of Canada, said the latest government action would result in increases of "at least" two cents.

Mr. King said the cabinet had reconsidered the matter following a resolution passed by the Commons last Aug. 27 asking a review of subsidy policy to see if producers could not be ensured of an "adequate return" without increasing consumer prices.

If the government had any "real assurance that continuation of the subsidy would achieve the objectives endorsed by the House, it might be justified in continuing the subsidy for a limted time," Mr. King's statement said.

Reactions Noted

"In fact, however, there have been strong indications that, even if the subsidy were continued, milk producers would demand, and at least several of the provincial milk boards would be prepared to authorize, significant increases in the price of milk over and above the subsidy."

The announcement brought these reactions:—

In Nova Scotia, a public utilities board spokesman said the board had already authorized an increase of two cents a quart, to be effective on the date the federal subsidy ended. With milk selling at 13 cents in most parts of the province, consumers will pay 15 cents.

C. M. Meek, chairman of the milk board of Ontario now in session in Toronto, said the board had been waiting for Mr. King's announcement and would consider the price question at a meeting today. One authorative source predicted a three-cent increase in Ontario retail prices.

Meanwhile, the Toronto Board of Control authorized Mayor R. H. Saunders to institute legal proceedings before an Ontario Supreme Court Judge for an order to block any increase in consumer milk prices.

Saskatchewan's agricultural minister, I. C. Nollet, said in Regina the announcement would have "serious repercussions." If the Federal Cabinet knew the real situation it would reconsider again.

R. H. M. Bailey, president of the Alberta Milk Producers' Association, said producers already had applied for an increase of 80 cents a hundred pounds "based on actual increased costs."

DREW WANTS CONFERENCE

Toronto, Sept. 26 (CP)—Premier Drew of Ontario today made public a formal appeal to Prime Minister King to reconvene the Dominion-Provincial Conference at the earliest opportunity

The Premier issued a statement which included the text of a letter to Mr. King Sept. 7 asking him to fix a date for such a meeting.

"On Sept. 14 a letter was received from Mr. King's secretary stating that Mr. King wished to have my request considered by the full Dominion Cabinet," the statement said. "I have not yet received his answer."

$1,085,456 ESTATE

Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Sept. 26—(AP) — The late President Franklin D. Roosevelt left a net estate before taxes of $1,085,456, according to a tax appraisal filed today with the county surrogate by Henry Hackett, an executor of the estate.

Helicopter Taxi Service Approved For Cleveland

Washington, Sept. 26 — (AP)—The helicopter, awkward aground but versatile as a jeep in flight, literally jumped to fame in Newfoundland last weekend.

And now the United States government has given its okay to a helicopter taxi service in Cleveland.

The helicopted's war-time role was small compared to that of the conventional airplane, but it filled in gaps that a fixed-wing craft couldn't touch. It went into "inaccessible" places to rescue downed fliers.

Operating from Goose Bay, Labrador, in April, 1945, a Coast Guard Sikorsky R-4 model (the original type accepted by the United States Army), brought out 11 Canadian airmen who faced death from exposure and injuries.

The airlines, particularly those operating over water and difficult terrain, are considering the helicopter as regular equipment at search and rescue bases.

One large bus line has ordered helicopters in the hope of establishing a shuttle service, and the Civil Aeronautics Board—which yesterday approved the Cleveland project — hase numerous other applications for a variety of passenger and cargo services.

Some department stores have applied for permission to use helicopters in their own delivery service. The Bureau of Fisheries will use them for locating schools of fish. Canadian prospectors are trying them for covering rough terrain.

The helicopter with its rotating wings can fly straight up or down, forward, sidewise or backward and at speeds ranging from one to 100 miles an hour.

It has some disadvantages. For one thing it is expensive. United Aircraft sells a four - passenger model for $48,500.

FLIGHT UP BAY

Kapuskasing, Sept. 26 (CP)—An Ontario government survey party planned to leave here today for Toronto after making an 11-hour 1,500-mile flight yesterday from the provincial capital up the west coast of James Bay. Hon. W. G. Thompson, Minister of Lands and Forests, who was a member of the party, said the purpose of the flight was to continue a survey of Northern resources which began some time ago with a trip from the lakehead into the Patricia district.

Chief feature of yesterdays flight was the sight of thousands of ducks and geese seen around James Bay.

CERTAIN DISEASES RESPOND

Winnipeg, Sept. 26 —(CP)—Certain infectious diseases respond effectively to penicillin and streptomycin treatment, Dr. J. A. Dauphinee, Toronto, yesterday told a convention of the Manitoba Medical Association here.

Streptyomycin, a fairly new drug, is not yet generally available to the profession although an increase in supply was anticipated, he said. The use of the newer drug will be effective in the treatment of certain infections which will not respond pond effectively to pennicillin

FORCIBLE ENTRY CHARGED AGAINST V.H.L. LEADER

F. E. Hanratty And Ottawa Barrister Will Appear in Court On October 4th

Ottawa, Sept. 26 — (CP)—First legal action against the Veterans' Housing League came today when F. E. Hanratty, head of the league, and George Bleakney, Ottawa barrister, were charged jointly in Magistrate's court with forcible entry and obstructing police. The case was adjourned to Oct. 4.

Hanratty did not appear in court and Bleakney, legal adviser to the V.H.L., was released on his own recognizance, on condition he committed no illegal acts.

Bleakney appeared on behalf of himself and Hanratty, and asked permission to reserve decision on whether he elected to be tried by magistrate or by jury. This was granted by Magistrate Glenn Strike.

The forcible entry charges were laid in connection with the occupation of the W.R.C.N.S. barracks at H.M.C.S. Carleton and the former C.W.A.C. barracks at Lansdowne Park last Tuesday night by members of the league. The obstruction charges were in connection with interference with three R.C.M.P. officers sent to protect government property at the naval barracks.

The Veterans' League were informed yesterday that the order had been given to supply electricity to the barracks block at Lansdowne Park which lacked light, heat or cooking facilities when taken over by the veterans. A naval officer at the H.M.C.S. Carleton said he was unaware of navy plans to serve eviction notices on the people occupying the barracks there.

At the Dow's Lake station an R.C.M.P. guard permitted only persons living in the barracks to enter the station. The barrier which was broken Tuesday during the struggle for possession of the former C.W.A.C. barracks was last night replaced by a working party of naval personnel.

Agriculture Ministed Gardiner last night said the cabinet had discussed the seizure of government property by veterans but no immediate decision had been reached.

Gazelle Boy Story Interesting But Exaggerated

Jerusalem, Sept. 26 — (AP) — Gazelle boys — they eat grass, run 50 miles an hour and speak only the language of their foster parents — are enlivening this year's silly, season in the Middle East.

First reported in trans-Jordan six weeks ago, the Gazelle boys now number five. Each story is a little better than the last one.

The original report was that three hunters seeking the gazelle — an antelope with large, friendly eyes — had found a 14-year-old boy living with a herd. They gave chase in a car going 50 miles an hour, captured the boy and took him to a hospital where he would eat nothing but grass and mumbled inarticulately. The story was told in Palestine and trans-Jordan bars and found its way into print.

Later it was learned the boy was the son of a Bedouin family living in the neighborhood and was mentally deficient. He is now in a hospital. He doesn't eat grass.

Who is Going to Pay for Thousands Rose-Colored Bras for French Wacs?

Frankfurt, Germany, Sept. 26 (AP)—The French supply officer tossed off his glass of Rhine wine, looked out the window and mused: "Would your 'WAC' corps be interested in a couple of dozen thousand of rose-colored brassieres?"

No, we said, the Women's Army Corps supply officers probably would not be interested at all.

"That's too bad," the French officer said "This, I think, is a good buy."

It seems the French "WACs," numbering about 2,000 or so in occupied Germany, decided they should be issued blue brassieres and somebody at Baden Baden, French headquarters, issued an order to that effect.

At Marseille, another quartermaster officer, pondering about blue brassiers, decided they were nuts up there in Baden Baden and put an order in for rose-colored brassieres, thousands of them.

At Lyon, a factory went to work turning out thousands of rose-colored brassiers.

In Paris, the constitunet assembly abolished the French Women's Army Corps.

Now, the quartermaster at Marseille has to explain why he ordered several dozen thousand rose-colored brassieres.

The quartermaster at Baden Baden san say "keep me out of it, because I said blue ones."

The factory at Lyon wants to know who is going to pay for the order.

Greeks Complete Plan For Welcoming King Back to His Throne

Athens, Sept. 26 — (AP)—The Greek government today completed its plans for welcoming King Geoge II back to his throne despite fierce border fighting and civil strife in northern Greece which Premier Constantin Tsaldaris says has reached the magnitude of war.

Athens will close down completely Saturday morning for the king's reception and police announced that all permits for carrying arms had been suspended.

Police said all persons lining the route of the parade marking the monarch's return to Greece after five years of exile would be liable to search. All persons were forbidden to watch the parade from rooftops or terraces for a depth of about 100 yards from the route of march.

The king was to arrive at an airport on the Peloponnesus and then board a destroyer for the journey to Piraeus, the port of Athens.

In London a source close to the king, summoned home by a recent plebiscite said the monarch's return was expected to stabilize the tense situation in Greece. He was expected to depart for Greece either today or tomorrow.

Greek army corps, meanwhile, were conducting virtual military operations to put down the rebellious opposition in Tressaly and Macedonia, the major trouble spots, but although an estimated 30,000 British troops were dispersed in those areas there was no indication that they were involved in the fighting.

Informed British sources in Athens said the British forces were being reorganized, and that one of the two divisions in the region was being withdrawn from Greece. The headquarters of Maj.-Gen. Kenneth Noel Crawford, commander of British troops in Greece, declined comment on a statement by a foreign office spokesman that the British forces would be used "in the last resort."

COUNCIL TO MEET TO SPEED WORK OF DELEGATES

Meeting Called Because of Deadlock Over Approving Draft Treaty With Finland

By RELMAN MORIN

Paris, Sept. 26 (AP)—A plenary session of the peace conference was called for tonight to consider proposals of the four-power foreign ministers council to speed the work of the delegates.

The secretariat general called the session on a notice of less than five hours, apparently because of a deadlock over the proposed agenda for approving the treaty draft with Finland, first of the five European peace treaty drafts to be completed after two months of conference.

In the military commission, meanwhile, the delegates decided to order Bulgaria to disband her armed forces with the exception of a "land army" including frontier troops in a total strength of 55,000 men.

Other commissions now are in the final stages of their work, but the ticklish problem of Trisete still confronts the conferees.

The commission studying Trieste, described as having "more government per square inch than any place in the world," was stalled today, as it has been for weeks, on the vital questions of boundary lines and gubernatorial powers in the new free state of Trieste.

Eight hours of debate on these issues yesterday brought the opposing points of view no closer to agreement than they were months ago.

Outstanding in yesterday's long day of commission work on the other treaties—for Bulgaria, Hungary, Italy and Romania—was the decision by the Italian Economic Commission to adopt the principle of accepting 75 per cent compensation for war damage suffered in Italy by business firms and citizens of victor nations.

Pass Counterfeit Bills at Brantford

Brantford, Sept. 26 —(CP)—Numerous counterfeit $5 have been circulating in Brantford the last few days, police said today.

All Brantford banks have received some of the imitation money, and one bank reported having received ten of the bills, said to be hard to detect from good notes.

It was reported here that similar imitation bills had been passed in Windsor and in Kitchener.

Most of the false money has a serial number starting L-C — 3815 with three other numerals following. An occasional one has the first four numerals 3816.

The counterfeit bills are made of slightly stiffer paper than the genuine and the shading differs slightly.

Most noticeable feature— but one which would easily escape detection of the general public—is a slight fault in the King's left eye, on the face of the false bill.

JUDGMENT RESERVED

Toronto, Sept. 26 —(CP)—Ontario Court of Appeal today reserved judgment on the Crown's appeal for life sentence for four Toronto youths convicted of manslaughter in the slaying of Meyer Tobias, 53, fatally shot during a holdup Dec. 26 of his North Toronto clothing store.

GOVT. REJECTS DEMANDS OF STRIKING FARMERS

Gardiner Says No "Fact-Finding" Board Will be Established

Ottawa, Sept. 26 (CP)—Agriculture Minister Gardiner made public last night the government's rejection of the demands of striking Alberta and Saskatchewan farmers for a "fact-finding" board to determine "parity prices" for farm products.

Instead in a letter to strike leaders, he invited them to place their case before the agricultural Prices Support Board for "consideration, analysis and presentation to the government." The board had authority "to do everything and more than what your request asks for."

Mr. Gardiner made the letter public at a press conference at which he also made these additional announcements:-

1. Payments totalling an estimated $11,000,000 will be made to farmers in 1,526 Prarie Province townships under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for crop failures this year.

2. Contracts have been concluded for record shipments of Canadian apples, other fruit, beans and eggs to Britain.

Mr. Gardiner's letter was addressed to C. J. Stimpfle, President of the Alberta Farmers' Union, and F. T. Appleby, President of the askatchewan section of United Farmers of Canada.

It said the government was of the opinion Mr. Stimpfle and Mr. Appleby, representing 50,000 farmers who have refused to deliver their products, should place their views "before the board which is already provided rather than ask the government to duplicate the present machinery."

Air Minister Opens Hospital At Sunnybrook

Toronto, Sept. 26 — (CP)—Air Minister Gibson today officially opened the still incompleted Sunnybrook Military Hospital as 96 patients entered the building which eventually will accommodate some 1,450. First patient to enter the building was Ray Frank Scott of nearby Etobicoke, 25-year-old veteran of Dieppe who attended "my own funeral" after the 1942 raid.

Mr. Gibson, Lieutenant Governor Albert Matthews and Premier Drew of Ontario and civic officials met the 14 stretcher and 82 walking cases who entered this morning. Present plans call for the admission of some 150 patients before the end of this month. It is expected the $14,000,000 building will be ready some time next year for its full complement of 1,450.

Scott related that he not only attended his own funeral but fired six shots over what was supposed to be his grave. One of 36 members of the 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Canada to get back from Dieppe right after the raid, Scott said the funeral incident occurred in England.

NOT GUILTY

Windsor, Sept. 26 — (CP) — An Ontario Supreme Gourt jury last night returned a verdict of not guilty in charges of attempted jailbreak with violence against John Zero and Morley Card. The jury deliberated nearly six hours before returning a verdict.

LABOR ENDORSES RESOLUTION BASED ON BIG 3 UNIT

TCL Wants Policies That Will Completely Destroy Fascism And Colonial Oppression

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Windsor, Sept. 26 — (CP) — The Trades and Labor Congress convention today endorsed a foreign policy resolution based on Big Three unity.

The resolution demanded the government "champion policies that will completely destroy the last remnants of Fascism and colonial oppression; support the inalienable right of all people and nations to independence and self-determination; oppose every and all efforts to independence and self-determination; oppose every and all efforts to again divide the world into hostile blocks; strive relentlessly to retain the unity of the Big Three for such unity is indispensable to lasting peace and withhold economic and political support from governments who seek to perpetuate feudal and colonial oppression."

The resolution asked also for speedy improvement in relations with Allied and other democratic countries with the establishment of trade relations.

The resolution expressed alarm over "the dangerous, decisive and war-menacing trend which is apparent at the Paris peace conference."

It asked for shaping of Canada's foreign policy for the "democratic solution of all outstanding problems on the basis of the Atlantic Charter and the agreements arrived at at Yalta, Teheran and Potsdam by the Big Three."

In Minds of Veterans

Mel. Doig, Thorold, said unless Big Three unity was maintained all else would be lost. "That is the issue burned into my mind and the mind of every overseas man," he said.

The convention went on record favoring legislation requiring two weeks vacation with pay. It also asked provincial governments to take part in the federal physical fitness program.

Dealing with income tax the convention asked exemption of $1,000 for single persons and $2,400 for married persons with $400 for each child and payment of full family allowances to all parents regardless of income.

The delegates supported a resolution which said "the present cost of living index was not a true and accurate index of the cost of living for Canadian workers" and asked the Congress set up committees in various centres to compile an index which could be used in negotiating wage contracts. The convention also asked revision of the government index.

Another resolution demanded continuation of wartime planning for "the fullest use and development of our industries and natural resources, the nationalization of public utilities that are of a national character, such as railroads, telegraphs and banks and the public ownership and operation, either provincially or civic, of all other public utilites that are of a provincial or municipal character." It also asked prosecution of cartels and monopolies which tended to restrict production and maintain high prices.

U.S. Army Takes One-Fourth of All Meat from Federally Inspected Plants

Washington, Sept. 26 — (AP)—The United States Army slapped a claim today on one-fourth of all meat turned out by federally-inspected slaughterers as the pre-election storm over bare American butcher counters mounted in intensity.

With the administration split over the issue of keeping price lids on the rapidly vanishing commodity and Congressional elections 40 days off, top democratic party chiefs assembled here for a huddle. But the army showed no disposition to await possible action by any other branch of the government.

Reporting that its "visible supply of meat is less than a month's requirement," the army last night served priority papers on all packers operating under federal inspection ordering them to set aside 25 per cent of their total output for the services and veterans' hospitals.

The political storm broke in earnest yesterday after House of Representatives democratic leader John McCormack of Massachusetts demanded in a telegram to price chief Paul Porter that the Office of Price Administration suspend ceilings over meat and other scarce food products.

Agriculture Secretary Anderson, who earlier said he considered present price ceilings high enough to give farmers a fair return on their meat, promised in a statement last night that he will act promptly on any formal petition to remove controls.

"But," he added, "if one of the requirements for decontrol is a showing that the commodity is not in short supply, such a finding might be difficult to justify, as the present outcry for more meat would indicate."

Under the Price Control law, only O.P.A. advisory committees may petition for decontrol — a step now being arranged by chairman Roscoe I. Haynie of the beef industry committee.

"The only solution to the present meat shortages," Mr. Haynie said, "is complete and permanent decontrol."

7 Strikers Charged With Assault After Attack on Boat

Heavy Barrage of Rocks Thrown at Non-Strikers

Hamilton, Sept. 26 —(CP)—Charged with intimidation and assault following a clash Wednesday night between striking and non-striking steelworkers, seven men today were remanded one week on bail of two sureties each.

Police said the accused, members of the crew of the picket boat Whisper of the United Steelworkers of America (C.I.O.) were Benjamin Stanga, Lafayett Young, Andrew Pzyluta, Steven Shewchuk, James Hatch, Dominic Consentino and Peter Fitowski. Also adjourned a week with similar bail was the case of Andrew Rudysh of Lachine, Que., described as a picketer and charged with assault.

A running battle broke out, police said, when a company boat tried to land 70 workers at Burlington docks after running a heavy barrage of rocks said to have been thrown from the Whisper. Three non - striking employees of the Steel Company of Canada suffered injuries.

Harbor police later impounded the Whisper for the second time.

At about the same time, police said, union pickets swarmed onto Wellington Street docks where company men had started to unload a scow. The pickets threw a piece of machinery valued at $400 into the water and then turned the scow adrift, police said.

As the wages-hours strike here and in Sault Ste. Marie, and Sydney, N.S., neared the end of its 10th week, the Steel Company of Canada announced that its Swansea works in the suburbs of Toronto would suspend operations Friday night. Lack of steel, the company said, forced the lay-off of the plant's 250 workers. The Swansea works manufactures screws and bolts.

Duke of Windsor Planning to Take Wife to England

Paris, Sept.26 —(AP)— The Duke of Windsor is planning to take his wife to Britain next month for the first time since he renounced his throne to marry her 10 years ago, his secretary disclosed today.

The secretary said she did not know whether the Duke and his American-born Duchess had any plans to stay in Britain permanently, or whether they would stay at Fort Belvedere, the Duke's former home near Sunningdale, Berkshire, England, during their first visit.

In London a source close to the Duke said the couple had accepted the invitation from Lord Dudley to stay at the Peer's home in Sunningdale. Asked to comment on reports that the Duke planned to remain in England permanently, this informant replied "that can be denied—and I hope you do."

RE-ENDORSATION C.C.F. AS ARM OF LABOR DELAYED

Decision on Political Action Resolution Not Expected for Some Time

By GEORGE RONALD
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 26. (CP)—After three more hours of bitter debate the sixth regular convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor was adjourned at noon today still at a stalemate on the issue of re-endorsation of the C.C.F. as the "political arm of labor".

The morning debate followed a two-hour session yesterday. Some 20 delegates already have spoken on the controversial question and at least ten more have asked President A. R. Mosher for that privilege. Decision on the political action resolution is not expected until late this afternoon.

Robert H. Carlin,. C.C.F member of the Ontario Legislature for Sudbury and a mine, mill and smelter workers' delegate, said he believed the day of independent political action by labor was almost over.

"I am a member of the Socialist Party, a member of the C.C.F, and I also hold office in my union. I always found my party affiliation has not hurt me but helped me. I hope we will reaffirm the Congress policy and put the stamp of approval on the C.C.F.

Elroy Robson, Ontario Federation of Labor, countered that "everything in the political action program was adopted from resolutions endorsed by the C.C.L. as a whole." He appealed for endorsation of "the democratic action of this convention in years gone by" and for direction "to go along with the P.A.C. and the C.C.F."

Heath Convicted On Murder Charge, Sentenced to Death

London, Sept. 26 —(AP)—Neville George Clevely Heath, 29, was convicted today of the murder of Mrs. Margery Gardner, 33-year-old film extra, and sentenced to death.

The verdict was returned after an hour's deliberation by a jury of 10 men and two women.

Counsel for the handsome flier had pleaded that he be found "guilty but insane" in the sadistic slaying.

Heath, a former R.A.F. pilot, also was charged with the murder of Doreen Marshall, whose horribly mutilated body was found near a South Coast resort within two weeks of the Gardner slaying. The verdict made a second trial unnecessary.

Asked after announcement of the verdict whether he had anything to say, Heath replied:

"Nothing."

Two prison doctors testified today against the defence contention that Heath was morally insane. Both said the 29-year-old flier was not insane, but described him as a psychopathic personality.

One of the doctors said Heath was "a person who does what he feels like doing at the moment, without any thought of the consequences. That is not a disease of the mind; it is a matter of abnormal character.

A psyciatrist summoned by the defence testified yesterday that Heath was "certifiable as a moral defective."

Senior Defence Counsel J. D. Casswell said "there is no one who would think for one moment that Heath is the sort of man who could possibly be left at large," but added that "the life led by young airmen was just the sort that might bring to the surface a defect of the reason that had been hidden hitherto."

HONEY LOVING BEAR DESTROYS 30 HIVES

A honey shortage may result in the Selby district, north of Napanee, this fall if a 300-pound bear with an exceptionally sweet tooth is not disposed of in the near future.

Wednesday night the marauding bruin destroyed 30 hives of bees on the farm of Melburne Armstrong, half of his total stock, and disappeared before it could be caught or shot.

Archie Martin, another farmer residing in the district saw the bear when he was plowing, but the wily bruin kept out of gunshot range and finally disappeared.

DISPLAY BY CAMERA CLUB INTERESTING

The photo display of the Belleville Camera Club at Pauley's Drug Store is attracting considerable attention from passersby. The photos are submitted by members of the local club, who have a definite interest in the more serious type of photography. Members of the club whose pictures are in the exhibit include H. C. Aitken, N. F. Tonkin, H. Frink and Dorothy Howard.

Canadian landscape, both summer and winter, are included in the display, while two of the photos have a definite local interest. Two others are interesting studies of English architecture, one a Welsh cottage and the other an English street scene. The display will be in the window for one week.

More Black Ducks Than Usual Shot By Hunters

Some fine bags of ducks shot down in near city haunts yesterday were reported by a number of opening-season nimrods, while others arrived home with smaller amounts.

Jack Williamson and a friend, of Dundas Street, hunting in the Massassaga marshes, brought home thirteen blacks and three teal. Three other hunters bagged thirty among them.

Black duck predominance at the opening of the season is causing some surprise to veteran hunters. Usually the teal outnumbers the black by a large percentage.

Hunting conditions thus far have been almost perfect while the water is said to be much lower than in former years leaving more mud flats exposed.

One hunter shot down a large black duck almost overhead. It plopped down into the marsh some twenty-five feet away. After a half-hour search the curious nimrod saw some feathers sticking out of the mud. It was his duck which had almost buried itself in the soft muck. Now he is beginning to wonder if the sport of duck-hunting comes under the head of shooting or mining.

Scientists Ready ForShowdownVote

By FRANCIS W. CARPENTER

Lake Success, N. Y., Sept. 26 —(AP)— Scientists of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission were ready for a showdown vote today on their report on atomic energy controls, with Russia holding the key to a unanimous vote.

The scientific and technical committee of the commission, made up of scientists from each of the 12 countries on the commission, was summoned to meet in secret session at the United Nations headquarters here at 3 P. M., E. D. T. Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton is the Canadian representative.

Members of the committee were represented as agreed that some final action must be taken on the report, which was adopted after 18 meetings, mostly in waiting the formal approval of Russia for about three weeks.

The report was said to deal with broad measures of control needed to harness effectively atomic energy.

Meanwhile, the U. N. Security Council, resting after strenuous battles over membership, the Ukrainian-Greek case and the Russian demand for information on troop dispositions, turned to the comparatively simple matter of its report to the General Assembly, which meets in New York City Oct. 23. The council scheduled a closed meeting for 10.30 A. M., E. D. T., in United Nations offices in downtown Manhattan.

Dealing with the food contracts, Mr. Gardiner said they included the following:-

A total of 2,252,000 boxes of British Columbia apples; 300,000 barrels, containing approximately three boxes each, of Nova Scotia apples, plus any further quantity of Nova Scotia apples available; 250,000 cases of canned apples to be packed and shipped from Nova Scotia; 80,000 pounds of evaporated apples from British Columbia; 374,000 bushels of dried white and yellow whole beans from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario and possibly Quebec; 560,000 bushels of dried white beans from Ontario; and 2,500 tons of raspberry pulp and 500 tons of green gage pulp, both from British Columbia.

The minister said no contract had been signed for Ontario apples, but that province had agreed to ship 10,000 barrels and Britain had accepted that quantity. No contract had been completed for tomatoes because Canada was not sure whether she could ship them.

Dealing woith eggs, he said he could not give quantities but indicated the price represented an increase of one cent a dozen for spring eggs and two cents a dozen for fall eggs.

Police to File Murder Charge

Bryan, O., Sept. 26 —(AP)— Sheriff Norman A. Barnes said he would file a murder charge against a Bryan youth who confessed "an urge to kill" led him to choke and stab to death Emily Abernathy, 30, city librarian, in the library basement here last Thursday night.

Barnes reported that the youth, James Robert Engle, 21, a former Bryan High School student and son of an auto supply store manager, signed a confession last night that he "just wanted to kill" the attractive blond librarian to satisfy an urge to kill" he first got in England as a United States sailor.

Miss Abernathy's body was found lying between blood-spattered book shelves, punched with 23 stab wounds. She was not raped.

Engle gave Charles G. Stahl, Williams county prosecutor, a large-bladed penknife during the confession and identified it as the weapon used, Mr. Stahl reported.

"I stabbed her 25 times or more— Idon't really know how many times," Mr. Stahl said the the confession stated.

After leaving the library, Engle's statement said, he washed the blood from his hands and clothing at a pump in a park. He stopped at a service station on his way back to town, 'looked at myself in a mirror there and saw that I looked like a mad dog."

Horseshoe Tossers Stage Fine Show At Belleville Fair

Belleville horseshoe tossers won the major prizes in the Horseshoe Pitching Tournament, said to be one of the best in years, at the exhibition on Wednesday afternoon.

The tournament attracted fifty entries which included the cream of the district players, and which resulted in some exciting finishes before the winners were eventually decided.

Ed. Gartley and G. Moore, of Belleville won the doubles title eliminating Arthur Morden, Bloomfield, and Art Stewart, after a close match.

Alex. Naphan, Belleville, won the singles title with Arthur Morden in second place and Jack Bell, Belleville, finishing a close third.

The tournament was one of the biggest ever held here and was run off smoothly under the supervision of William Leslie.

ALL STREET CARS IN PITTSBURGH AT A STANDSTILL

Operators Join in Sympathy Strike With Employees of Light Company

Pittsburgh, Sept. 26 — (AP)— The Pittsburgh Railway Company announced that all street car transportation service had stopped at 4 a.m. (E.S.T.) today as street car operators joined in a sympathy strike with 3,500 employees of the Duquesne Light Company who walked out Tuesday.

The walkout of the street car workers left thousands of early morning riders without transportation. Company officials said they did not know immediately whether the work stoppage also would affect the company's buses.

Normally the railway company serves about 1,000,000 riders in the Pittsburgh area with 950 cars.

Meanwhile the steel capital's power strike continued deadlocked as labor leaders threw their support behind union members in their fight against an injunction forbidding the walkout of the light company employees.

The strike had made more than 36,500 idle — 3,500 workers of the struck Duquesne Light Company, 8,000 sympathy strikers at the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp. and the Westinghouse Electric Corporation, and over 25,000 others in scattered mills, mines, offices and shops.

Asked to Return

In a dramatic development, union president George L. Mueller, who on Tuesday had been given a year in jail for contempt of court came before a three-man Board of the Alleghany County Court, apologized for having called the court's temporary anti-strike injunction "just a scrap of paper," and was given his freedom for a few hours to attend a meeting of the union.

Mr. Mueller promised the court he would ask the 3,200 members of the Independent Association of Employees of the Duquesne Light Company to accept a new company offer, end their strike and return to work. The new office, the company said, including a five per cent pay raise, which would have increased the average base pay from $1.18 to $1.24 an hour. The union demands 20 percent, or a raise of $1.41 an hour.

But the union, at the meeting held in Carnegie Hall, voted 1,771 to 402 against considering any company offer until the anti-strike injunction is lifted.

Meanwhile, other union forces rallied on a broad front to join in the anti-injunction fight and several meetings were called for today to discuss sympathy action.

The 'Rocket' Was of Doleful Glance He Lost the Race-And Then His Pants

Ex-Mayor Harry Rollins, dubbed "Rocket Rollins" prior to his now historic but close defeat in the 100-yard dash by Mayor Frank Follwell on Tuesday night, nearly had another nickname wished on him after the race was over.

The new name could have been "Pantless."

For some mischievous person, either accidentally, maliciously or with tongue in cheek, pilfered the pantaloons of the galloping ex-mayor, while he was valiantly trying to prove through the medium of his speed afoot, that youth had not entirely departed.

It seems that the foot-racing gladiators had been assigned dressing rooms in the building housing the headquarters of the exhibition staff. There they quietly garbed themselves in the habiliments of track battle, and sallied forth with their respective retinues to the scene of conflict.

It also appears that the Rocket's aide-de-camp neglected to place the boss's nether-limb garb in the proper place, and to lock the door. In any event, by the time the shouting and the tumult had ceased and the warriors returned to their dressing rooms, the Rollins' pantaloons were absent without leave.

However, a search of the immediate neighborhood was instituted and some lengthy time passed before any success was reported. In fact, the ex-mayor was seriously considering the loan of Piper Jamie Clark's extra set of kilts, for after all, one cannot parade through exhibition crowds clad only in a jacket and a pair of blue scanties, when the missing trousers were reported found.

They apparently didn't fit the temporary owner, for they were discovered near a fence in the vicinity of the Bowling Club's clubhouse.

Now all is peace again in the Rollins' household, for the man of the house still has his two pairs of trousers.

Searching Team Plunges Deeper Into China's Wilds

Chengtu, China, Sept. 26 (AP) —A United States army search team plunged deeper into China's wild and mountainous far west today seeking long-lost American airmen feared captives of the fierce slave-holding Lolos.

On the second day of their mission into the land of cloud-capped mountains, Mongolian-featured warriors, and Pandas, the soldiers were believed to be from five to 11 days march from their goal.

That goal is the valley of the Chinkiang, which carves its course from headquarters in the world's highest mountains in Tibet.

Missionaries have reported at least eight enslaved whites were seen grinding corn or tending flocks in that region, where few white men save the missionaries have ever ventured.

Lt.-Col. Herbert W. Wurtzler and his detachment expected to set up headquarters at a remote Catholic Mission and try to learn there if the white captives are United States airmen downed two and more years ago on the perilous flight "over the hump," from India to China.

Mr. David Crockett Graham of West China University, who entered the Lolo country 20 years ago, said here that the Lolos probably would demand blankets and salt for ransom because their economy was based on the practice of slavery.

One official source asserted search teams had entered the fringes of Lololand before and were told by the tribesmen that they would have to ransom any prisoners they were looking for.

Rudolph Revil, 30-year-old composer from New York City, is lifted out of a PBY to a waiting ambulance at the Gander, Nfld., air base. Willing hands reach up for him as he turns in litter to face the camera. He was one of 18 who survived the crash of a Belgian airliner, near Gander, in which 26 persons lost their lives. A helicopter flew him six miles to the PBY after landing in a clearing about a quarter mile from the air disaster.

HELD BY TITO

Roy H. Stoeckel, of Kearney, N.J., a civilian employee of the U. S. army at Linz, Austria, is being held by the Tito government on charges of illegally crossing the border and taking photographs of "different prohibited objects" it was revealed by Marshal Tito's foreign office. The Yugoslav note was the first reply to two formal requests and one informal request by the American embassy regarding the whereabouts of Stoeckel, missing since July 15.

Churchill Told Commons of Nazi Plan for Invasion

London, Sept. 26—(AP)—Winston Churchill secretly told the House of Commons in 1940 that the Germans had massed a gigantic invasion fleet of "upward of 1,700 self-propelled barges and more than 200 sea-going ships" in position for an assault in Britain.

The release today of two hitherto unpublished speeches by Britain's wartime Prime Minister cast new light on a subject which has been argued for six years—did Hitler actually intend to invade Britain?

On Sept. 17, 1940, while the German Air Force raided London throughout the night, Mr. Churchill, elaborating on what he had said at an earlier public session, had this to tell a secret Parliament meeting:

"I said just now . . . that the deployment of the enemy's invasion preparations and the assembly of his ships and barges is steadily proceeding, and that at any moment a major assault may be launched upon this island.

"I now say in secret that upward of 1,700 self-propelled barges and more than 200 sea-going ships, some very large ships, are already gathered at the many invasion ports in Germany occupation . . .

"Some of these ships and barges when struck by our bombing counter-attack and preventive attack, have blown up with tremendous explosions, showing that they are fully loaded with all the munitions needed for the invading armies and to beat us down and subjugate us utterly. The shipping space available and now assembled is sufficient to carry in one voyage nearly half a million men."

The two speeches, together with three others previously released, will be published tomorrow under the title of "Secret Session Speeches," the seventh and final volume of Mr. Churchill's war operations.

RECORD CLASSES ENROLL AS UNIVERSITY OPENS

Nearly 17,000 students, an all-time record, were enrolled when University of Toronto opened yesterday for the fall term. Typical of the Frosh in the annual "first-day fuddle" was Sally Jackson, Toronto, Pass Arts student at University College, who takes a glance at one of her new textbooks at the end of a busy day.

Registration complete, Sally crosses the campus with Dunc Peterson (left), Elizabeth Peacock and Dave Humphrey.

Whitehall Notebook

By STUART UNDERHILL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 26 (CP)—Lewis Silkin, a studious man who likes to play chess but now has an action role as minister of town and country planning, said recently that the House of Commons, "squatting" in the House of Lords Chamber, must take its place in the queque for homes.

Mr. Silkin himself used the word "squatting," and his audience of architects and surveyors in convention smiled appreciately at this sly allusion to a major embarrassment of the government at the time—the invasion of vacant London buildings by squatters.

The minister said it might be a long time before the Commons had a home of its own, although other authorities have expected the reconstruction of the bomb-wrecked chamber to be completed in about five years.

Certain priorities are granted for materials for the Commons but they do not take precedence over the requirements of ordinary homes. Labor shortages also afflict the Commons rebuilders.

Veteran retiring: Sir Murdoch Macdonald 80, member of parliament for Inverness since 1922, has decided to retire from active politics at the next election in 1949 or 1950.

Sir Murdoch, who looks younger than his years, is one of the old guard of politicans with no claims to being an outstanding speaker and an inclination to fight his elections on the basis of being an honorable man who can be trusted. The highland folk liked his plain arguments and his re-elections were taken almost as a matter of course.

Night School Attendance Valuable Opportunity

The announcement of the Board of Education this week that evening classes will be organized in the Collegiate Vocational School is one that will be greeted with approval by all those interested in advancing their knowledge in their off-time hours.

It is hoped the application will be large for the more who attend the more it will help to create a variety of subjects from which to choose. These night classes in the past have proved their usefulness, and now with many veterans in the city a good number of them will likely feel the need for adding to their educational requirements. In this way they can make up for lost time, and yet spend only two evenings a week at the school.

It often happens that young people leave school too early in life. They get tired of study and are lured to outside work so they may earn their own funds for personal needs. Later on they become conscious of their short comings and often wish they had made better use of their opportunities. Night school cannot bring them all the knowledge they might wish for but it does provide ambitious young people a chance to better themselves.

Men and women who show a desire to learn attract the attention of their employers and that is a decided advantage in times of keen competition. Those who attend night school are, therefore, better able to meet greater responsibilities when called on to assume them. That is the purpose of the night school and it is well worth the attention of those who are in need of further instruction.

Industrial Accident Causes

"Every personal injury accident is a potential death," declares a memorandum sent to Ontario's production plants by the Industrial Accident Prevention Associations.

To assist in curbing injury to workers, the Associations itemize accident causes under two main headings. They are faulty mechanical and environment conditions, and faulty human behavior.

Under the first heading are accidents due to inadequate machine guarding; defective substances and equipment; hazardous arrangements; faulty illumination; poor ventilation, and unsuitable clothing. Under faulty human behavior, the causes are physical or mental defect in employee; lack of knowledge or skill, and wrong attitude.

In one day alone three head scalpings of women in industry were reported to the Industrial Accident Prevention Associations, according to R. B. Morley, general manager of the organization.

Mr. Morley says, "When one receives notice of three cases in one day involving the complete scalping of one young girl and partial scalping of two others in three different types of industry, and in three different places in Ontario, the value and need for protecting the heads of female operators is apparent."

Urging more careful plant supervision, the memo says, "Every accident or near accident to workers should be investigated carefully and the cause eliminated."

Stewart Edward White, Writer of Great Open Spaces

With the death of Stewart Edward White, author of some 40 books, passes a writer, who, along with such figures as Zane Grey, James Oliver Curwood and others, enjoyed great popularity earlier in the century. They brought about a closer understanding between the masses of their readers and the great realm of nature. Theirs was fiction in which romance played no important part. There was no stress on the curvaceous, glamorous, cigarette smoking, cocktail drinking type of womanhood which so many authors apparently think they must portray today. The daring which features so many of today's best sellers was not present in their books to contaminate the minds of too-youthful readers points out the Owen Sound Sun Times.

The writings of these authors stirred up a great feeling of reverence for the things of nature, a feeling of kinship to the great trees of the towering forests and the vast, impressive space of the sweeping plains and a feeling of awe for the power in the thundering rivers of the unopened country.

White, who died at the age of 73, was the son of a millionaire lumberman of Grand Rapids, Michigan, yet he never became a playboy nor would he accept support from the family after college days. In appearance he was a very mild-looking man and yet he had choked to death a black leopard in Africa with his bare hands. Although he had stood innumerable times in the presence of death, on one occasion barely escaping being lynched, he seemed to forget these instances unless they served story-writing purposes.

It was a career which took him into the depths of Canada, game hunting in Africa, into the Michigan woods, the high Sierras of California, the Wild West, into the waters of British Columbia and Alaska. Never in search for local color, but living whole-heartedly in each place, he drew the best from it, and wrote such books as "The Blazed Trail," "The Silent Places," his own favorite, "Wild Geese Calling," "The Cabin," "The Forest."

A "Medical" Man

The medical profession shows signs of decay creeping upon it. According to a report from Windsor a young impostor practised medicine for some time before the hoax was discovered. At least, the young bogus doctor, aged 25, was liked by officials at the Metropolitan Hospital, Windsor. The superintendent, Horace Atkin, said of him, "Any work he did here he performed very well and we didn't receive a single complaint. He was well-liked around the hospital, a perfect gentleman, and most obliging. . . . He could change dressings as well as any doctor, to all appearances, and he performed a few minor surgical operations, stitching up cuts in accident cases." Ralph H. Olyer, head of the Federal Narcotics Bureau in Detroit, said the young man spoke with pride of the six children he claimed to have delivered unassisted in Flint.

From the foregoing statements it would appear that doctoring may be "picked up" almost as easily as any of the other so-called specialist occupations. As well, it compels one to wonder just how much medical men depend upon personality and how much upon facts for their successes. No one likes deception, nevertheless there will be a great many who will smile at the young man's daring.

Cigar-Smoking Fish

One evening last week the writer and his son were sitting in front of the Park Ranger's cabin on Misty Lake, in the Park.

My son threw a cigar stub in the water and a fish rose immediately and took it.

About three seconds after, the fish made a dash along the top of the water to the shore about ten feet, then took a circle about two feet up on the shore, returned to the water and died. I thought this was a rather interesting experience.

Intimidation

We have the grim picture of Canadians being intimidated, their homes and families threatened if they defy union bosses and continue to work at jobs with which they are satisfied.

And we have the incredible situation of nothing being done by Canadian labor leaders or Government to halt these tactics.

These are the methods of the Gestapo and Ogpu and there is no place for them in Canadian life.

THINGS TO BE

The future holds the songs unsung
And all the books unpenned,
The deeds of all the valiant young
Which will in triumph end.

Great dramas, twenty years away,
Still written are to be.
For some great artist, young today,
Wait landscapes he will see.

The work of men is far from done.
Still hidden from their view
Are glorious goals that will be won
When youth comes driving through.

Go forward, youth, with hearts elate,
Undaunted, undismayed.
Unlimited the things that wait
The day they will be made.

LOOKING BACKWARDS

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS.

20 YEARS AGO

SEPT. 26TH, 1926

Mr. W. P. Clarke and his son, Melville, when out at an early hour in search of ducks in the vicinity of Big Island noticed a large bird flying near. It circled some fifty yards above them and both levelled their guns and fired with the result that the bird was brought down. It proved to be an immense eagle which had a wing spread of seven feet and an exceptionally heavy body. Its talons were capable of carrying off an object of considerable size. The bird was on exhibition today in Mr. Clarke's shop and was viewed by many people. No one seems to know the breed of the bird.

Mrs. T. E. Ketcheson and Mrs. H. Hoskins left today to spend some time with friends in Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Allan Dempsey has returned to the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

The city bakers will advance the price of bread from 12 cents to 14 cents per loaf of three pounds on Monday next. The high cost of flour is given as the reason for the advance in price.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Who was author of the mousetrap quotation?

The "mousetrap quotation," famous because of a controversy over its authorship, reads: "If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mousetrap, than his neighbor, though he builds his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door."

Nobody knows for sure who wrote it. Its earliest known occurrence in print is a little anthology entitled "Borrowings," compiled by the Ladies of the First Unitarian Church of Oakland, California, and first published in December, 1889. On page 38 of that work the mousetrap quotation is attributed to Emerson.

Mrs. Sarah B. Yule, one of the compilers, wrote in 1912 that "to the best of my knowledge and belief, I copied it in my handbook from an address delivered long years ago, it being my custom to write everything there that I thought particularly good, if expressed in concise form; and when we were compiling 'Borrowings' I drew from this old handbook freely."

Elbert Hubbard (1856-1915) and some of his associates claimed that he wrote this "modern proverb" and ascribed it to Emerson to give it "specific gravity." This claim of authorship is weak in view of the publication date of "Borrowings," which attributed it to Emerson three or four years before Hubbard organized the Roycrofters and began his literary career. It is not uncommon for a person to absorb a quotation so completely that he believes himself the author, and that was probably the basis of Hubbard's claim.

Although it occurs nowhere in Emerson's printed or manuscript writings, all evidence points to the conclusion that he was the author. The theme of the mousetrap quotation was a favorite with Emerson and he was in the habit of repeating the same idea with verbal alterations. The "Saturday Evening Post" of March 20, 1852, quoted Emerson as saying in his lecture on wealth: "Every man must be bought at his own price in his own place. Lawyers agree that if a man understands the law he may open his office in a pine barrel, and the people will come to him when they want law."

Three years later he wrote in his Journal: "If a man knows the law, people find it out, tho' he live in a pine shanty, and resort to him. And if a man can pipe or sing, so as to wrap the prisoned soul in an elysium; or can paint landscape, and convey into oils and ochres all enchantments of spring and autumn; or can liberate and intoxicate all people who hear him with delicious songs and verses; it is certain that the secret cannot be kept; the first witness tells a second, and men go by fives and tens and fifties to his door."

In the same year he also noted in his Journal: "I trust a good deal to common fame, as we all must. If a man has good corn, or wood, or boards, or pigs to sell, or can make better chairs or knives, crucibles, or church organs, than anybody else, you will find a broad, hard-beaten road to his house, though it be in the woods.

Emerson lectured in California in the spring of 1871 and in one of his lectures, perhaps at San Francisco or Oakland, he probably used the same idea, but different words, and that was the source referred to by Mrs. Yule.

The mousetrap quotation is sometimes erroneously attributed to Dr. John R. Paxton because of a similar line of reasoning in his sermon entitled "He Could Not Be Hid" (1889.)

MACKENZIE'S COLUMN

Greek Situation Presents Stalin With Opportunity

By GLENN Babb
(Associated Press Foreign News Analyst)

In Greece there is a ready made opportunity for Joseph Stalin to support with action his declaration that he believes unconditionally in the "possibility of a friendly and lasting collaboration of the Soviet Union and Western Democracy despite the existence of ideological discord." There the world-wide conflict between east and west has reached its most dangerous stage; allaccounts show that large scale civil war is raging.

In London a Greek embassy spokesman characterizes the fighting as 'an invasion by subversive elements from Albania and Yugoslavia with the connivance of the two governments." The British government lends support to this view.

The Soviet Government doubtless would point out that Yugoslavia and Albania are independent countries; the Tito and Hoxha regimes disclaim any responsibility for the turmoil along Greece's Northern frontiers. But the fact remains that outside Russia and the Russian zone of domination— which includes Yugoslavia and Albania— the belief is almost general that word from the Kremlin could alter the directions of the developments that point toward ever spreading conflict.

The Russians have been beaten in two efforts in the United Nations Security Council to pin the blame for this situation on Greece and the British forces still in the country.

Soviet delegate Andrei Gromyko's effort to compel Britain to report on the strength of her forces in Greece and (the United States to do likewise concerning its forces in China) was thrown out. In the course of this conflict Mr. Gromyko killed, by his veto, an American proposal, which had the backing of the overwhelming majority of the council, for an investigation of the whole Greek border situation.

The need for such an impartial study seems to most observers to be impressing; only by such measure can the world get an ordered account of the conflicting charges and countercharges that come from Athens, Belgrade, Tirana and Moscow. Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the United Nations, has declared that he still may undertake such a study on his own responsibility.

Senators Defend Criticism of Upper House by Labor

Ottawa, Sept. 26 —(CP)— The latest suggestion that the Senate should be abolished elicited vigorous rebuttal from one Senator, but just a smile and a shrug from other members of the upper House to whom it's an old, familiar story.

Yesterday, the Canadian Congress of Labor Convention in Toronto adopted a resolution that the Senate be abolished "as an undemocratic body, being neither elective nor representative, and utterly antiquated and outmoded in this day and generation."

C. C. L. President A. R. Mosher drew a chuckle with a suggestion that everyone should be made members of the Red Chamber as "the Senate, as far as I know, is the only place to get complete social service."

These were fighting words to Senator William Duff of Lunenberg, N. S., who retorted in an interview that "Mosher and his crowd" were "agitators, troublemakers" who should "go back to work instead of drawing money from poor devils working in the mines and steel plants."

The 74-year-old Nova Scotia liberal, known on Parliament Hill as "Admiral," added:—

"It's all right for them to sit back and pass damn fool resolutions, but none of them dare come before the public for election."

Senate Safety Value

The Senate was "not only a safety valve, but a steadying influence on Canadian public life It is not outmoded and it isn't antiquated. . . it's a part of the constitution of the country."

At Ottawa, Senator James Murdock, liberal senator from Ontario and a former labor leader, said he had no formal comment on the C. C. L. resolution, adding in an aside: "Why I've got 300 letters in my desk saying the same thing."

A similar reaction came from Thomas Vien, liberal senator from Quebec and one of Canada's leading constitutional authorities.

There was "nothing surprising" in the C. C. L. attitude and he was "quite satisfied" more mature consideration would bring a "more sober judgment."

Senator Vien recalled the Senate was created in 1867 "to protect the country against possible erratic currents of public opinion." The time might come when the Senate would be called upon to "render the greatest possible service to the country in that direction."

Abolishing the Senate would involve a resolution from the Canadian parliament to Westminster where a bill would have to be passed by both Houses amending the British North America Act.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

(Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease, diagnosis or treatment, will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Letters should be brief and writtn in ink. Owing to the large number of letters receivd only a few can be answered here. No reply can be made to queries not conforming to instructions. Address Dr. William Brady, care of this Newspaper.)

SO YOU DON'T LOOK SO OLD

A composite of many letters would run like this:

"Last May 6 was my steenteenth birthday. . . have been following your teachings now for steenteen years. . . every one thinks I am not over 60 because I have always kept so active and taken good care of health..."

In the first place I must say it is gratifying to know that a reader has following my teachings for many years—and most of the time in the same paper, too—and that he or she, even by implication, gives some credit to them for keeping him or her well and alive so long. But let's not kid ourselves — there is simply no telling how much the ubiquitous A. J. Coincidence has to do with it. The correspondent exulting in his or her youthful old age may have chosen parents from long-lived families, or may have been lucky or nimble in dodging alcoholic drivers or may have used perspicacity in keeping out of range of miscrents who purport to have a "little cold."

Moreover it seems to be one of the amenities of social intercourse to lay it on thickly when felicitating any one upon his or her health. If an old geezer has recently shaved and put on a clean shirt we exclaim how young he looks—and refuse to believe he is as old as he says. If Grandma has a new hair-do, Borrow's some whatchacallem hose and contrives to get on a radio quiz program, we can't resist applauding as we marvel at her extraordinary pep, even if she collapses right after the show and never comes back.

I am thrilled, all right, whenever a reader tells me that he or she thinks my teachings have kept him or her in fair health or enabled him or her to remain young or at least to enjoy life longer. But the thrill is tempered by this wretched cynicism, which I acquired, I think, in my internship in Erie County Hospital—a beautiful case of tertian malaria, with the plasmodia demonstrable by bedside miscroscopic examination, just didn't last long enough to give the entire senior class the rare opportunity (rare in those parts) to see the malarial parasites, as the patient made a prompt recovery and left the hospital cured—by capsules of Rochelle salts instead of quinine. Quinine has always been the typical specific cure for mlaria in medical literature, yet here was a malaria patient making as prompt a rcovery as a doctor could wish, without a dose of quinine or any other anti-malarial medicine, so far as we know. I have always regretted that expedience, in a way, for I believe it spoiled what might have become a tolerably orthodox doctor.

In the pamphlet "Young Folks and Old Folks"—available on written request (a clipping will not suffice) if you inclose stamped envelope bearing your address—I explain clearly, I hope, first what vite is, then how to get it and what the daily intake of vitamins and minerals has to do with it. It is vite that keeps you feeling young whether you look it or not.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

When to Stop Digitalis

Having taken digitalis over a long period I asked the doctor when I could safely discontinue it and he said "Never", just like that. I inclose a postal card addressed to myself, and request that you answer Yes or No on it, to this $64 question: Would I be wise to leave off my three grains of digitalis every other day? (A. LeG.)

Answer—Either follow your doctor's instructions or put yourself under the care of another doctor.

Drafts

Will drafts in summer time cause colds? Or chills? Aren't chills of some benefit to the body? (M. G.)

Answer—Drafts cause no illness in summer, autumn, winter or spring. Feeling somewhat chilly does the body good, stimulates contraction of muscles, physical activity, exercise, work, which warms you up; tends to prevent flabbiness.

Welcome Any Weather

A GREAT help to the college wardrobe, or indeed any girl's collection of wearables, is this slate hue or cocoa colored heavy cotton twill coat, lined throughout with furry alpaca.

The coat is modeled on an officer's workaday uniform coat, belted and buttoned to repel wind and weather. It is warm and weatherproof, inexpensively priced, and has great endurance.

INSTALLATION SERVICE AT HOLLOWAY STREET Y.P.U.

A large number of young people assembled at Holloway Street United Church on Monday evening, Sept 23, for the installation of the new officers in the Y.P.U.

A sing-song conducted by Norma Arkles began the evening's program.

The business regarding finances etc, was carefully considered under Maude Burke's direction. Margaret Hillis gave a fine explanation of the origin and significance of the young people's crest. "We must not forget as we look up, that we are to life up also", she said. Rev. Mr. Perkins challenged the group as he spoke on the verse of Scripture from St. Matthew's Gospel "As ye go preach".

He said "The church is responsible for the moral life of the nation", as he told of the church's place and responsibilities in the world of today.

"The young people must realize that they have a task to perform. Everyone of us has a task if we are true Christians and that task may be on the street, in the shop, or at home."

The Cross and the Open Bible provided a beautiful worship centre as the service was presented by the Fellowship group under Harry Denton's direction.

The theme of worship, "God,—Is Now and Shall Be", through out the entire service was expressed in the singing, the meditation and prayer.

President, Maude Burke.
Vice President, Harry Denton
Secretary, Jean Badgley
Treasurer, Max Maguire
Pianist, Dorothy Mitts
Assistant Pianist, Marion Allen

ST. ANDREW'S WOMEN'S GUILD

The September meeting of St. Andrew's Women's Guild was held on Tuesday evening, the President, Mrs. Mantle, presiding.

Minutes were read and activities reported which occurred during the Summer recess.

Discussion was held and plans made for the annual bazaar and committees were formed to arrange the necessary details.

After the business part of the meeting, Mrs. Goodfellow, leader of the Group in charge, introduced Miss Edna Sullivan, Reg.N., who gave a most interesting talk on her work as an army nurse in the Union of South Africa, during the recent war. She spoke of the beauties of the country and mentioned especially the Houses of Parliament, recently erected in Pretoria, and the many beautiful flowering shrubs to be found everywhere.

The native women do not take up professions, or enter business, but are most interested and grateful to those who go to their country to help.

On behalf of the Guild, Mrs. H. C. Brown thanked Miss Sullivan for this story of her interesting experiences in South Africa.

A social half hour followed with refreshments served by the Group members.

ST. JOHN'S W. A.

Stirling.—The first Fall meeting of St. John's W.A., was held Tuesday, Sept. 24, with 20 members present. The President, Mrs. H. Rodgers, opened the program with a hymn and the Rev. C. C. Brazill led in the Litany and Members' Prayer. Mrs. Walter Savage read the Scripture Lesson. Business, relative to the coming Deanery meeting to be held in Tweed in October, was discussed and all members wishing to attend are requested to get in touch with the Rev. Mr. Brazill or the Secretary, Mrs. Savage.

The program committee for the October meeting will be Mesdames C. C. Brazill and B. Woodbeck and the visiting committee will be Mesdames H. Cook and E. Gould.

Mrs. G. Clute contributed a synopsis of a chapter of the Study Book, "China Faces the Future", followed by comments on the contents by the Rev. Mr. Brazill Mrs. B. Woodbeck contributed a pleasing solo "The Old Rugged Cross", with Mrs. Alger at the piano. Two contests were conducted, "Old Song Titles" and "Names of Flowers" by Mesdames Whitehead and Grayers, respectively.

Before closing the meeting the president announced that next year the Deanery will be held in Stirling. Mrs. H. Smith moved a vote of thanks to those who assisted with the interesting program and to Mrs. E. Gould and her social committee.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

At Your Fingertips

Maud Muller raked the hay. Our Maud Mullers have been digging in gardens and, if you don't believe they've worked hard, take a look at their hands. If they'll let you! They'll probably tuck them in their pockets or hide them behind their backs. We warned them, when they were first putting in seeds, what would happens to their mitts. They heeded not. They didn't wear their gardening gloves. Gloves are clumsy, they say. Now they're bawling something terrible. Fingernails grubby and broken. A part of the harvest. The price they paid.

Capable, competent hands are more interesting than useless ones; they have character. But they can be beautiful, too, if one uses protective measures. When the work is done, wash the hard-working paws with a thick suds to which cornmeal has been added. The tiny grains will dig grime from knuckle wrinkles. Dry thoroughly. On with the hand lotion. Women are inclined to fancy that lotions are just for winter applications. They're wrong. Washing the hands many times a day removes the natural oil. Unless some substitute is provided, the surface of the skin will suffer wear and tear, the hands will look old.

Capable competent hands have character

At least twice a week, all the year round, hands should have a creamy massage. Cocoabutter can be substituted for a cream; it is less expensive and does splendid service.

Grasp the fingers, one by one, twisting each from the base, Rub the oil into the cuticle surrounding the fingernails. This practice is an insurance against hangnails. If you find one of these bothersome shreds, clip it away carefully with the curved, needle-point scissors, pointing them toward the nail eave.

The flesh close to the nails is easily infected, so don't make a wound. If you are unfortunate enough to have an infection of this character, soak the finger in hot water to which boric acid has been added.

You may not believe it, but hands get tired. Writing, typing, sewing, they are much in the same positions. Try a relaxer. Let the arms hang limp at the sides of your body. Then shake your hands hard and fast to bring the blood rushing to them. Clench and unclench them.

Enthusiastic gardeners may find calloused spots on their fingers. They should get a toilet pumice stone from the druggist, use it when the flesh is soft and moist after bathing. Then friction with a cream.

Thickened cuticle may form at the sides of the fingernails. The cause is filing the pink talons too far down at the sides.

DRIVER OUT OF DANGER

Galt, Sept. 26 —(CP)— Five Hollyrood people injured in a truck-auto crash here Monday night were able to leave hospital for their homes, but the truck driver, Gordon Lockie, Brampton, the most seriously injured, will be confined to the institution for several weeks. However his condition was reported yesterday to be improved and he is out of danger.

CONVICTED OF MURDER

Waynesburg, Pa., Sept. 26 —(AP)— William Headlee, 22-year-old veteran of Pacific fighting, was convicted of second-degree murder in the rape-slaying of Mrs. Harriet Walker, 78. Headlee was found asleep beside the body of Mrs. Walker in her blood-stained bed last May 17. The woman had been stabbed 20 times.

Good Afternoon Dress

By ALICE ALDEN

BACK IN FAVOR, and seen at the smartest places, is the afternoon frock of satin, either in glossy black or in rich brown. This model is in brown and was chosen from the all collection of New York designer, Hansen Bang. Deft shoulder draping slants to a triple fold at the opposite hip. A gold mesh chain belt, set with blue-toned stones, complements the restrained lavishness of this alluring afternoon dress Incidentally, it is nice to see an afternoon dress again taking the fashion spotlight!

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

For Her Engagement-Announcement Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. To announce my engagement my parents are planning to have Open House on a Sunday afternoon soon. We are going to invite relatives and friends. Is it all right to invite older folks as well as younger ones?

2. When sending out the invitations is it proper to send the same one to the mother and daughter if I do not know the father and will not be inviting him?

3. What should we serve the guests on this afternoon occasion?

4. On the envelopes of the invitations ,is it proper to typewrite the names and addresses instead of handwriting them?

D. W.

1. Yes, to a "general" engagement-announcement party older guests and younger guests are invited.

2. The fact that you do not know the father is no reason why you should not invite him if you are inviting his wife and daughter. An invitation to this kind of party should be sent to "Mr. and Mrs. ", unless there is some other reason (besides not having met him) why you are not inviting the husband. However, if you decide not to invite the husband, you may send one invitation to the mother and daughter.

3. A tea-menu is customary: small, assorted sandwiches, cake or cookies, tea and/or coffee (also punch, if you wish); with perhaps such accessories as potato chips, popcorn, candies, and nuts.
vitations the names and address-
4. No; on the envelopes of ines should be handwritten, not typewritten.

Wedding Present Always Sent to Bride-Elect

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A friend of mine, who is a judge, is to be married soon. I have never met the bride-to-be. How and to whom should I address my wedding present?

J. C.

Even though you have not met the bride-to-be, you should send your wedding present to her, addressed to her at her home address.

Her Best Friend as Maid of Honor

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to have a large church wedding, followed by a reception at a hotel. I have no sister and as my maid of honor I very much want to have a dear girl friend. We went through school together, and promised each other that whoever married first, the other would be her maid of honor. My fiance has only one sister and his family say that she should be my maid of honor. What is the proper thing for me to do?

Puzzled

It is your privilege to choose your dearest friend as your maid of honor, and your fiance's family has no right even to suggest that you invite your fiance's sister to be your honor attendant. Since you are having a large wedding, you are probably planning to have bridesmaids, and if so, you should certainly invite his sister to be a bridesmaid.

COURT REDUCES SENTENCE

Toronto, Sept. 26 —(CP)—The Ontario Court of Appeal Tuesday reduced to nine months determinate and one year indeterminate the sentence of two years less one day imposed on James Franklin Thompson at Chatham last Jan. 16 on a charge of bicycle theft. The court ruled that the time Thompson has already served would count as part of his sentence.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Two Sides of the Same Question

Here are two letters from teen-age girls, presenting opposite sides of the same problem; and to further complicate things, each girl has a mother who is on the opposite side of the question from her daughter!

Says one girl:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I am a high school girl of 15, and to me it seems I have one of the greatest problems any teen-ager could have.

"My mother insists that I go steady. I don't want to. I want to go with my high school chums.

"I am going with a boy now whom my mother simply worships. He is a discharged sailor and lives in a different city. I like to go with him occasionally, but not steady. My mother says I go steady or not at all. Because of this, I am losing all popularity with the teen-age boys of my high school.

"Whenever my mother and I discuss the subject, she tells me that my older sisters went steady and married their one and only and are very happy. My sisters did not attend high school and therefore had no plans for a career, as I do. They more or less had no alternative than getting married and settling down.

"Miss Fairfax, how can I convince my mother I will have a better future not going steady?

"L. H."

And now for our other teenager:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I am a girl of 16 and very disturbed. I go with a boy whom my parents think highly of, but they want me to go out with other boys, too. For about two months I tried going with other boys, but I didn't have any fun, so I went back to the same boy. I think a lot of him and he shows me a good time. But my parents think I should still go with other boys.

"Could you tell me if I should go with the boy I like or go with other boys to please my parents?

"Disturbed."

Now I find myself siding, in the first letter, with the girl. It seems to me that she is perfectly right in not wanting to tie herself up to any one boy at the age of 15. Moreover if she is perfectested already in preparing herself for a specific career, as she seems to be, I feel she should have that privilege and that her parents should do everything they can to help her.

Moreover, I am a strong believer in teen-agers having many friends among the boys and getting to know all types before they decide to "go steady" with anyone.

I hope, "L.H.", that you will be able to persuade your mother to let you keep on with your plans. But, until you do, I certainly think you should be heading toward the things you want to do, rather than concentrating on the idea of an early marriage.

As for our friend, "Disturbed", this time I think it is the parents, and not the girl, who have the right idea. For, as I have just said, it seems much wiser for a teen-age girl to have many acquaintances and good times with all the boys, instead of narrowing her interests to one boy friend.

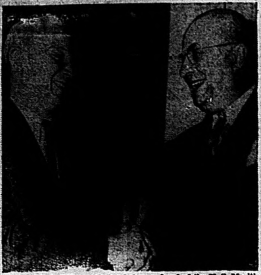
PROBE INTO WARTIME SHIPBUILDING OPENS



Vice-Admiral Emory S. Land, former head of the U. S. Maritime Commission, is shown, LEFT, greeting Henry J. Kaiser, famed shipbuilder, when they met in Washington, D.C., as the House Merchant Marine Committee opened its probe into the profits of wartime shipbuilders. The committee's counsel, Marvin Coles, named the St. John's River Shipbuilding Corp.—one of 19 companies under investigation — as having made more than $2,000,000 on a $600 investment. Mr. Kaiser told the committee that he saved the government upward of half a billion dollars in war contracts.

MARMORA

Rev. Arthur Smith Special Speaker

Marmora.—The Annual Harvest Thanksgiving services were observed in St. Paul's Church on Sunday. At the celebration of Holy Communion at 11 a.m., the Rector, the Rev. J. M. Brownlie, was assisted by the Rev. Arthur Smith, of St. Thomas' Church, Belleville, who was the special preacher. Taking his text from the miracle of the loaves, he emphasized the generosity of Jesus. "He distributed", drawing the moral lesson from our economic niggardliness in these years.

The church was decorated appropriately with Autumn fruits, flowers and leaves.

The Anthem was from the Psalm text "His Name is Excellent".

Handsome, Hardy Otter

By PRUNELLA WOOD

IT'S A FACT underwritten by the Federal Bureau of Standards that prime otter fur is one of the best wearing anyone can buy. It is pliant, too, and therefore can be made into the softest sort of models, so that your hardy coat of otter is also your dressy coat for pure elegance's sake.

This otter coat, of the length which will be most fashionable next year, and which for this department is always the most practical and flattering, is made with push-up sleeves, a collarless but snug neckline, and plenty of skirt ripple. It is Canadian otter, sheared and plucked.

Jersey Regains Pre-war Charm

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

St. Helier, Jersey, Sept. 23 (CP)—Their freedom regained, Channel Islanders here lost no time removing all traces of the German invader and preparing for the happier invasion of tourists.

In fifteen months the islands have recovered both their lure and their visitors and there is little to distinguish Jersey today from the holiday playground it was before the war. Crowds are here despite the still limited sea and air transport. Hotels and boarding houses have been reconditioned and repaired.

British austerity is forgotten. Goods in short supply in England are plentiful and since there is no purchase tax, prices seem absurdly low to visitors.

Tidying up Jersey took all of 12 months. Hundreds of notices in German had to be removed from the roads and barbed wire and mines from the beaches. German tanks were shipped out and the last German prisoners left in June.

The great wall erected by the Germans along the wide sweep of St. Brelades Bay remains but it has been pierced to give access to the sea.

In the adjoining churchyard is a permanent memorial to the German occupation— long rows of black crosses, more numerous than might be expected seeing there was no fighting on the island.

Potatoes to France

The agricultural industry has suffered temporary loss of the British market for its potato crops, but an alternative market has been found in France and in the British Army of the Rhine. Tomato exports have not been affected and the dairy herd suffered less than farmers expected.

Reports on life under German rule are conflicting. Some call it "unendurable" and liken the Germans to fiends. Others declare life was not much disturbed and a few give the Germans credit for fair administration.

"When they had the food, they saw to it that everyone on the island got his fair share," said one gnarled old fisherman, gazing out over the sunny harbor.

"If you played the game and didn't try any monkey business with wireless sets and what-not, why the German was a pretty good fellow to get along with. You have to live with a people to know 'em and what I say is we could have been under lots worse people."

An English woman who keeps a small cafe along the seafront spoke differently. "Those who like them should go and live with them," she said angrily. "They are devils. They raided every home on this island and took the best of everything. Fair play—bah!"

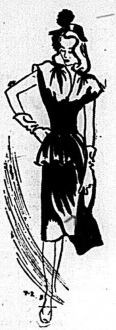
Black Satin Date Dress

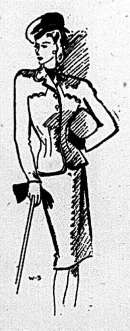


... Black satin party frock ...

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

LICORICE BLACK satin is the medium chosen for this most attractive "date" dress, that takes nicely to elaborate or interesting accessories. The surplice bodice extends into a pouff below the waist, the line of the slim skirt taking a diagonal lap over. A very nice dress for afternoon activities or for dinner and the theatre.

Softly Handled Tailored Suit



For the Short Girls

By VERA WINSTON

DEPICTED is a suit cut on tailored lines, but so softened that it is very good for the shorter figure. The pockets at the shoulder have scalloped edges. It is seamed and fitted through the waist. The jacket is fairly short above a straight skirt. The fabric is deep purple wool, good with black accessories and interesting and new with dark brown.

Shining Up the Soul Windows

By HELEN FOLLETT

ANIMATION puts the shine on the soul windows. You can't change the color or the shape of your orbs. There are no magic drops that can be used to make them dewy-like; not with safety. So it is up to you, to make them send pleasant messages.

Ill health, fatigue, nervous irritation, worry throw them into dull shadows. Whatever improves the physical state, whatever peps up the spirit, is an eye beautifier. Old family Doc can obtain much information concerning your health in general by regarding the outer appearance of your eyes.

Bright Eyes

Bright eyes indicate vitality and mental health as well Styes may be the result of eyestrain or a general rundown condition of the physical machine. Bloodshot eyes may indicate an infection located elsewhere or indicate that something is wrong with the circulatory system.

Twice a day you should bathe your peepers with warm water, then with cold. This practice will have a favorable effect upon the surrounding tissues At bed time, use cream freely on the lids and below the eyes. Tissues there are soft and delicate, underlying fibres are small; therefore the skin is likely to fall into creases.

Velveteen Date Dress

When eye shadows are applied, use thin cream first, or mineral oil. The pigment then will be a lighter film. You can go the limit with the lipstick, but not with lid pigment. A little too much and the effect is anything but flattering. Only a good make-upper should play with eye shadows.

A touch of mascara on the lashes will bring out the color and brightness of the eyes. The shape of the eyebrows can help or hinder. Arch your forehead scimitars along the same lines of your eyes, and, for goodness sake, don't pluck just from the under side, you'll carry an expression of permanent surprise.

How to Glamorize the Eyes

By HELEN FOLLETT

THIS IS THE heydey of eye glorifying. Whereas a woman used to spend time laying on commercial blushes, she now concentrates on lipstick technique and eye make-up. One cannot indulge in an overdose of complexion batik. If one must dispense with one line of pigment, it seems best to call off the rouge.

You may have observed, my paper friend, that cheeks are not as rosy as they used to be. Girls who went the limit with the compact often looked as if they were carrying a temperature of frightening degree. We have learned a lot since those days. Fevered faces are not attractive in midsummer. They ruin the "cool crisp look" that every girl endeavors to acquire.

Deft Touch

To make the eyes intriguing, the glance glamorous requires the deft touch. Eyebrows must be neatly outlined, touched with brilliantine to give lustre. The eyebrow that resembles a wisp of darning cotton is definitely out. The vapid, mask-like appearance that it imparts does not enhance the active, highly energized, business-like girl of the moment.

Lashes should also be given a brilliantine brushing, upward sweeps of the bristles so winker tips will have a tilt. If they need deeper coloring, a touch of dark brown mascara will provide it. Black is likely to look messy.

Evening Affairs

For evening festivities, one may apply the seductive eye shadow that comes in more delicate shades than have been offered in the past.

The most popular tones are bronze, greens, blues, mauve and blends. You will find greys and browns, but we advise you to skip 'em; they do no good by one.

Get the cream product, put on a light film, extending it to a point below the far end of the eyebrow. Be stingy with it. A little gives a mysterious air, a surplus will make one look brittle or fatigued.

NO ENCORE GIVEN

London, Sept. 26 —(CP)— When Sir Thomas Beecham presented his re-formed Royal Philharmonic Orchestra to London music-lovers, there were shouts of "encore" at the close of the program. "The orchestra will play again," said Sir Thomas amid loud applause. "They will play the National Anthem."

TO MOTORISTS WHO NEED CARS NOW!

Hudson is stepping up production of 1946 cars as fast as material supplies permit. Still, demand is ahead of our ability to deliver.

We have made every effort to deliver cars in sequence of orders received—with every consideration for those whose needs are most urgent.

If you need a new car, we suggest: 1) Come in and see the 1946 Hudsons. 2) Place your order for the model you want. We will give you the earliest possible delivery date. 3) Let us check your present car, and give it what service it requires to keep it in A-1 shape until we can deliver a new Hudson.

This desire for Hudson ownership goes far beyond ordinary demands. It is even out of proportion to the pent-up needs of the past five years.

Before you make up your mind about any 1946 car, you will want to see the new Hudson.

Soon as you do, you'll know these Hudsons are really new, outside and in. And we believe you will echo what so many others are saying: "Far more in smart new style, luxury and conveniences than we had thought possible!"

The motors that have made history are making it again, with Super-Six and Super-Eight performance that is outstanding.

Hudson drivers will travel at low cost, for this car has all the tested engineering features that have set economy records. And the traditional Hudson qualities are here too—stamina and endurance that have been thoroughly proved in a long line of fine cars.

So if you're looking for a car that's up to the minute in style, and right in every important fundamental, be sure to see this 1946 Hudson. It's on display now at your Hudson dealer's.

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1946

'Bigger and Better' Belleville Fair Passes into History As One of the Best Ever Staged

More Than 35,000 People Passed Through Gates During the Three Days

Proudly living up to pre-opening announcements that it would be the "biggest and best fair ever held here," the Belleville Exhibition passed into history last night as thousands of third-night patrons thronged the grounds, the grandstand, the many exhibit buildings, and the livestock barns.

It was estimated at a late hour last night that between 32,000 and 35,000 people visited the 1946 edition of the Exhibition during the three-day show and directors are holding heads high in justifiable pride.

Laudatory comment on the high standard which this year's exhibition attained through the efforts of its hard-working directorate was heard on all sides during the three-day existence of the exhibition.

Last night and today directors were receiving congratulations from all sections of the county and district on the quality of the fair in general and of many special features in particular. Special mention was made of the outstanding horse exhibits — in fact all phases of agriculture came in for their share of praise.

Public Approval

And the fair-going public placed a unanimous stamp of approval on the show as is evidenced in the huge crowds which patronized the exhibition despite the fact that a drizzling rain fell on opening day afternoon and evening.

There was little to choose from among the various phases of the exhibition. The entertainment was of an exceptionally high quality; the Midway was easily one of the best ever seen here; the exhibits rated much higher both numerically and in quality over those of previous years, and the administration of the fair as a whole went off smoothly and without a hitch.

Coolness Contributing Factor.

Approximately ten thousand people surged through the Fair Grounds entrances yesterday afternoon and evening. This was a decrease from the attendance figures of Tuesday, and the coolness of the weather, and other attractions may have been contributing factors.

The grandstand was filled to capacity in the evening for the Billy Garden stage show, but the overflow was lacking.

The performance was on the same high standard that marked it in the afternoon and the day previous and the Garden performers gave another of their colorful presentations before the large appreciative audience.

The Conklin Midways, due to be dis-assembled at eleven o'clock, carried on with their many attractions until a much later hour as the large crowd lingered in the laneways. The midway left for Kingston early today.

The coolness of the weather, however, did not deter fair goers, especially the younger ones, from enjoying themselves. Older people sought the comparative warmth of the exhibits buildings while the youth indulged in its fair fling aboard the many exciting rides and the tented shows that bordered the laneways of the fair.

Cool weather whetted appetites, too, if the business done by refreshment stands is any criterion. Hot dog, hamburg, and other food concessions did a large business as did the many games of chance and the inevitable "bingo."

Band Outstanding.

One of the outstanding features of the exhibition was the fine pre-show performance given by the Belleville Municipal Band under the direction of Ross Hunter. The band, some fifty pieces, won its musical spurs on Monday evening when it played in a drizzling rain and kept 3,000 wet but enthusiastic grandstand and track patrons in good humor. In subsequent performances the band gave ample evidence that it is one of the best musical aggregations of its kind in this part of Canada.

President, Directors Praised

Other unsung heroes of the exhibition were members of the Ontario Provincial Police and Belleville City Police Department who were on duty at all times during the three-day show. They were especially effective on Monday and Tuesday nights when overflow crowds threatened to get out of hand in and around the grandstand prior to the presentation of Lucky Lot Hell Drivers and the Billy Garden stage extravaganza.

Nothing of an untoward nature happened however, and the police had little or no trouble in maintaining order.

And so the 1946 edition of the Belleville Exhibition passes into history. To the credit of President Elmer Sandercock and his efficient Board of Directors and Secretary Erle Denyes and his assistant Miss Ruth Dunning, it should be noted that the fair, highly publicised as it was, lived up to all advance notices, and in some instances exceeded them.

Thirty-five thousand people thought so — and they can't be wrong.

VETS TAKE OVER BARRACKS IN OTTAWA

Leader of 200 Ottawa veterans who defied police to capture the former Wrens' barracks at H.M.C.S. Carleton on Dow's Lake and the C.W.A.C. barracks at Lansdowne Park, Franklyn E. Hanratty, is seen as R.C.M.P. officers tried to arrest him. The Veterans' Housing League moved 24 homeless veterans' families into the building by crushing all opposition.

While R.C.M.P. officers and Ottawa police watched the front of the Carleton barracks, veterans moved in the back way. One little boy did his bit by helping carry household effects up the stairs. A cavalcade of 20 trucks carried the squatters' furniture.

A-Bomb Not Decisive Factor Says Eisenhower

Aboard the Queen Mary, Sept. 26 —(Reuters)— Gen. Eisenhower told a press conference last night that he agrees with Prime Minister Stalin's view that the atomic power would not be a decisive factor in the outcome of a war.

No destructive weapon could be decisive, the United States Army Chief of Staff said in comment on Generalissimo Stalin's answers to interview questions.

Referring to Gen. Stalin's comments on American troops in China, Gen. Eisenhower said total United States military strength in China was "minor" with only small detachments represented. There was nothing that could be termed an occupation army in China, he added.

Gen. Eisenhower appealed for a "cards-on-the-table" attitude toward world problems.

"Whatever you say you are doing, you must live up to it 100 per cent. You cannot use chicanery and the methods of Metternich and Talleyrand."

'Headless Valley' Mystery Still Remains Unsolved

Edmonton, Sept. 26 —(CP)— The mystery of "Headless Valley," which Indian legend links with the disappearance of 13 white persons in the last eight years, remained unsolved today with the return of the latest party to probe the depths of the wild Nahanni country of the Northwest Territories.

James Watts, Yakima, Wash., school teacher; his wife and his brother-in-law, Edward Ross of Berkale, Mont., who two weeks ago were feared lost in the valley's swamp wilds, passed through Edmonton en route home from their northern adventure.

Though Watts and his party were proof that white men do come back from the heart of the Nahanni country, the school teacher geologist was not ready to dismiss the stories of the valley as myths.

"There still may be something to them," he said as he recounted the rugged going on the party's 250-mile trek through the wilderness. But one thing was certain— they found no gold, they saw no hostile Indians and they did not contract the dread meningitis some say is responsible for the deaths of those who have vanished in the valley, 250 miles north of Fort Nelson, B.C.

Purpose of their trip was to explore the region from a geological standpoint and to test the truth of a trapper's story he had found gold lying loose on the ice of Borden Creek, a tributary to the Nahanni River.

Watts said a few flakes of gold might have been scraped by ice from the rock bottom of Borden Creek and found later by the trapper. But he saw no promise of precious metals of any kind, though there was evidence of oil in the shale formations.

The only sign of human life in the Nahanni country was a few axe-marks on trees, probably made by trappers. The nearest they came to Headless Valley itself, where the curse is supposed to be centred, was 75 miles.

Canada to Make 400,000 Chairs For Great Britain

Toronto, Sept. 26 —(CP)— Completion of a contract for immediate delivery of 400,000 Ontario-made chairs for the British market was announced at Queen's Park yesterday by Hon. Dana Porter, Ontario Minister of Planning and Development.

Mr. Porter said the contract includes an option to provide up to 2,000,000 chairs and it may eventually result in a turnover of $2000,000 worth of labor and materials in the province.

The chairs are to be manufactured by Kohen Boxes, Limited, of Oshawa and Windsor. The deal was negotiated between F. J. Lyle of the Department, Ontario House in London and A. E. Johnston of the British Board of Trade.

The chairs are to be assembled and finished in a British factory.

Teaching Staffs of Public Schools One of Best Qualified in Ontario

The city has one of the best qualified public school teaching staffs in the province of Ontario members of the local Board of Education were informed at their last regular meeting by Inspector--Administrator L. A. Kells.

At the present time there is only one teacher on the public school teaching staff whose qualifications are below that of a permanent first class certificate, this being considerably ahead of other centres of comparative size. The number of teachers holding second class certificates in many Ontario centres the size of Belleville would run up to ten or even twelve, it was stated.

Almost 25 per cent of the Belleville public school teaching staff took advantage of summer school courses during the past vacation period, this also being considerably above the average. It is believed that the eleven teachers attending summer courses last summer is the largest number ever to attend from Belleville in one year and teachers taking the courses were commended for their interest as many were not under pressure to complete permanent certificates.

Lower Enrolment

Enrolment at the four local public schools for the fall school term is down slightly from that of last year, this being due almost entirely to the large group who secured high school standing at the close of the last school term. First year enrolment, however, shows a tendency to stand above 200 as compared with about 170 for the period from 1939 to 1944.

Organization of a special girls' class for the four public schools was recommended to the board with members directing that reorganization take place as soon as possible to permit the girls' handicraft class at Queen Victoria School. The Inspector-Administrator met with Dr. C. E. Stothers of the Department of Education on Saturday and a plan for the class and type of operation was agreed upon.

The special boys' handicraft class is expected to be in operation at the new centre within a very short time. It is expected that benches will be delivered within the week and much of the other equipment is already on hand. The boys' handicraft class is now crowded to capacity.

All members of the public school teaching staff with the exception of one who had undergone a tonsilectomy, reported for duty at the opening of the school term, board members were advised.

English Exchange Teachers

Miss Nora Dane, of Ilford, England, is teaching at King George School replacing Miss Alice Heasman, who is on exchange and teaching in England. Mr. C. A. Brown, interchange officer and registrar of the department of Education, has requested that Miss Dane be permitted to visit other classrooms in the city and district and thus obtain as much profit as possible from her teaching experience in Canada.

The report of Mrs. Watt, public health nurse, indicated that school children were, in general exceptionally clean on their return to school at the opening of the fall term. All children in the four schools with the exception of Grade III and VIII have been inspected by the nurse with special attention being given to newcomers. A few of the Kindergarten pupils have still to be vaccinated.

Thirteen children were found with diseased tonsils, while three were found with eye defects and 21 with vision defects. First Aid had been given to 55 children during the month while 20 new defects and 12 old defects had been corrected.

Canadian Turns Down $20,000,000 Offer to Enter Diamond Combine

London, Sept. 26 (Reuters) — Canadian geologist John Thornburn Williamson, described yesterday as potentially the richest man in the world, following confirmation of his discovery in Tanganyika of the world's biggest diamond mine, has refused to join the diamond selling combine, the Evening Standard said.

Dr. Williamson has "decided to play a lone hand in marketing his gems," the paper said. The former Montreal and Quebec scientist had turned down a $20,000,000 offer to enter the combine.

"Object of the combine is to keep world prices stable. But there is no indication that Williamson is likely to sell at prices lower than those of the Diamond Trading Co.," the newspaper added.

The Diamond Trading Co. in London, with which Dr. Williamson will be in competition, last year sold $100,000,000 worth of rough stones.

Output of Dr. Williamson's mine is likely to reach $8,000,000 next year without probing the full extent of the new discoveries, the Standard said.

It quoted a spokesman of the East African Dependencies Office in London as saying that Dr. Williamson's discovery means wealth for the British Government through royalties.

"Hitherto, Tanganyika has been regarded as the Cinderella of the East African colonies. Now with this and recent developments in lead and nickel, it is in the big money," the report concluded.

Dr. Williamson was, according to his student record at McGill, somewhat of a "dud" in English literature, but struck his stride in his third year when he started studies in geology.

Dr. J. J. O'Neill, dean of engineering and head of the department of geological sciences, said that the Ph.D. degree granted Dr. Williamson in 1933 "put the seal on pretty good work." His thesis dealt with the ultra-basic rocks in which diamonds are found.

Born at Montfort, Que., Feb. 10, 1907, of Irish-Canadian parentage, he was a son of B. J. Williamson, now a lumber merchant at Lachute, Que. He attended public school at Point Fortune, Que., high school at McDonald, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, and went one year to model school at St. Andrew's East.

The new diamond magnate's father said he was "very happy" at his son's success. John had been thinking of coming home for a visit for some time, but "he had had some difficulty in getting money out of the country to make the trip."

Mr. Williamson believes his son will come to Canada shortly, however. There are another son and two daughters.

Rust Resisting Oats Developed

Ottawa, Sept. 25 —(CP)— Canada's agricultural scientists have come through with another victory over nature.

This time it's a new man-made variety of oats, so new that it hasn't yet been given a name. Its peculiar feature is that it is able to resist all the strains of stem and crown rust that appear in Canada and which have in some sections forced farmers to abandon oat production and turn to other cereals.

The strain also will resist loose and covered smut which has made its appearance in some oat-growing areas.

The product of 14 years of checking and cross-breeding, the new variety has been developed by plant breeders and pathologists at the Dominion Rust Research Laboratory at Winnipeg.

Officials said it was hoped that by next spring some 1,500 bushels of the new seed may be available for distribution to selected seed growers to increase production of seed to the point where there will be enough for all who want it.

Work on the new variety was started in 1932 when some seed of a South American variety of oats known at Victoria was obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture and was crossed with a sister strain of Vanguard, a variety resistant to certain stem rust and now widely-grown across Canada.

Since then, the breeding work has been painstakingly carried on under the direction of J. N. Welsh of the Winnipeg laboratory staff.

The new strain, if it proves as good as past performances indicate, will save the Canadian farmers millions of dollars.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was on the living room floor looking at the comics in the paper, and pop said, For Peet sake are you still on that comic page? You must of read it 5 times he said.

No sir, only once, I'm just going over it the second time for luck, I said, and pop said, Listen, young man, I want to talk seriously to you. May I ask you to retern the compliment by listening seriously to me? he said.

Yes sir, I said, and pop said, A new school year is starting, how are you going to start it?

I'm going to start it right, I said, and pop said, Just what does that mean?

It means I'm not going to start it wrong, I said, and pop said, That's a noble sentiment, but its outlines are a little hazy. What I'm trying to get at is the importance of doing your homewerk so promptly and thoroughly that you'll be handsomely rewarded by finding that studying has become an easy habit instead of a violent effort, he said.

G, pop, that'll be great, I said, Imagine doing my lessons as easy as reeding the comics instead of as hard as going a errand, oh boy, imagine it, I said, and pop said, Is that as far as you're going to go, imagining it?

No sir, pop, gosh, I said. But the very idea of it is exhawsting enough for the ferst time. So how about if I give the subject a little rest and get up exter erly in the morning and do my homewerk? I said.

How about if you do your homewerk immeeditly, starting at once if not sooner, and then go to bed exter erly just for luck? pop said, and I said, No sir, gosh, I'll do my homewerk right away and then just act naturel.

Being the end of the subject.

FLYERS DEFEAT SWACOS 9-5 TO EVEN SERIES

Six Runs in Seventh Frame Enough to Win Contest by 9-5 Count

"Moose" Mathews' Trenton Flyers evened their Belleville Senior Baseball League semi-final series at the Alemite Field yesterday at one-all when they defeated the Swacos squad 9-5 after overcoming a two-run lead with a six-run splurge in the 7th innings.

The teams meet again this afternoon at 4:30 in the third game of the three-of-five series.

Tall Ernie Smith who started the mound chore for Swacos pitched a steady game for six innings holding the Flyers to two runs and three hits. Then the Flyer bats exploded and rapped the Swaco righthander for five hits and five runs before the veteran "Chuck" Barriage was rushed into the breach.

Barriage was greeted with a double by Holdershaw, good for one run, then struck out the next batter to retire the side. He allowed three hits for two runs over the balance of the nine-innings game.

Goes the Route

Al. Wade, Flyer righthander, went the route for the winners, holding the homesters hitless and scoreless for the first three innings. Swacos got to him for four hits and three runs in the fourth but he steadied down and but for a seventh inning lapse when he allowed three clouts for a single run, pitched steady ball.

Flyers scored single runs in the first and third and Swacos took the lead with their three - run splurge in the fourth. They increased it one in the fifth and appeared headed for their second victory when the Flyer bats broke out in the sixth to score a half dozen runs. Swacos got one back in the seventh and Flyers added another in the eighth.

Dick Fitzpatrick was the hitting gun for the losers, getting a triple and two singles. Rowbotham got a triple and Genereaux a pair of singles.

Holdershaw and White clouted out three hits apiece for the winners with Gill getting a pair. The "Moose" went hitless in two appearances at the plate.

PICTON

Fined for Exceeding Hotel Rates Set by Bd.

Picton, Sept. 26—Charged with exceeding W.P.T.B. rates at "Lakeland Hotel" this summer, Mrs. Philip MacDonald pleaded guilty in Magistrate's Court here yesterday and was fined $50 and costs. Admission was made that the rates had been advanced $2 per room to meet increased costs of operating this season. The case was investigated by the W.P.T.B. at the instance by C. H. McBride, investigator.

Crown Attorney G. T. Walmsley, K.C., said he did not wish to press the charge unduly in view of the fact that Lakeland is one of the finest tourist resorts in the county. Magistrate Wills, too, was prepared to take a more lenient view of the situation "because it is common knowledge that expenses have increased to operate a place like this. For this reason, I do not think we should take a two realistic view."

However, he expressed the opinion that no one should be permitted to make a profit by infringing on the regulations.

PRIMARY LOAD INCREASED

Toronto, Sept. 26 — (CP) — The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario reported today that primary power loads decreased by 41,000 horsepower, or 1.8 per cent, in August compared with the same month is 1945. Combined primary and secondary loads dropped 26,000 horsepower, or one per cent. There were decreases in both the Southern Ontario and Northern Ontario systems but the Thunder Bay area showed an increase.

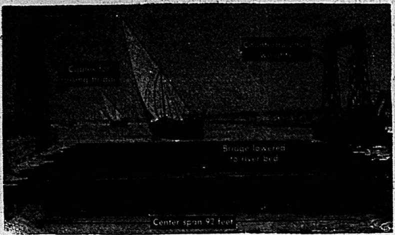
A BELIEVE-IT-OR-NOT BRIDGE — IT SINKS



A sailing boat on the Shatt-el-Arab is about to pass over the 92 foot central span of a new road bridge built to link Basra, Iraq, and Muhamerah, Iran. Tall masts on vessels which generally use the waterway made engineers decide on the present system of raising and lowering as against a more costly high level bridge. Muhamerah is in the strike-troubled southern Iranian oilfield area.

BONNIE G. WINS FREE-FOR-ALL IN STRAIGHT HEATS

Also Has Honor of Pacing Fastest Heat of the Afternoon

Racing patrons of the Belleville Fair had the pleasure of seeing a Futurity winner in action on the last day of the fair, when Bonnie G., owned by Ken Waples of Victoria Harbor and driven by his son, easily won the Free-for-All in straight heats from a limited but highclass field. In the other class Mr. Waples and Harvey Stewart also produced the winner in Stewart Direct in straight heats.

An innovation that delighted the horsemen was the offering of money prizes for the fastest heat of each race and for the fastest heat of the day. "Sandy" Lummiss and Fred Reid offered $5 each and Dr. Wellbanks $10 and Mr. Waples picked up all the marbles.

Peter K. Lee tried to make a race out of the fast class but Bonnie G. had too much foot in the last part of the journey. Miss Bessie Volo, trotter from Brighton, showed more speed in spurt than any of the contestants but she was not staying to her feet and breaks cost her plenty of yardage.

Bonnie G. travelled the best mile of the day in 2:13½ and this was good time considering the heavy rainfall of the night previous.

Trotter Makes it Interesting.

Matilda Henley, another trotter, made it interesting for Stewart Direct but he had too much "brush" at the tail end of the mile for the other contestants. There were many in the infield who enjoyed the judging of the light, heavy and draught horses and the ring was entirely surrounded the greater part of the afternoon. The horse show of the Belleville Fair was certainly one to think about and the exhibitors and the directors are to be congratulated for co-operation. The tandem hitches in the light and heavy classes were excellent and the harness on some of the animals was the best ever seen. The six-horse hitch of the Sawyer-Stoll Lumber Company was a picture with gleaming black harness set off by aluminum trappings. The hackneys took the eye of the crowd and the pony hackneys were certainly trim and well mannered.

Boy Friend Finds Sparklers Costly

By KAY REX
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. —(CP)— The cost of engagements has risen, the boy friend will agree once he has finished pricing diamonds in the neighborhood jewellery store.

At one time a $50-$75 ring would have been satisfactory for the object of his affections, but unless he also provides his fiancee with a magnifying glass to find the diamond, then he had better count on spending $100 dollars at least, probably double that.

And diamond merchants say he had better not put off the happy day, because the longer he hesitates the more he'll have to invest. Some qualities of diamonds have gone up more than others. The small diamonds have risen as much as five and six hundred per cent.

And while production of rough diamonds has fallen far behind schedule, the rush on this precious stone continues as heavy as it was during the war, for returning servicemen are still buying engagement rings and getting married. In addition, as a protecion against possible currency inflation, many people are investing their savings in diamonds.

The situation probably will provement is noticed, because mine labor shortages and lack of machinery have caused further depletion of the stocks.

Officials of the Dominion Diamond Cutting Company here, only one of its kind in Canada, claim unpolished diamonds have been easier to obtain since February when the Prices Board lifted the ceiling. Before that the world market was higher than the ceiling. However, there still is not enough rough material on hand.

The only reserve of diamonds from South Africa during the war was held in Canada, and this now has been shipped back to England, says the head of a well-known jewellery firm. There used to be a large reserve from the 124 mines in South Africa, but apparently this has all been used.

Before the war there were 40,000 diamond cutters in Antwerp and 4,000 in Amsterdam, but this figure has been reduced to 11,000 in Antwerp and 1,000 in Amsterdam. It will be a long time before the situation becomes normal.

Sockeye Salmon Run Greatest In Many Years

By FRED MURPHY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New Westminster, B.C., Sept. 26 (CP)—Fraser River sockeye salmon fishermen are just completing their most successful season in four years with a total catch that will bring them a gross revenue of possibly more than $4,000,000.

Fishing for sockeye salmon on the Fraser was closed indefinitely at noon today and will not reopen unless such action is found advisable by the Pacific International Salmon Commission.

More than 3,000 gill net boats, many of them operated by veterans of the Second Great War, participated in the rich hauls as the great Adams River sockeye run moved up the Fraser River to spawning grounds.

The Adams River run, the largest of the Fraser River, is estimated to have numbered more than twelve million fish this year.

Canadian fishermen had caught almost 3,700,000 by noon on Monday and were expected to run this total to more than 4,000,000 fish. Another 4,000,000 were believed to have escaped the fishermen's nets and to have continued up the Fraser to the Adams River, a tributary of the larger stream, where they will spawn.

The salmon runs are in four year "cycles" and the great Adams River run will not come back up the Fraser River until 1950.

Discover Spot Where Jesuits Were Martyred

Waubaushene, Ont., Sept. —(CP)— A small shrine built of field stones and irregular rows of stakes set in the middle of a ten -acre plot of rough pastureland marks a spot which is sacred to the Roman Catholic faith and of prime importance to Canadian history.

It is the site of the old Huron fort of St. Ignace where the Jesuit martyr saints, Jean de Brebeuf and Gabriel Lalemant, Iroquois raiders who sacked the fort and massacred its 400 Huron defenders in March, 1649.

A party under the direction of Wilfred W. Jury, curator of the University of Western Ontario's museum of Indian archaeology, has located the long-sought fort on a plateau overlooking the Sturgeon River near this Simcoe county town.

Using Indian methods of construction, the party is restoring the settlement according to plans drawn up by Mr. Jury after extensive research.

Each of the 2,800-odd stakes in the field marks a post-hole in the old village detected discolorations in the earth which provided archaeologists with evidence of 300-year-old digging operations.

Incomplete at the time of its destruction, the fort was built with the advisory assistance of the Jesuits but showed no change in the Huron technique of construction or living habits. Long houses, now being rebuilt,housed more than 100 people in two-tiered bunks with cooking fireplaces provided for every two families.

SKILFUL BUILDERS

The Hurons building skill was underlined by the knowledge that they frequently moved from site to site, abandoning such villages without a qualm and erecting new ones when such a move was dictated by economic or security considerations.

The plateau housing the village surrounded on three sides by ravines forming a giant letter U and with a double palisade on the exposed side, corresponds exactly with descriptions of St. Ignace by Father Paul Ragueneau, the Jesuit Superior, who wrote of the tragedy of the weeks after it occurred.

Discovery of the site of St. Ignace ends a 100-year search carried on spasmodically by a number of archaeologists and historians, during which several erroneous claims of its discovery were made at various points in Simcoe county. One of these sites later proved to be Fort St. Louis, another of the chain of bastions designed to keep the Iroquois out of the Huron-Jesuit territory.

The search, based on the Midland area where the ruins of Fort. Ste. Marie had been discovered many years earlier, also uncovered a site which appeared to tally with descriptions of St. Ignace but which was disqualified when it was found out contain thick ash deposits which could not have been found in a new village. The present site of St. Ignace was first discovered in 1932.

MORE WORK FOR CRABS

Small Point, Me., Sept. 26 —(AP)—A "self-canning" Maine sea crab imprisoned in a small-necked pickle jar was hauled in Tuesday with John Eastman's catch of fish. The crab, Eastman estimated, appeared well fed from marine life. So he tossed crab and jar back in — to encourage "crabs to can themselves."

TORONTO ARGOS RALLY TO DRAW WITH HAMILTON

Tirple - Threat Joe Krol Boots Last Point in 15 to 15 Tie

Hamilton, Sept. 26 —(CP)— The Dominion Champion Toronto Argonauts had to come from behind with triple-threat Joe Krol booting a point on the last play of the game to gain a 15-15 tie with the Hamilton Tigers last night in a Senior Interprovincial Rugby League game that attracted more than 6,000 fans to the Civic Stadium.

Krol not only booted the tying point for Argos—he scored two touchdowns, and kicked two converts, for a total of 13 of the Argo points. His great showing resulted in his being mobbed by Hamilton youngsters who got to know him well during a previous stay here, and they carried him off the field shoulder-high.

The Argos, who'd blocked a convert to beat Ottawa by one point last Saturday, were trailing 7-2 at the first quarter last night, by 13-8 at the half, and squeezed into a 14-14 tie at the three-quarter mark. The Tigers were really travelling and they would have given Argos their first defeat had it not been for a fumble by Scotty Wright which gave Argos their first two points and a gift of 25 yards on penalties in the third quarter.

Disantes Leads Attack

Dan Disantes led the Tiger attack, the former Philadelphia Eagle passing perfectly, earning considerable yardage in running back kick, and showing to great effect in plunging. Tiger's great improvement in fact was along the line where they showed their best interference to date, and the interference and blocking they put up had the Argo supporters vastly worried.

While Wright and Smith were matching the kicking of Argos' Krol and Steve Karrys, Dick Groom, hefty outside wing for Tigers, gave the Toronto speedsters no end of trouble.

Play was rough along the line with no quarter asked but the only casualty was when Steve Chamko, the Tiger middle, was taken off the field in the final few minutes with what appeared to be a bad leg injury.

WILL STUDY BRIEFS

Toronto, Sept. 25 — (CP) — C. M. Meek, chairman of the Milk Board of Ontario, said last night briefs presented to the Board by milk producer, distributor and consumer representatives at a hearing today would be studied and a decision made within a few days regarding price of milk in Ontario. This statement followed presentation of the consumers' brief by Mayor Robert Saunders. He argued that a total increase of four cents a quart in the price of milk would result if increases claimed by producers and distributors are granted.

INDIANS BEAT WINDSOR 8-1 BUT LOSE BILL STUKUS

Canny Quarterback Suffers Broken Wrist in Early Part of Contest

Toronto, Sept. 26. (CP)—Toronto Indians today were back in an accustomed spot, leading the Senior Ontario Rugby Unon as a result of beating Windsor Rockets 8-1 last night. But the Indians did not take their victory with great glee, because it probably cost them the services of canny quarterback Bill Stukus for the rest of the season.

Stukus, a powerhouse in the Indians' two previous victories against their city rivals, Balmy Beach, was injured in the first quarter as the Red Shirts entertained the Rockets under the lights at Oakwood Stadium, with about 4,000 fans watching. Later it was learned Bill suffered a fractured left wrist and that the injury may leave the Brian Timmis-coached team without its smartest playmaker for the balance of the schedule.

But stepping into his brother's boots, Annis Stukus came to Indians' rescue by booting two field goals for six of the Indians' total points. Annis directed the team well enough with the wealth of his 11 years' grid experience to keep the Rockets from garnering more than a single point.

Although the Rockets were outmanoeuvred and out-played for most of the game their smart young halfback, Joe Scislowski, brought the crowd to its feet as he made brilliant runs that netted the Windsor team many yards.

After a scoreless first quarter play went almost halfway through the second stanza before Stukus booted his first from 35 yards out. Rockets then made their only serious threat when Buck Reaume lifted a long kick to the deadline from the Indian 45 for Windsor's point.

Stukus replied minutes later with another field goal from 31 yards. The other Indian points came in the last period on a mix-up play that finally was credited to Jack Gray, as he tackled Alton Reid for a safety touch.

Union Picket Boat "Whisper" Seized by Police

Hamilton, Sept. 26 (CP)—One Steel Company of Canada employee is in hospital today and eight crew members of the United Steel Workers of America (CIO) are charged with assault and besetting as a result of an incident in the Burlington ship canal. The union picket boat "whisper" was seized by police.

Rocks were thrown and blows were exchanged as strikers foiled an attempt by the company to land approximaely 75 men from the strike-bound plant and take back a similar number from Burlington across the harbor. As the Stelco boat docked, 60 pickets forced it back into the lake and the men who were prepared to go aboard dispersed and returned to their homes.

Bail was set at $1,000 for each of the eight crew members of the picket boat who were arrested. Police gave the names of the eight as: Ben Stranga, 22; Layfayette Young, 35; Andy Pxytula, 42; Dominic Costenino, 18; Peter Fithowski, 23; Steve Schewchuk, 18; and James R. Hatch, 19.

PRINCESS LEADS DANCING RIVAL

Aberdeen, Scotland —(CP)— Princess Elizabeth's enthusiasm for Highland and Scottish country dancing has led to a widespread revival of traditional dances throughout Scotland.

She has spent much of her spare time studying and practising the intricate movements of many of the older dances and when she attended an all-Scottish recital here she surprised experts with her specialized knowledge.

She requested "Mrs. Stewart's Strathspey," an old dance, only recently discovered and little known.

MONTREAL TWO GAMES UP ON SYRACUSE CHIEFS

Marvin Rackley Doubles in the Sixth With Bases Loaded

Syracuse, N.Y., Sept. 26. (AP) Montreal Royals hope to wind up the International League Governors Cup play-offs tonight by beating Syracuse Chiefs for the fourth straight time. The Chiefs took the opening game of the Best-of-seven game series, but now have dropped three in a row.

The latest Montreal triumph came last night, 7 to 4, as Marvin Rackley doubled in the sixth with the bases loaded. The hit cleaned the bases and shattered a 3-3 tie. However, it took Chet Kehn's relief pitching to pull Montreal through. He replaced Steve Nagy in the eighth when the Chiefs loaded the sacks with two out and throttled Syracuse's last hope.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

(By The Canadian Press)

There are plenty of critics who claim rulemakers have ruined hockey in recent years but the fellows who lay their cash on the line apparently are satisfied with the new streamlined style. Anyway they're battling each other for places in the lineup for season subscribers' seats all around the National Hockey League circuit.

Boston officials announce 12,000 season tickets have been sold for home games of the Bruins with only about 2,000 seats remaining for sale on the morning of each game. In Toronto they halted the subscribers' total of 8,000 so that thousands of fans who come from all parts of Ontario to see the Leafs could be accommodated.

The advance contingent of the Bruins arrived at Hershey, Pa., yesterday for training but spent the day lining up living quarters. Dit Clapper will send the boys through their initial practice session today and next week scrimmages are planned with Hershey Bears, Boston American League farm club.

Chicago Black Hawks moved into the west's hottest hockey incubator when they signed a 3-year agreement to sponsor the Winnipeg Rangers. The hookup not only includes the junior Rangers but also juveniles, midgets and bantams operated by the club. It's good news for the Rangers but sad tidings for Moose Jaw, Sask., as manager Bill Tobin said the Hawks had relinquished arrangements to sponsor the Canucks there.

Meanwhile at Regina, Hawk coach Johnny Gottselig was trying to figure if he's running a team or a league as he prepared to handle 67 players expected to check in today. Johnny avers that it will be a young man's team with defenceman Reg Hamilton the "didderer" at 34. With youngsters such as Leo Riese, up from Kansas City Play-mors, after rearguard posts, Reg will have to hustle to hold his job.

Hockey was secondary news at the Winnipeg camp of New York Rangers where it was announced centre Alf Pike had become the father of twins — a boy and a girl. That makes three girls and one boy for the Pikes and Mrs. Pike hopes that junior will follow in Alf's footseeps and be a Ranger.

Revised contracts — for the extended 60-game schedule and including new player-benefit clauses — only reached Montreal Canadiens camp a couple of days back but manager Frank Selke announces six players have signed already. Toe Blake, Elmer Lach, Butch Bouchard, Bill Durnan, Ken Mosdell and Jimmy Peters have agreed to terms.

Harry Watson checked in from Detroit Red Wings to bolster the wobbly defence of Toronto Maple Leafs in training at St. Catharines, Ont. Manager Conn Smythe figures if anybody can convert the flashy Mr. Ward into a rearguard it's coach Hap Day whom he rates "the best defence coach in the world."

His main worry is his new assignment but high on Watson's list is a home for his wife and family. He brought them from Saskatoon to Detroit last January and managed to find "digs"—but he's heard of Toronto's acute housing shortage and would be satisfied with a room or two.

Just when the experts seemed to be running out of trick names for forward lines, Smythe came up with the "Flying Forts" for his Fort William-born trio of Gaye Stewart, Bud Poile and Gus Bodnar.

Cards, Dodgers Still a Game Apart as Both Contenders In N.L. Race Lose, 3 Games Remain

St. Louis Stopped by Reds and Phillies Win Weird One From Brooklyn

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

It is doubtful today of any major league baseball manager ever bowed out with more satisfaction than William B. (Wilkinsburg Bill) McKechnie, erstwhile boss of Cincinnati Reds.

McKechnie managed his last game for the Reds last night. He was "fired" three days ago. His final act as the Redleg boss was to mastermind the Reds to a 6-0 victory over St. Louis Cardinals—an act which might cause Brooklyn Dodgers—a team Bill admits he dislikes—to nose out the Cards for the National League flag.

McKechnie knew full well that the Dodgers had lost 11-9, to Philadelphia Phillies. A St. Louis victory would just about seal Brooklyn's pennant hopes.

He nominated Bucky Walters, always a tough cookie for the Cards, to pitch. Walters pitched one of the finest games of the season to blank the Birds with seven hits. Twice McKechnie signalled for sacrifices and each time it paid off with runs.

Brooklyn, showing signs of cracking, blew a three-run lead in the ninth when the Phils came up with five runs to win their 11-9 thriller. Altogether the Dodgers used eight pitchers to set a new league record.

Judd Lifted in Fifth

Lefty Oscar Judd of Ingersoll, Ontario, a nemesis for both Dodgers and Cards all season, started for the Phils with a record of 11 wins and 12 losses. He previously had beaten the Dodgers twice and the Cards four times and for a while seemed on his way to victory when the Phils led 5-1 at the end of 3 1-2 innings by virtue of the Canadian's heavy hitting.

Judd was nicked for a run in the first inning. But in the Phils half, Judd plastered one of Ralph Branca's slants for an inside-the-park homer to tie the score 1-1.

In the fourth Judd singled with the bases loaded to drive home two runners. But Oscar couldn't hold the lead and was lifted in the fifth inning with the score tied 5-5.

The Canadian is one of the leading hitting pitchers in the National League and his two hits yesterday boosted his batting average well over the .300 mark.

Tie Cubs For Third

Scoring five runs in the first inning, Boston Braves deadlocked the Cubs for third place by defeating New York Giants 6-5. The Cubs meanwhile last a 16-inning game to Pittsburgh, also 6-5.

Bobby Feller fanned 10 to boost his season's strikeout total to 337, only six short of Rube Waddell's listed record, but poor hitting support caused him to drop a 4-1 decision to Chicago White Sox.

Despite Hank Greenbergs 42nd home run, Detroit Tigers were beaten by St. Louis Browns' 8-7. Joe Dobson pitched the American League champion Boston Red Sox to their 103rd victory with a 5.2 win over New York Yankees.

The Athletics executed a triple play but lost a doubleheader to Washington 6-3 and 7-4.

Niagara Falls Houcks defeated Toronto Columbus 3-0, in a game in the O.B.A. Senior "A" playdowns Wednesday night. Worral of Houcks gave up four scattered hits and struck out seven.

In the first game of the O.B.A. Senior "B" semi-finals, London Majors defeated Windsor Auto Wreckers 2-1.

Simcoe Reformer Cubs evened the O.B.A. Juvenile "B" third-round playoff series to one game apiece by defeating Petrolia Young Oilers, 3-1. King of Simcoe gave up four hits and struck out 11.

Toronto Columbus Juniors eliminated Niagara Falls Fioris from the O.B.A. semi-finals by defeating them 4-3, taking their series in two straight games.

Toronto Lizzies defeated Hamilton Crawfords 5-4, to force a third game for the right to enter the final round for the O.B.A.

By George H. C

Reports were circulated in the city yesterday that the Toronto Lizzies, Queen City junior softball champs, had pulled a "fast" one on the Goodman Juniors by stating they were unable to play here today because of certain reasons and agreed to play the second game of the OASA junior semi-finals series here a week today. The reason, the rumorists stated, was because several members of the Lizzies squad play baseball for the Lizzies Juvenile team which is now in the throes of OBA playdowns.

• • •

That was not the case however, as the Lizzies members are of Jewish extraction and religious obligations made it necessary for them to be in Toronto by sundown tonight. It was noted that the Lizzie Juveniles were slated to play in Oshawa this afternoon at 5.30 but called the game off for the same reason.

• • •

At the same time it is more or less interesting to note that had the Jewish holiday not occurred today, what would the Toronto squad have done? As was stated before, several members of the softball squad play for the juve baseballers. The baseball squad was scheduled for Oshawa at 5.30 today and the softballers here at three o'clock.

• • •

There is the possibility that the Lizzie softball squad are of the impression they can take our prides in an hour-length game and be in Oshawa at 5.30 for the baseball tilt, but that is beyond the realm of possibility unless the Lizzies' sponsors have jet-propelled transports. After the Hamilton fiasco of last year, the Goodman management would be well advised to look into matters before they play the second tilt. Metropolitan softball interests are not doing the game any good, especially when the playoff chips are down with outside centres.

"Soup" Campbell, Oshawa scribe still has the impression so he writes that "As OASA champions go, Belleville is a mediocre softball team." He proudly reiterates that statement after learning that the Toronto Lizzies had set the local kids back 11-1 in the first game of their two-of-three series. He remembers no doubt that this "mediocre" team bumped off his Harmony Millionaires kids, Oshawa junior champions in two straight games. Tsk, tsk, perhaps that fact had something to do with his opinion of the calibre of the Belleville squad.

• • •

There will not be a special train chartered on Saturday for the Belleville-Ottawa game at Kingston, it was learned today. The majority of fans who will attend the game will motor to the game and Kiwanis team officials felt that the distance is too short to warrant the chartering of railway transportation. In addition the regular

ST. KITTS SHOWS TOO MUCH POWER FOR QUEBECERS

Athletics Win 19-12 and Will Play Second Game of Semi-Finals Friday

By PIERRE LE MOYNE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Quebec, Sept. 26 — (CP)—St. Catharines Athletics had just too much power for the Quebec Mountaineers last night as they trimmed the Quebeckers 19-12 to take a one-game lead in the best-of-three series for the Eastern Canada senior lacrosse championship.

The teams meet here again Friday night and if a third game is necessary it will be played here Saturday. Winner of the series will engage New Westminster, B. C. Salmonbellies in the Dominion finals for the Mann Cup.

The speedy Ontario champs repeatedly tied the Quebeckers up with smooth passing plays and a rugged defence. P. Smith, S. Scott and J. McMahon, each with four goals, paced the winners while goalie D. Favell played a bang-up game between the pipes repulsing many a determined Quebec attack.

The Quebec senior champions got a healthy taste of the Athletics' power in the first stanza when the St. Catharines snipers slipped four tallies past goalie

Athletic Commission wouldn't believe him, Marty Servo of Schenectady, N.Y., relinquished his world welterweight title yesterday because of his damaged nose after his personal physician advised him to quit the ring. Servo, 26, wrested the crown from Freddy Cochrane last February, then suffered the nose injury when knocked out by Rocky Graziano in a non-title bout last March. Since then he has been forced to ask postponement twice of his title match with Ray Robinson.

New York, Sept. 26 —(CP)— Des Moines, Iowa, which has harbored many big leaguers in the past, hasn't a baseball park now, but the 40 and 8 Club expects to have 20,000 fans out to see Bob Feller and his touring team there ... here's how: The club "borrowed" Birdland Park from the park board for a day. Then it borrowed several thousand knockdown bleachers from the Iowa State Fair and more from Iowa State College . . . these will surround the playing field and a snow fence will be erected to make it a "park" where tickets can be sold. . . . profits from this venture will be used to build a real ball park in Des Moines.

20 ARRESTED IN RAID

Toronto, Sept. 26 —(CP)— Police arrived at an alleged gaming house on Elizabeth Street in Chinatown late Tuesday night, encountered a lookout who gave the alarm, found an automatic door had been reinforced with iron bars, and then used a sledgehammer to gain entry and arrest 20 persons, three of whom were charged with keeping a gaming house.

Vancouver, Sept. 26 —(CP)— At 14 he had never skated. At 19 he was playing for the Stanley Cup. That was Cy Griffis, one of Canada's all time hockey greats, who shone as a rover with the famous Kenora Thistles from 1900 to 1906 and as a defenceman in the "Patrick Empire" on the West Coast from 1911 to 1919.

In an exclusive interview with The Canadian Press Mr. Griffis recalled some historic events of early hockey.

As a 14-year-old boy who had just moved to Kenora from Kansas (via St. Catharines, Ont.) he decided he was going to play hockey. To learn to skate he practised two hours every night for two winters. Finally, in 1900 he made the team at the age of 17 and two years later was a star on the team that played the Ottawa "Silver Seven" for the Stanley Cup.

Kenora won the first game of the series 9-3 but, he claimed, a combination of several inches of water put on the ice deliberately and indifference on the part of the referees cost the Thistles the cup.

He told of the first time Fred "Cyclone" Taylor joined the Portage La Prairie (Man.) club. After a few games he was "fired" because his speed broke up all his team's passing plays. Of Taylor's famous goal made skating backwards, Griffis says that Cyclone skated forward most of the way and turned around just before reaching the goal.

He believes the style of hockey played today is just as interesting as in the old days but that it is more scientific. Individual rushes and stickhandling were the forte of a star of his day, while teamwork is important today. Placing of lines on the ice and revision of offside rules make for a faster moving puck and a slower moving man nowadays.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

Open your mouth in a bridge game without putting your foot in it. All you have to do is tell your partner only what he does not already know. It is easy to do. You do it with the bidding words.

What does your partner know before you have said anything? He must assume you have your share of everything important in a pack. Your average, that is; one-fourth of what a pack contains.

A pack contains 52 cards. Your share is 13 of them. The tricks that can be taken in any deal are 13. Your share is three of them. There are four aces (sure tricks). Your share is one of them.

A pack contains 12 high cards (aces, kings, queens.) Your share is three of them. Of 13 cards in each suit, your share is one in each.

Thus, you are entitled to 13 cards, three tricks, one sure trick, three high cards, three cards in each suit, one face in each suit. That much your partner expects of you in each deal.

Times are when you have less in this and that. Times are when you have less in this and more in that. Times are when you have more in most of these items. Your bidding words will tell your partner.

One of the words in the bidding vocabulary is pass. When you have no more than your partner expects, pass is the word you should use. It merely says: "I have nothing new to tell you."

When you do not use the word pass, you will use a number and a denomination (some suit or no-trump.) The fact that you did not use the word pass will tell him that you have more of this or that.

You are the dealer with this hand:

♠10 5 3
♥9 8 6 2
♦A Q 7
♣K J 4

You have no more than your average in all essential items. They are the shares your partner expects you to have. Tell him you have no more than he expects. Say pass. Or your friends may say it with flowers.

Hollywood Column

Hollywood, Sept. 26 —(AP)— Attention, movie stars: Are you tired of ermine-lined swimming pools, of counting $1,000 bills far into the night? Then listen to Bonita Granville.

The art of sliding from stardom to oblivion is herein described by Bonita, who, despite her youth, has done a good job of staying around these many years. Here's the fastest route to nonentity:

1. Tell everyone who will listen that you can act rings around Clark Gable or Bette Davis.
2. No matter how much money you're making, ask for more.
3. Don't hesitate to criticize all the big stars and directors.
4. Be as difficult as possible with the cameraman and make-up man.
5. Tear up all fan mail unopened and give the brush-off to autograph seekers.
6. Always tell your director how a scene should be played.
7. Date as many people as possible, married or unmarried, and show up at all the night spots.
8. Play gin rummy with your bosses and forget to pay your losings.
9. Pick a fight with Errol Flynn.
10. Shun the press and press agents. You'll get so mysterious people will forget about you.

Sam Goldwyn is making sure his "Earth and High Heaven" will have an authentic Canadian background. Screen writer Howard Koch is doing research in Montreal, aided by the book's writer, Gwethalyn Graham.

With so many Westerns in production, Indians are on the scarcity list. The "Last of the Redmen" call sheet lists authentic Indians as well as such names as Kelly, Olson and Levine.

In Manhattan

By FRANK HINDS

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Sept. 21. (CP) — Broadway and Hollywood bigwigs are primping their laurels anxiously these days because "the red coats are coming", but there's no cause for alarm this side of the footlights.

Hot on the heels of last season's brilliant old Vic visit to New York, John Gielgud is planning a February tour of Canada and the United States with his English Company.

Gielgud, fresh from a successful London engagement in the Rodney Ackland version of Dostoievsky's "Crime and Punishment", was seen on this side in 1936 in his memorable "Hamlet". This time he plans a 6-week New York run and a two—week Canadian tour with William Congreve's "Love for Love" and Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Ernest."

The most anticipated event of the Broadway season is Noel Coward's "Present Laughter". It will star Cliftou Webb, the lead in Coward's triple-sex "Blithe Spirit" which toured Canada two seasons ago. Lenore Corbett, one of the stars of the original British production of "Blithe Spirit", is to make her Broadway debut shortly in the musical "Park Avenue".

Another British play—Terence Rattigan's "O Mistress Mine"—was an established hit when the Lunts closed it down for the Summer. It's back on Broadway and the S.R.O. signs are up every night. Rattigan's "The Winslow Boy", a London success, also is to be produced in New York this season.

"Hidden Horizon", an adaptation of British Agatha Christie's thriller, opens this week.

Westward Ho

The Hollywood scene, which long has profited from transfusions of British talent, is importing new British stars by the constellation.

The immigration block which arose from Producer Arthur Rank's success, "The Seventh Veil", is a case in point. Heroine Ann Todd now is in New York en route to the west coast with a fat contract. Hero James Mason is considering American offers.

Actress Margaret Lockwood has signed with a Hollywood factory and Rex Harrison won his America spurs with his "Anna and the King of Siam', in spite of miscasting.

Rank's production of the Shaw "Caesar and Cleopatra" is jamming the Astor Theatre in Times Square, while his "Brief Encounter" shares critical honors of the season with "Henry V.". Lawrence Audrain, formerly of Winnipeg and American agent for Rank's "prestige" films, says the Laurence Olivier "Henry" is likely to run for years. A forthcoming rank production, "Johnny Frenchman," features Paul Dupuis of Montreal, a CBC war correspondent who was drafted into the part while in England.

Doctor Advises Marty Servo To Quit the Ring

(By The Canadian Press)

Although the New York State Athletic Commission wouldn't believe him, Marty Servo of Schenectady, N.Y., relinquished his world welterweight title yesterday because of his damaged nose after his personal physician advised him to quit the ring. Servo, 26, wrested the crown from Freddy Cochrane last February, then suffered the nose injury when knocked out by Rocky Graziano in a non-title bout last March. Since then he has been forced to ask postponement twice of his title match with Ray Robinson.

Robinson, now slated to meet Beau Jack for the welterweight honors, last night kayoed Sid Miller of Youngstown, O., in the third frame of a scheduled 10-rounder at Elizabeth, N.J.

Holding off the challenges of Forbes Chief, Goose Bay captured both heats of the $3,000 two gait farm stake in the Lexington, Ky., trots yesterday. In the international match race for aged horses, honors were divided in two starts by the 15-year-old Ouster Volo and the 14-year-old Tracey Hanover. They race again today.

Babe Didrikson Zaharias of Denver was the lone favorite to survive yesterday's opening rounds of the National Women's Amateur Golf Tournament at Tulsa, Okla. She defeated Peggy Kirk of Findlay, O., 4 and 3.

Chicago Cubs yesterday returned pitcher Hal Manders to the Bubbalo club of the International League after using him in two games during recent weeks. Manders, a cousin of fire-baller Bob Feller of Cleveland Indians, formerly played with Detroit Tigers for 2 1-2 years.

Reginald Horne, veteran British golfer, was eliminated yesterday in a first-round upset in the match play tournament for the British pro championship at Liverpool. One of 64 starters, Horne was beaten by W. E. Booy of Fulford Heath 2 and 1.

The one match in the All-America pro football conference yesterday resulted in a 38-35 win by Chicago Rockets over Buffalo Bisons.

William Russel, trainer and James G. Fair, breeder, owner and trainer, were suspended in Toronto yesterday by Thorncliffe racing stewards, following allegedly positive results of saliva tests made on horses trained by them. The tests were made on Pies Pat, a winner Monday and on Butler's Pride, which finished second in its race.

MINK COAT

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

She and Dennis had parted coldly for one thing. That fact of course made her subsequent conduct more understandable. There had been a bad day; Isabel hated to remember it. Baby Catherine had been ill with one of the sudden sore-throat-and-fever upsets to which she was subject; Isabel nervous and resentful. She had resented the promptitude with which Dennis had volunteered; as an engineer he had known himself to be instantly needed and had been among the first to go. But there were scores of other engineers! She had resented being forced into the role of lonely wife; being expected to go on living either in a dark old house with her husband's mother and two exacting babies, or in her own lonely apartment in Sacramento Street. It would be hard to get nursery help, and there was little enough to do with her freedom when she did manage a few free hours.

She had not gone down to the ferry to say good-by to Dennis; his mother and Pussy had been his escort. Isabel had remained, smoldering and unhappy in Catherine's room, looking out from the upstairs front-room bay window into a street swept with dull rain.

"Write me, dear," she had said composedly, with her parting kiss. Dennis had given her a great hug; he had been unable to speak as he had turned away to kneel beside Catherine's bed and kiss the hot little languid hand.

Then dull days, dull days, one after another. And then the episode of Nancy Strait, and idle laughing afternoons in the cocktail lounges and bars, meeting more people all the time, making new friends. Coming home glowing with excitement one afternoon to help with the children's baths and supper and presently say: "Nancy—you met her, you know, Mrs. Strait?—wants me to go to New York with her! I can't, of course, it would put altogether too much on you, Mom, with the children and all, but it was sweet of her to want me, just the same. I mean, even if we could get Fanny to take them out every day I wouldn't feel right ,although it would only be for three or four weeks. I've never been to New York, or anywhere, but I told her that it was out of the question. At least, I said it was now. She isn't even sure she's going yet—she just spoke of it...."

Just packing her bag, just meeting Nancy at the ferry and going across the smoothly flowing waters of the bay had been a thrill; the comfortable spacious bedroom on the Streamliner had been a thrill; Chicago powdered with snow, and the warm big dining room with windows looking on the Lake Shore Drive—the mere beginnings of the trip had been sheer joy!

But even Isabel's fresh appreciation and wildest dreams had not compassed what was to follow. New York was not the great glittering unfriendly place it might have been; she herself not the wistfully admiring outsider that she had expected to be.

The great city was at her feet; her own. The jewel-like shops, the restaurants and theatres, hers; the smartest saleswoman of the very smartest fur establishment was telling her that the silky dark miracle of mink that she was wearing was the handsomest coat in town.

Every woman in her new circle had by now seen the coat, naturally, and countless other women had seen it in the street, and pretended, as they went by, not to notice it. So what?

So what? Well, this coat commanded respect. It opened the velvet cords that shut off exclusive dining rooms; it was at home in opera boxes. Isabel's new friends agreed that it was divine—but pretty hot for San Francisco, wasn't it? They slipped it on; several told her that Elsie Patton, now dead by her own hand, had had one of the new golden mink. Nobody liked golden mink, it was just a craze, they all agreed, so there was no prick about that.

But some rather frank remarks disturbed and humiliated Isabel, though she took them smiling, with her chin up. Millie Tait told her that Caroline Parker was going to repeat to Isabel something that Millie had reputedly said.

"I didn't say it," said Millie. "But I heard it said. And I gave the woman who said it a piece of my mind."

"Was it so awful?" Isabel asked idly.

"No, it wasn't so awful, but it was sort of mean, and it made me mad."

"Forget it then, Mrs. Tait." Isabel really liked Mrs. Tait, and she was afraid of being hurt.

"I'll tell you exactly what it was, and you can forget it. She looked at you at the symphony Friday afternoon and she said, 'A good deal for Avery to get for a mink coat.'"

"Oh, I got more than the coat," Isabel observed serenely, hating the speaker, the coat, and herself about equally at the moment.

"Now listen," said Millie, "we all know you're crazy about Avery. I'll tell you what — I'm for security."

"Security?" Isabel echoed, inwardly uneasy.

"Well, isn't it a wonderful feeling? As one gets on, you know. Of course you're not getting on, nor anywhere near it. But I mean—that's what everyone wants. I know I do. I know that when Ronny talks money troubles I almost go crazy. I mean, we waste so much. And not to feel sure."

The meaning of this speech did not fully dawn on Isabel until some time after this conversation had closed. Then she began to analyze it, to wonder exactly what Millie had meant. Obviously she had meant that Isabel had married Avery for the delightful security of his wealth.

Well, had she? She hadn't married him for a mink coat, but would she have looked at Avery if he had not had a penny to his name, if he had just been one of many—say, army captains or navy commanders who were beginning to circulate through all social gatherings? If he hadn't had that Russian leather wallet its smart gold monogram, that wallet always stuffed with bills? If his worn pigskin gloves hadn't found it so easy to ruffle through those bills and pull them out,—tens, twenties, fifties.

Suppose he'd had to consider the cost, in those delirious first days of their friendship, those first days of honeymoon? Suppose the theatre seats had been far back in the rows where the double letters began, and the little intimate meals had been at some dollar table d'hote? Suppose there hadn't been any orchids, any emeralds, any glittering clips and coral and pearl evening bag?

Well, there had been all these things and a thousand more, and behind them a sophisticated, handsome man whose adoration of her had commenced almost at the moment he first had seen her—that moment in the night club, when the lights and the music and the crowd had all conspired to bewilder her senses, and when her innocent, expressionless look over her dancing partner's shoulder had first fallen on Avery Latimer.

He had come over to her table, when the dance ended; he was introduced. He squared his chair about and began to talk to her.

"This isn't your first look at New York, Mrs. Hardisty?"

"It is. My very first."

"But what's the answer?"

"Well, being brought up in Sutro's Hill, perhaps. And then I'm married, you know. My husband is a San Francisco engineer. We have two little girls."

And Avery's glance, that measuring reproachful male glance that she remembered for days, and his indignant "Now you've spoiled everything!"

What a scared, awed, breathlessly admiring little simpleton she had been then, admiring everything, and especially Avery. But what was she supposed to do—put him off with a prim, "I think Nancy and I will have a most interesting visit, Mr. Latimer. But we are going to the Natural History Museum and to the Zoo. We have been at the Metropolitan all day, and are going to a lecture at Town Hall tonight. But while my husband is away it might be wiser if I were not seen out with gentlemen."

No woman could have treated Avery that way. Avery was too dynamic, too confident, too thoroughly entertaining. If all this had happened at home, in the familiar environment of San Francisco, perhaps indeed she might have swept away his admiration as she had that of other men, since high-school days. But New York had been the setting for this thrilling chapter in her life; the green sweet feathery trees in the park, the long exquisite vista of the Avenue, hilariously viewed from the top of a bus; the theatre crowd on Broadway, the newness of wonderful restaurants and shops, the airy big hotel rooms with the city lying below their windows.

"Oh, no wonder, no wonder, no wonder I lost my head!" she said aloud, more than once, in these later days when she was thrown upon her own resources again, and Avery had disappeared behind the smoky, distant curtain that was war, as Dennis had. Once again the dull days began to go slowly by, and Isabel could look back to the time of the old life, and think that even that was more full than this.

There were women's luncheons; there was Red Cross work. But her children were infinitely less close to her now, when Yelta's formidable figure was always between them, than they had been then, and the companionship of old Mrs. Hardisty Isabel missed, too. Dennis's mother had perhaps not been exciting, but she had always been friendly and helpful, and interesting in a mild, dignified way.

Of course, Dennis had never been rich, never would be probably, didn't care very much either way. There was always that to consider. Isabel was rich now. She never could quite grasp that. She must keep it in mind.

One day when Avery had been gone for several weeks, she asked her older daughter how she would like to go and see Grandma.

"Wiff Yelta?" Pussy speculated, ruminating.

"No, with me. With Mummy. We'd telephone first, and go in for lunch. Then you and Catherine could take your naps in Daddy's room, and Mummy would do some shopping."

Pussy answered this by beginning to dance up and down and sing. Catherine clumsily followed suit; Yelta, coming in to take them off to bed, regarded their performances with a jaundiced eye; they always acted this crazy way if trusted too long to their mother.

"On Thursday I'm taking them in to have luncheon with their father's mother, Yelta."

"After their naps, madam, at three?" Yelta opined.

"No, in the morning. About half-past ten. They'll take their naps there."

"They'll not sleep a wink there," said Yelta, with a kindly smile for the younger woman's optimism and a shake of her tightly braided head.

"Well, we'll try," Isabel answered lightly, smiling in return, but swallowing at the same time.

"They could have their regular lunch here, madam, what they're accustomed to," Yelta offered smoothly, "and if we had it a little early you'd still be in time to join their grandmother at a one-o'clock lunch. Or she might put her lunch off until one-thirty. I'm sure she would. She seems such a pleasant lady."

"Well, I think we'll try it my way and see how it goes," Isabel persisted, with a cordial wish that Yelta would drop dead.

"I could keep Catherine here, I'd take her to Miss Arnold's," Yelta suggested. Her Thursday afternoons were spent in the company of a friend who occasionally boarded aristocratic babies and their nurses during family crises.

"Oh, I think I'll take them both. She loves to see them. It will break up their routine of course," Isabel conceded, iron anger rising within her, "but one wild day with Mummy won't matter."

"It matters if they're all upset for several days, and come back with those nasty San Francisco colds," Yelta reminded her pleasantly in a very quiet tone.

"Oh, and I must send these checks," Isabel said in an undertone, busying herself again with the papers on her desk. "When you take them out this afternoon I wish you'd go as far as the postbox and get these mailed. Poor Yeats is so miserable I don't like to ask him to do anything extra. And you have the shoe tickets and the new sweaters—"

Her tone dismissed Yelta, who lingered only for a discontented second and then departed so noiselessly that it was some minutes before Isabel dared look up from her work.

She was presently glad that she had held firm, for the day with Dennis's mother, destined to end so momentously, began as a great success. Her small dark daughters looked glowingly warm in navy-blue coats with beaver collars and beaver caps, and were in almost hysterical spirits when they found themselves alone with their mother in the big warm limousine.

"They really can be terribly amusing and gay," Isabel thought, as they tumbled over her, confiding to her many thoughts about their lives, games, attendants, hopes; keeping each other in continual giggles. Their exalted mood carried her through the rather awkward moments of meeting the older Mrs. Hardisty again; the two women had not seen each other since the day when Isabel had taken her children away from the family home on Laguna Street.

"A Remarkable Change For The Better," Says This Lady

"In Very Nervous Condition—Couldn't Sleep," Had Pains in Limbs, Feet, Throbbing Headaches. Thanks Syntona for Relief.

Nervousness and sleeplessness are among the most distressing symptoms of a rundown condition of the system. Often accompanied by poor appetite, constipation and disorders of the stomach this disorder can frequently prove quite stubborn, but in most cases where it is due to functional organic troubles Syntona can bring prompt and effective relief.

Many people right here in this city have had excellent experiences with Syntona and among them is Mrs. Agnes Laforme, 77 East Avenue north, Hamilton, who said in a recent interview:

"For some time I was in a very nervous condition. I felt tired and irritable and it was very difficult for me to go to sleep after going to bed at night. I would get frequent throbbing headaches and my stomach was badly out of order. Indigestion and gas caused me a great deal of suffering every day after my meals. This affected my appetite and many days I didn't feel like eating at all.

"I also had pains in my limbs and my knees and feet became very swollen. Often I couldn't get my shoes on.

MRS. AGNES LAFORME

"Having been told about Syntona by a friend, I began taking it a few weeks ago. In that short time Syntona has brought a remarkable change for the better. My nerves are calmed down. I sleep much better and I am keeping free of headache. I can eat heartily now and my food digests without any of the former trouble. The pains in my limbs are relieved and the swelling gone down so that I can get my shoes on.

"I certainly feel very much better all over and I am very thankful to Syntona for the benefits I have received."

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

Intemperate Parents Called Real Delinquents By WCTU Speaker

Brantford, Sept. 26 (CP)—Dr. George A. Little, Toronto editor of United Church publications, said here yesterday that the real delinquents in cases of juvenile delinquency were often intemperate parents.

Speaking before the 69th annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union which entered its final day today, Dr. Little said domestic courts were crowded with drinking parents and their children were in danger, especially where parents left their children alone while they went to beer parlors. Many children had lost their lives recently in fires when home alone. Beer parlors were also the centres that were spreading venereal diseases, he said.

Heavy Report Program

The Ontario Women's Christian Temperance Union entered its final day with a heavy program of reports and addresses scheduled for morning and afternoon sessions.

Last night Miss E. Giffen, Sarnia, carried off honors in the public speaking contest for county presidents, and was presented with a silver spoon. Other participants included: Mrs. R. Davey, Chesley; Mrs J. A. Blaschke, Galt; Mrs. W. A. Lemkay, Pembroke; Mr. J. Flannery, Fergus; Mrs. J. Nelson, Merritton; Mrs. J. Robertson, Tillsonburg.

Mrs. J. H. Peacock, Toronto, provincial treasurer, said that receipts for the past year were $11,812; disbursements $9,635.99 and balance $2,176.47.

Mrs. T. Greenway, corresponding secretary reported on 52 unions in the province with 5,623 members and 185 honor members. There were 1,131 pledges signed and 1,063 little white ribboners.

Reports presented included: Canadian and Citizenship, Mrs. J. A. Blaschke, Galt; Lords Day Observance, Law and Legislation, Mrs. John Wright, Brantford.

FILES DAMAGE SUIT

Chicago, Sept. 26 — (CP) — Emerson C. Whitney, filed suit yesterday for $25,000 damages in behalf of Mrs. Regina Chaim, 61.

Whitney said that last Oct. 14 Mrs. Chaim awakened from a nap in her one-room apartment and found that painters had varnished the floor all around her, leaving no means of exit. However, the suit said, she tried to walk out of the room, slipped on the fresh varnish and suffered a fractured him.

Named as defendants are the Lunt Glenwood Corporation, owners of the apartment building, and the Ganja Brothers, painting contractors.

FINAL PONTIAC FIGURES

Ottawa, Sept. 26 —(CP)— Jules Castonguay, Chief Electoral Officer, today announced final results of the Pontiac By-Election last Sept. 16.

Ship Operators Decline Invite To Conference

New York, Sept. 26 — (AP) — Pacific coast ship operators have declined an invitation from Labor Secretary Schwellenback to attend a Maritime Labor Peace conference tomorrow in Washington designed to head off a country-wide strike by ship engineers.

The new strike threat to still-groggy United States waterfronts comes this time from the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association (C.I.O.) whose 15,000 members man the engine rooms of virtually all the ships in the American merchant marine.

Their leaders now are counting a country-wide strike authorization vote, with first returns showing heavy sentiment in favor of a walkout next Monday unless ship operators grant the men a 35-per-cent wage boost.

New York port members of the Marine Engineers voted 1,084 to 125 yesterday to strike after expiration of contracts with ship operators Sept. 30. In Houston, Tex., members voted 353 to 14 to strike, while in Norfolk, Va., they voted by an 8 to 1 count in favor of the strike.

Support Organization

Yvon D'Allaire National Food Processors, Cardinal, Ont, said: "I support any organization I belong to whether its Catholic, Presbyterian or anything else".

The debate—clearly a three-sided controversy between supporters of the C.C.F., the Labor-Progressive Party and the no-connection-whatsoever belief —was adjourned late yesterday afternoon after two hours' discussion.

Basis for argument was a resolution to re-affirm the C.C.L. Political Action program and to urge the Political Action committee to make constructive amendments to the program as necessary. It was a substitute for 11 Political Action resolutions submitted to the convention by C.C.L. affiliates.

(The Congress two years ago endorsed the C.C.F. but Leftist elements in the organization abandoned the official policy and tended to support the L.P.P.)

Several speakers, led by C. S. Jackson, United Electrical Workers, Toronto, charged the C.C.L. had no sent Political Action campaign.

30 INJURED IN WRECK

Victorville, Calif., Sept. 26 — (AP) — An estimated 30 persons were injured early today when Union Pacific passenger train No. 3, westbound Transcontinental Limited from St. Louis, went into the ditch on a curve about 2½ miles east of Victorville.

Deputy Sheriff Zeke Ebelein, at the scene of the wreck, said the engineer and fireman were pinned in their cab and were believed to be alive. No one was killed so far as is known, he added.

CHARGED WITH MURDER

Pheonix, Ariz., Sept. 26 (AP)— A few drinks and a troubled conscience ended today in a formal murder complaint charging Harold Chesser, 25, with strangling his infant daughter at Merced, Calif., two years ago.

Police at Phoenix said Chesser told them he strangled his daughter, Darlene, on the night of Aug. 7, 1944, because her crying enraged him. He had been drinking, he was quoted as saying, as the arresting officer said he had been doing when picked up here.

CAN'T CROSS BORDER

Prague, Sept. 26 —(AP)— Refugee Jews who for months have been streaming out of Poland en route to Palestine and other havens may no longer cross into Czechoslovakia without fully-visaed passports. Closing of the Czech border was announced last night by the interior ministry.

Milk Prices Upped As High as Three Cts. Across Canada

In Most of Ontario Price Will be 16 Cents a Quart

(By The Canadian Press)

A quart of milk delivered to the doorstep is going to cost Canadians anywhere from 1 1-2 cents to three cents more from now on, as a result of decisions by the various provincial milk boards following the end of the federal subsidy of 55 cents a hundredweight to producers.

In Ontario and Quebec the price is up three cents. It's two cents higher in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. It's 1 1-2 cents higher in Manitoba.

In most sections of Ontario the new price will be 16 cents a quart, which threatened to bring strong protests from consumers representatives in Ottawa and Toronto to the Ontario Milk Board. The price is between 14 and 16 cents in Nova Scotia and British Columbia. It's 15 1-2 cents in most of Quebec and 15 cents in New Brunswick, 14 cents in Manitoba and Alberta and 13 cents in Saskatchewan.

Increase Opposed

The increase was promptly opposed by Mayor Stanley Lewis of Ottawa, and Mayor Robert Saunders of Toronto. The former said he had sent a telegram to Ontario municipal minister Dunbar to register Ottawa's "very strong protest" and Mayor Saunders declared the Ontario Milk Board "flouted the will of the Ontario legislature" in authorizing the increase.

Mayor Lewis said it had been reported to him by consumer representatives on the Milk Board that the increase was "not justified."

One estimate was that Toronto consumers would pay an additional $330,000 yearly for milk delivered to their homes and that a family of four Toronto persons would pay an average yearly increase of approximately $21, and a family of 12, approximately $75.

R. F. Lick, secretary of the Ontario Milk Producers Association, said, however "There still will be no surplus of receipts over operating costs on the farms."

Prices Board officials in Toronto said the Ontario increase of three cents would have no effect on restaurant prices, and no changes without appeal would be allowed in price of milk sold by the glass or in price of other dairy products sold at restaurants.

The Ontario Milk Board, in its statement announcing a three-cent increase for the province, said: "Investigation by the Board into the figures submitted by the producer reveals that costs of feeds, labor and other fundamental expenses to milk production have increased materially in recent years to the extent that a minimum of $1 per hundred pounds increase in their returns is justified."

Should Protect Consumers

Mrs. Elizabeth Morton, vice-president of the Toronto Housewives' Consumers Association which is protesting the increase, said she believed farmers were entitled to the higher price. But, she said, consumers should be protected from higher costs of living by maintenance of government subsidies.

She said the Association had prepared briefs for presentation to federal and provincial officials.

Earlier, Toronto Board of Control indicated it would attempt to take court action towards having the Milk Board ruling set aside but found it lacked legal authority. So the Board expressed "regret" at the increase and asked Attorney-General Blackwell to "take whatever action he deems advisable."

Lack of consumer representation on the Milk Board was criticized by the Toronto Board and an amendment to the Act was urged.

"In 1941, the legislature amended the law and gave the consumer representative of the district opportunity to obtain full information when a price increase was contemplated," said Mayor Saunders. "I am the consumer representative for the district, although I don't sit on the Milk Board. I could not get this full information. It is making a farce of the whole thing."

Granted Increase of Dollar

The Ontario Milk Board announced the increase after a day-long session considering an application by producers for an increase of $1.20 a hundredweight in the price of fluid milk.

The Board granted the producers an increase of $1.00 a hundredweight for fluid milk and an increase of 50 cents for secondary milk, used in making chocolate milk and other products.

However, these price increases hold only for the winter months. Next May 1 the retail price drops by one cent and the basic price to producers goes down 40 cents a hundred.

Distributors will benefit by about 15 cents a hundred pounds, it is estimated, and one official estimated this would mean less than half a cent a quart to meet increased costs of operating. There are 38.8 quarts in 100 lbs. of milk.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Sept. 27—(CP)—Synopsis at 7:30 a.m. — Clear warm weather prevails over the southeastern continent and maximum temperatures in this area yesterday reached high 80s. Cooler air covers Canada and temperatures here were a few degrees below normal Thursday. A storm centre developing west of Lake Superior is moving rapidly northeastward and is expected to pass through Northern Ontario tonight and early Saturday, with the cool air to the west sweeping through Southern Ontario Saturday morning and afternoon. A band of continuous rain occasionally mixed with snow covers the southern prairies, and a line of showers and thundershowers is occurring through the central states in advance of the cool air.

Archbishop Leaves For Great Britain Aboard Aquitania

Halifax, Sept. 27 —(CP)— "Give me a bed and I'll give you two speeches" was the way Most Rev. Godfrey Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, paraphrased his 32-day visit to Canada and the United States which concluded last night when he embarked for England aboard the Aquitania.

The liner cleared port shortly before midnight with more than 600 passengers, including the recently-appointed Canadian high commissioner to London, Norman Robertson, and Senator Rupert Davies of Kingston.

The Archbishop summed up what he said was a thoroughly enjoyable trip, noting that he had slept in 22 different beds and delivered 44 speeches, sermons or addresses during the visit which took him to the Anglican Synod at Winnipeg.

His impression of Canada and the United States? "Too little mustard and too much ice cream," he laughed, admitting he was quoting the words of a former Governor General of the Dominions.

Other distinguished passengers were Rt. Hon. G. A. Isaacs, Britain's Minister of Labor, and Viscount Addison, Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs.

The first Canadian to be made High Sheriff in Great Britain, Senator Davies, publisher of the Kingston Whig-Standard, was on his way to Montgomeryshire, North Wales. There he will complete arrangements to become High Sheriff in the county of his birth.

The Senator plans to return to Canada for Christmas and then return to Wales for his installation as High Sheriff in February.

Labor Minister Isaacs was returning after attending the international labor meeting in Montreal.

FBI Probes Savage Attack on Ship Captain by Three Members of Crew

Philadelphia, Sept. 27 — (AP) — Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and shipping officials continued their probe today into an alleged attack on the captain of the freighter ship Joyce Kilmer which docked here last night with two crew members recently released from irons.

Capt. Charles Perez, master of the former troop transport said he was attacked by the crew members after he cancelled shore leave while the ship was tied up at Rouen, France.

"I was afraid of a second attack on my life, so I put the men in irons for the (return) trip," he explained in a report.

Coast Guard and F. B. I. agents said the captain told them he cancelled shore leaves after receiving unexpected orders cutting short the ship's stay at Rouen.

About 3 a.m. he said, he was awakened in his cabin and saw three of the crew, one with a knife, standing over him. Two of the three attacked him, Perez told the F.B.I. agents, inflicting knife wounds on his arms and wrists before his shouts brought other seamen who subdued the three.

The two who attacked the captain were placed in irons in the ship's brig for 10 days, Perez said, but were released when the ship was headed for Philadelphia.

101-GUN SALUTE WILL WELCOME KING OF GREECE

Returns on Saturday To Reassume Crown Of Strife-Torn Land; Will be Guarded

Athens, Sept. 27 — (AP) — A 101-gun salute will thunder a welcome to King George II when he returns to Athens tomorrow morning to reassume the crown of this strife-torn land.

The 56-year-old monarch is scheduled to arrive in Faleron Bay sometime during the forenoon aboard the Greek cruiser Themistocles, where he will be greeted by Premier Constantine Tsaldaris and the entire cabinet.

Strict police precautions have been arranged to guard him upon his return, coming amid fierce border fighting and civil strife in northern Greece which Premier Constantine Tsaldaris said Wednesday had reached the magnitude of war.

Guns mounted on conical Lycabettus Hill just south of the heart of Athens will boom at 45-second intervals during the King's triumphal four-mile procession from the bay to Constitution Square, directly in front of the barn-like palace first erected by King Otto more than 100 years ago.

The man who once was quoted as saying that kingship was a "rotten job" and that he would rather be an American cowboy, is expected to arrive tonight at some unidentified airport in the Mediterranean before embarking on the destroyer.

Details Shrouded

The government shrouded in secrecy the precise details of the journey from London and the extraordinary precautions taken for his safety.

Three formal events are scheduled for the king's first day in Athens — a te deum service at the Greek Cathedral, the laying of a wreath on the tomb of the unknown soldier and an address from the balcony of the old palace which is now used by parliament.

Police several days ago made a house to house survey along the entire route of procession and persons have been forbidden to watch the event from housetops or terraces closer than 100 yards, but the public will be allowed to observe from windows and balconies.

All permits to carry firearms have been suspended by police order, and the public have been warned that they may be searched for arms.

No flowers or any other objects may be thrown at the monarch's car.

London, Sept. 27. (CP)—King George II of Greece, left Britain by air at 8.05 a.m. today to resume the throne to which he was recalled by a recent vote of his people. He was accompanied by a royal party of ten.

At the airport to bid him goodbye were a number of well wishers, including his sister, the former Princess Marina and now the Duchess of Kent.

The King, wearing a military uniform sprinkled with decorations, left his London hotel shortly after 7 a.m. and drove directly to the airport, accompanied by a Scotland Yard detective who had acted as his personal bodyguard during his five-year exile after fleeing the Nazi invader.

The tall, immaculate monarch showed no signs of emotion as he left the famous Claridge's hotel which had been his home since October 3, 1944. Three uniformed police stood at each of the Claridge's two entrances.

Plans for the Monarch's departure had been closely guarded since the royalists won the plebiscite restoring him to his throne.

King George posed for photographers but refused to make any statement to the press.

Agricultural Minister Fearful Export Market In Cheese May be Lost

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP)— Unless farmers can be induced to produce more milk, Ontario stands to lose its export cheese business within five years, Agriculture Minister Kennedy of Ontario said today.

Col. Kennedy supported the Ontario Milk Control Board's decision to allow a three-cent rise in the price of milk and said 16 cents a quart was "a very small price."

"I say definitely that the milk situation in Ontario is desperate," he asserted. "Unless the Ontario farmer can be induced to increase his holdings of dairy cattle, we will lose our great export market for cheese, and it will go to Australia or New Zealand or Denmark. For 100 years cheese has been our great export to the United Kingdom.

"From Sept. 1, Toronto dairies have bought so much milk from cheese factories that two cheese factories have closed up. It's the same in other areas — Ottawa, London, Windsor. I don't know the figures exactly but I should say about 25 factories have gone out of business this year. Our cheese exports definitely are down. What is happening to us happened to Quebec, and Quebec now is virtually out of the cheese business."

The Minister emphasized that the Ontario government would not pay a subsidy to check the price rise.

The Milk Control Board wanted to sell milk, Col. Kennedy said. It did not want high prices because it realized that if prices were high, less milk would be sold.

The price of milk in 1933 and 1939 was 13 cents a quart, he recalled. A two-cent government subsidy later lowered the consumer price to 11 cents.

"The price of milk has not gone up five cents since before the war. It has risen three cents from the basic pre-war price. That's about a 22-per-cent increase. Milk is about the only product I know which has risen so slightly. Are wages, food, clothing and other agricultural products up only 22 per cent?"

SQUATTERS WORRY ABOUT RUMORS OF EVICTION

E. F. Hanratty and Legal Advisor Will Appear Before Judge and Jury

Ottawa, Sept. 27 (CP)—Uneasy over rumors of action to get them out, Ottawa's squatting veterans still occupied six buildings here today while their leaders planned their personal defence against charges of forcible entry and obstructing police.

Jointly charged yesterday, the Veterans' Housing League's leader, E. F. Hanratty, and its legal advisor, George Bleakney, had their cases adjourned until Oct. 4. Later, Bleakney announced they would elect trial by judge and jury and he would act as defence counsel for both.

he charges marked the first legal counter-attack against the squatting activities of the last three weeks during which buildings controlled by the army, navy and city of Ottawa have been occupied by some 200 persons.

Hanratty, pint-sized former R. C. A. F. air observer, had a hectic day yesterday. He spent a few hours in jail and then moved his wife, small son, and belongings into the sixth building to be occupied by the veterans, a vacant barracks at Lansdowne Park next to the one occupied by nine families last Tuesday night.

To Be Sublet

He said that he and a former Seaforth Highlander, Albert Chausse, had been told the quarters they had occupied at 334 Chapel St., were to be sublet and the landlord would call today to pick up the keys.

Before the move, Bleakney telephoned Mayor Stanley Lewis for permission for the two families to move into the building, part of a former army district depot, now returned to city ownership.

"I don't think there will be any objection, provided they are really being evicted," Mr. Lewis was quoted as replying.

There were persistent rumors that naval authorities would attempt to clear the building occupied by 11 families at H.M.C.S. Carleton, naval training station beside Dow's Lake in southwest Ottawa, but no confirmation could be obtained.

W. G. Mills, Deputy Navy Minister, said no instructions had been issued from naval service headquarters on the situation. "Navy sailors are not police," he said. "However, they are co-operating with R.C.M.P."

Lots of Apples But No Pie Crust

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP)—Rural Ontario is in a dither over the apple pie situation.

Hon. T. L. Kennedy, the province's Minister of Agriculture and himself a farmer, says there are lots of apples but pie makers are plagued by a shortage of shortening for pastry and sugar for sweetening. He is getting letters daily from persons asking what he can do about it, but as a man who often eats and enjoys apple pie three meals a day, Col. Kennedy says glumly there isn't much hope for improvement because the lack of shortening, if not of sugar, will prevail for some time.

He reports that farmers are particularly concerned because they can't sell their fall apples —they're tops for pies

ELEVEN PERSONS KILLED IN RIOTS IN BOMBAY, DACCA

Police Fire on Rioters and Later Impose 24-Hour Curfew

Bombay, Sept. 27 (CP)—Eleven persons have been killed in renewed Hindu-Moslem rioting in Bombay, Calcutta, Dacca and the Taj Mahal city of Agra, in the last two days.

Seven were killed and about 100 were injured in Agra yesterday in a clash reported to have been touched off by the stoning of a Hindu religious procession. Police fired on the rioters and later imposed a 24-hour curfew. The city was reported quiet today.

Three persons were killed and two were wounded by knifings in Calcutta, scene in mid-August of the bloodiest communal riots in its tumultuous history.

In Bombay, one was killed and about a dozen were injured in stabbing and stoning incidents. Scores were killed here earlier this month. B. G. Kher, Bombay Premier in the legislative assembly, appealed to all elements to do their utmost to maintain the peace.

Three Killed By Mystery Blast

Cictoria, Sept. 27 (CP)— Company officials and police today continued investigation into the explosion at the nearby James Island plant of Canadian Industries Limited which yesterday killed three workers and destroyed a $50,000 gelatine cartridge house.

Sgt. C. C. Jacklin of the British Columbia Provincial Police, said human fragments recovered from the blast area did not fill a wooden box 15 by 20 inches.

W. S. Thatcher, works manager, said the cause of the explosion may not be known for days. There was no trace left of the building other than a smoke-blackened crater and the blast was felt for five miles.

The men killed were Edward K. Cameron, 42, Bazan Bay, B.C., John McDonald, 40, Keating, B.C., and Hollie H. Mundell, 25, Saanichton, B.C.

Two other workers were slightly injured by flying glass and debris.

W. B. Paton, inspector for the explosive division of the Provincial Mines Department, will go to James Island today in an effort to determine the cause. The men were said to be pouring gelignite into cartridge cases when the blast occurred.

DEFER BUILDING

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP)—Rising costs and material shortages have led to deferring of at least three $1,000,000 building projects in the Toronto area, a survey of architects and general contractors showed today. Two were downtown office buildings, the other a bakery.

Other deferred projects include a $250,000 factory planned by a Peterborough, Ont. marble cutting company for a site in suburban York Township and a $170,000 plant at Windsor, Ont., Gelatine Company planned to build at nearby Scarboro.

STAGE ALL SET FOR QUICK FINISH OF PEACE PARLEY

Agreement Reached To Limit Speechmaking And Greeks Withdraw Claim Against Albania

By RELMAN MORIN

Paris, Sept. 27 (AP)— The stage was set today for a quick finish to the Paris peace conference, with an agreement reached to limit further speechmaking and one troublesome issue wiped off the agenda by Greek withdrawal of claims for northern Epirus from Albania.

"For the first time," State Secretary Byrnes told a press conference last night, "I see a possibility of winding up the peace conference."

By Oct. 5, all commissions are scheduled to present their reports on the draft of peace treaties for Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Italy and Romania to the full 21-power plenary session.

Mr. Byrnes was optimistic when he discussed the situation with newspapermen, in the first formal pronouncement he has made since the controversial speech by Henry A. Wallace Sept. 12 criticizing United States foreign policy.

"I have known the United States Senate to take more time than this on a single bill," Mr. Byrnes commented.

Mr. Byrnes said President Truman's statement of support for current American foreign policy had given "assurance to the world" of the stability of that policy.

Byrnes Presides

He presided yesterday at the first conference plenary session in nearly a month, during dis- the delegate agreed without discussion to a "gag rule" designed to restrict conference speechmakers.

Confronting the Foreign Ministers now is the question of a treaty with Germany—the most difficult of the lot thus far. Mr. Byrnes said the date for beginning work on that pact has been set for the latter half of November, in New York.

Peace conference commissions made progress today. The principle of at least 75 per cent compensation for Allied properties in defeated nations, already adopted for Italy, was virtually established for the other four treaties by the Balkan-Finnish economic commission.

The United States was defeated, 9-4, in a motion for 25 per cent compensation for business interests and property damaged or destroyed during the war.

As in the Italian economic commission, Britain and Greece reserved the right to ask the plenary session for full compensation. The principle was defeated in both commissions by a tie vote.

Strikers' Appeals Are Dismissed

Hamilton, Sept. 27 —(CP)— Besides "constituting intimidation, the incident involves assault and might have had serious consequences," Judge William F. Schwenger said today, as he dismissed the appeals of Stanley Droski, operator of the union boat, Whisper, and Russell Provo and confirmed the sentence of three months in jail which had been imposed upon them in Magistrate's Court.

The incident occurred on Hamilton Bay on Aug. 17 when a rowboat with outboard motor attached, was taking three men fo rmthe steel company to the beach. Droski, operator of the Whisper, allegedly threatened to swamp the smaller craft unless it returned to shore.

Six Believed Dead, Hundreds Missing As Texas River Overflows its Banks

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 27 — (CP)—At least six persons were believed dead, scores were injured and hundreds are missing as the San Antonio river and its city-wide tributaries poured over their banks in the worst flood since 1921. Rain continued to fall today.

Property damage was estimated at millions of dollars and literally thousands of residents were made homeless by the flood waters.

The rain, six inches of which had fallen by 4 o'clock this morning, has virtually flooded the entire city. Over an inch of rain fell within a 25 minute period. The storm broke at 8.30 o'clock last night.

Two men, police said, were swept away with their car when a bridge was washed out. Two children also were reported drowned this morning in the flood waters.

Hastily organized emergency squads of police, firemen and sheriff's deputies were pressed into action to rescue families throughout the city who were stranded and marooned at their homes by rising waters.

The Public Service Board feared a further rise of the San Antonio river below here would inundate the Mission Road power plant and leave the entire city without electrical power.

Rescue squads were using boats to save marooned persons from buses and automobiles stalled on streets by the heavy rainstorm.

End Steel Strike Imminent Says Ottawa Report

Possible Basis Said to Be 13c When Work Resumed

Ottawa, Sept. 27 —(CP)— A usually well-informed source said here today the steel strike will be settled within a day or so with the employees getting an increase of 10 cents-an-hour retroactive to April 1 and a further three cents when work is resumed.

This source said it was expected there would be some adjustment in the price of steel to make possible the higher wages. The increase would apply in the Steel Company of Canada plant at Hamilton, Algoma Steel and Sault Ste. Marie, and Dominion Steel and Coal at Sydney, N.S.; where a total of 15,000 went out on strike July 15th.

It is understood that the unions and companies have agreed to accept the 13-cent increase and will settle matters of union security on which there is some disagreement by further negotiations.

Labor Minister Mitchell, who is in Montreal presiding over the meetings of the International labor organization, flew to Ottawa yesterday and conferred with his colleagues in the cabinet, returning immediately to Montreal.

C. H. Millard, National Director of the United Steelworkers of America (C.I.O.) arrived in Montreal yesterday and is understood to have been in touch with the labor minister and F. B. Kilbourn, government controller of basic steel.

Mr. Kilbourn in Montreal today confirmed that new negotiations had been started but declined to make any announcement on their progress.

Meat Ceilings Will Continue, President Says

By MARVIN L. ARROWSMITH

Washington, Sept. 27. (AP)— Risking party discord in the midst of the United States Congressional election campaign, President Truman stood firm today for keeping meat under office of Price Administration Ceilings—with no boost in prices.

Emphasizing that he regards the meat situation as a shortage and not a "famine", Mr. Truman brushed aside demands of some democratic leaders for a 60-day suspension of meat ceilings. That period would extend beyond the November elections.

In doing so, the President predicted there will be more and a better grade of meat available "in the near future".

Mr. Truman blamed the "extraordinary large" slaughter of cattle and hogs during the July-August lapse of ceilings for the current lack of meat.

He also laid a share of the blame squarely at the door of Congress, declaring in his press conference statement yesterday:

"If, as I had urged upon the Congress, the Price Control Legislation had been re-enacted in the early Spring, many of these difficulties would have been avoided."

Asserting that present ceilings are "fair and equitable," he added:

ASK INCREASE IN PRICES

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP) — The Canadian Restaurant Association today made public a brief asking the Prices Board for increase of five cents on all orders including fish, meat or poultry or full course meals up to 50 cents. It also asks an increase of 10 cents on meals costing 50 cents to $1 and 15 cents on those costing $1 or more.

6 Die, Many Hurt As Crack Train Wrecked on Curve

Victorville, Calif., Sept. 27. — (AP)—Six persons—three women and two men passengers and a Negro porter—were killed and between 50 and 75 inured Thursday when Union Pacific train No. 3, the Trans-Continental Limited, piled up on a curve two and a half miles east of Victorville as it was running an hour late.

All the dead were in two day coaches immediately behind a baggage car.

It took more than three hours to extricate the bodies from the wreckage of the lightweight steel cars. Deputy Coroner Edward P. Doyle said he was not positive no more bodies would be found in the crumpled coaches.

These two cars were piled up in a narrow cut approaching the Mojave River and telescoped into its sides. Another day coach and two dining cars left the rails, but did not overturn. None of the passengers in the following Pullcars was injured.

Dr. Doyle said the train left the track at 7:03 a.m., on a slight curve, possibly because of high speed. He said that Engineer Pearl S. Parker, of Los Angeles, would be questioned at an inquest about the rate of speed.

Just beyond where the locomotive came to rest is a sheer drop of 40 to 50 feet to the bed of the Mojave River.

Full Investigation

Los Angeles, Sept. 27 — (AP) — Union Pacific officials today scheduled an investigation of the wreck of a fast, westbound passenger train near Victorville, Calif., yesterday which brought death to six persons and injuries to more than 30 others.

The engine, tender, baggage car and five passenger and dining cars of the crack Transcon were derailed in a narrow cut beside a river, blocking both Union Pacific and Santa Fe tracks.

Three women were killed in the washroom of a day coach. Bodies of two men and a Negro porter were found near the washroom of another coach. There were no Canadians among the casualties.

PREDICTS LABOR VICTORY

Melbourne, Australia, Sept. 27— (Reuters)—A public opinion poll on the Australian general election, in which voting takes place tomorrow, predicts that the labor government will be returned with the possible loss of a few seats won in 1943 at the previous general election by only a close margin.

The poll showed the Liberal and country parties gaining one-third more seats at the expense of the Independents and minor groups.

Labor was expected to win Senate votes in several states, thus retaining control of that House.

Reconstruction Of Graham Bldg. Being Considered

Plans for immediate reconstruction of the gutted Graham Dried Food building which was burned last week with a loss estimated in the neighborhood of $250,000 are being made by the owners, it was learned today.

Two alternatives are being considered by the owners and by Architect W. A. Watson, it has not yet being decided whether the building will be reconstructed on a one-storey basis over the entire burned area, or on a two-storey basis on the present foundation of the gutted three-storey building.

"The whole thing is rather nebulous," stated Mr. Watson to the Ontario Intelligencer this morning, "and the amount of reconstruction to be done will be dependent entirely upon the ability to acquire building materials."

Mayoral Robes Now in Dispute

Vancouver, Sept. 26 (CP)—City Comptroller Frank Jones has something new to worry about—the ownership of Vancouver's mayoral robes.

Senator G. G. (Gerry) McGeer says he paid $527.33 "out of my own pocket" for the robes when he was Mayor in 1936, and now Mayor J. W. Cornett refuses to wear them until ownership is settled.

"It is not my intention to wear them again until we find out whether McGeer owns them or whether the city does."

After Mr. Cornett's ultimatum, council ordered an investigation, and Comptroller Jones has the job of finding out ownership.

The mystery of the robes developed early in the week when Senator McGeer, criticizing civic administration, told a meeting that he had personally paid for the robes "when he couldn't find an expense account big enough to slip it into."

The robes were purchased during Vancouver's golden jubilee when the Lord Mayor of London was the guest of honor.

So far at least, there is no apparent record of purchase of the robes by the city.

There is, however, a record of a meeting, Dec. 22, 1936, of the Golden Jubilee Committee when it rejected a statement covering a robe and hat valued at $527.33, and Senator McGeer was criticized for "madcap expenditures." He replied that he personally had paid out several thousand dollars for expenses in connection with the jubilee.

W.C.T.U. Wants Stringent Laws Respecting Liquor

Brantford, Sept. 27 (CP) — Motion picture films should be censored to eliminate scenes which depict a low standard of morals and which might encourage use of liquor, said a resolution passed yesterday at closing sessions of the 68th convention of the Ontario Women's Christian Temperance Union.

It condemned magazines, other publications and billboards which carry advertisements intended to popularize use of liquor and called for strict enforcement of Ontario regulations prohibiting advertising of liquor.

The convention criticized the Ontario government for what the W.C.T.U. called the "utter disregard" for the delegation of organized women of Ontario which asked for closing of women's beverage rooms.

Other resolutions urged a general medical examination, including blood tests, before a marriage licence is issued or banns published; further curtailment of brewers' quotas of grain, potatoes, sugar and fuel and the granting of licences for liquor outlets.

Sorority Members Volunteer to Act As Big Sisters

The members of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority held a most interesting meeting on Monday evening at the home of Miss Margaret Anderson. After the usual opening exercises the vice president, Miss Anderson, gave a brief review of the summer activities of the club, speaking particularly of the picnic in July and the coffee party and dance in August and commended in a special manner those members who arranged these affairs so successfully. Miss Geraldine Trimble of Windsor was welcomed as a new member of the Belleville chapter.

Camp Work Outlined

The guest speaker of the evening Mr. F. Stevens, director of the Kiwanis camp, was introduced by Miss Jean Sills. In his address Mr. Stevens gave a resume of the work done at the camp during the past two summers and stressed the urgent need of more social service work in our community.

A discussion followed and it was then unanimously decided that all members of the sorority would volunteer to act as big sisters to little sisters needing their friendship. This will be done under the direction of Mr. Stevens who at present is supervisor of social service work at Kiwanis Centre. The gratitude of the members to Mr. Stevens for his interesting and timely address was expressed by Miss Mary Truaisch. Following this, brief talks were given by two of the members, Miss Peggy Doolittle and Miss Mildred Coleman. Arrangements were made for a bridge party to be held soon and many other interesting activities for the fall were planned, after which delicious refreshments were served by the hostess.

Sponsorship of Air Cadets Corps Under Consideration by Club

Tentative plans for the club to accept the sponsorship of the Air Cadet squadron at Belleville were discussed by members of the local Y's-Men's Club at their regular weekly dinner meeting held at the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday evening when three officials of the Air Cadet League of Canada acted as guest speakers.

No definite decision was made by club members, it being decided to discuss the matter of accepting the squadron sponsorship more thoroughly at their next meeting.

General manager and secretary of the provincial organization of the Air Cadet League of Canada, Mr. C. C. Brooks, traced the formation of the air cadets from their inception in 1941 up to the present time. He pointed out the value of such an organization, in that it serves as a recruiting ground for the air force, and also as a recreational unit which would be valuable in building better men for the future.

R.C.A.F. Would Assist

The speaker stated that the Royal Canadian Air Force was prepared to finance and arrange all equipment for the cadets, and towards this end had already made arrangements to provide free clothing for cadets, provide a co-ordinated syllabus of training covering a three-year period; provide all necessary equipment; permanent summer camps, free scholarships; establish an air cadet training staff at headquarters and employ and pay sufficient personnel in the field to adequately supervise the training.

Flight Lieut. McGee asked members of the Y's-Men's Club to consider the value of such work with boys. He stated the Air Force would provide 290 flying scholarships which provided 12 1-2 hours flying and 90 hours ground instruction. In addition 25 air cadets would have the opportunity of exchanging training with 25 British air cadets. The air force would support the move 100 per cent and would provide all equipment necessary.

Good Training

Flight Lieut. Hewer pointed out that the air training syllabus was designed to train and improve the mind and body and help make better citizens. He traced the work of the R.C.A.F. in their efforts in backing the air cadets. In closing he urged the Belleville Y's Men's club to sponsor the air cadets in Belleville.

President Archie Boyd presided over the meeting with Jack Wilson introducing the guest speakers and conducting a questionnaire period on the subject. Fred Barton expressed the thanks of the club to the speakers.

FINED $1550

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP)—Poor bookkeeping cost Hymie Marx of Toronto $1,500 and costs or six months when he appeared in court yesterday on charges brought by the Prices Board, which alleged failure to keep proper books and records of business transactions. Investigators said they found irregularities in records of stock bought for making lingerie, stock sold, cloth in the making and cloth cut but not finished.

Milk Will Cost Consumers 15 Cents Per Quart Next Tuesday

City householders will have to dig just a little deeper in their change purses starting Tuesday morning when as result of the federal government discontinuing the milk subsidy the price of milk in Belleville will be increased to 15 cents the quart.

With quarts increased three cents to 15 cents the bottle, pint bottles will be delivered at the door for eight and one half cents per bottle, while half pints will cost four and three quarter cents.

Cream prices will also be increased, it was stated by a spokesman of the local milk distributors who stated cream under the new schedule will cost an additional seven cents per quart, or 57 cents. Pint bottles of cream will be thirty-two cents and half pints seventeen cents.

District milk producers who supply city dairies will come in for a major portion of the increased milk prices and will receive $3.30 cents for milk testing 3.4 butterfat. City dairies will receive another 15 cents per cwt. for delivery.

The increased prices which will commence Tuesday morning will remain in effect until next May when there will be a one cent cut, according to local distributors. Then, with the advent of greater supply, farmers will take a cut of 40 cents per cwt. for their summer milk.

Price of milk to the wholesaler under the new increased price schedule, had not yet been set by the milk board, it was stated by local distributors. Additional information on this phase of sales is expected before Monday.

Negotiations for Purchase of Land South of County Home Stalemated

Negotiations between the city and the Hastings County Council for the purchase of eighteen acres of land south of the Home on the County farm for industrial site purposes are stalemated for the present. President Lorne McDougall, of the Chamber of Commerce told his directors at the weekly luncheon on Thursday.

A well-known manufacturing firm is desirious of locating here and the place in question is regarded as being an ideal site for construction of the plant.

The City Industrial Commission had conferred with the Hastings County House of Refuge Advisory Board but no satisfactory settlement has been arrived at as yet. President McDougall stated. The matter will be brought before the County Council as a whole in all likelihood and there is a possibility of that body meeting at a special session to discuss the matter.

Says Floor Needs Attention

The directors on recommendation of Jamieson Bone passed a motion requesting that the attention of the City Postmaster be drawn to the condition of the main floor in the post office. Mr. Bone also stated in his recommendation that the general condition of the post office needs attention and this should be dealt with.

Speaking to his recommendation Mr. Bone stated that "the floor of the post office is in a bad condition. Several people have had narrow escapes from falls and I am one of them."

President McDougall told the directors that efforts were being made to secure other sites for the Bata Shoe Company and the Clearite Company, two firms who lost their industrial locations when the Graham Dried Foods dehydrating plant was destroyed by fire.

Council to Protest Percentage Of Lumber, Building Materials Being Exported by the Govt.

Meeting Held With Trades and Labor Council and Veterans' Organizations

Members of city council at their regular committee meeting Thursday night gave their approval of a resolution passed by the local Trades and Labor Council asking that the federal government be petitioned to consider the percentage of lumber and other building materials being exported and if possible reduce this percentage. The resolution will be presented to the proper authorities at Ottawa.

The above resolution was passed Thursday afternoon at a special meeting of a committee of council members, Trades and Labor Council, the Canadian Legion, Army and Navy Veterans and other citizens, as result of the present short supply of building materials.

The resolution also asked that a more strict supervision be made as to what is essential building, so that local contractors might be given a freer flow of materials. The special meeting of a committee of council members with the Trades and Labor Council and the two veterans' organizations was arranged following the last meeting of council when it was decided to meet to draft the resolution concerning housing.

Start Integrated Scheme.

In further discussion of housing matters council cleared the way for the start of the proposed integrated housing program on Wellington Street when it was recommended that the plan of the proposed sub-division on that street be sent to the city's town planning engineer for submission to the municipal board for approval. The city comptroller was also authorized to take any further steps necessary to get the first housing units started as soon as possible.

The city solicitor was authorized to obtain all particulars regarding procedure necessary to have property required for the proposed Riverside Drive submitted to the municipal board for valuation. Mr. Collins was also authorized to obtain particulars regarding the marsh lands patent so that contracts concerning the seepage wall between Zwick's Island and the mainland may be proceeded with.

To Operate Rinks

Tentative approval was given for the operation of four open-air skating rinks again this coming winter, the sites to be at the East and West Belleville playgrounds, at the Pine Street School grounds and at King George School. A committee of Aldermen Follwell, Hyde and Thompson was appointed to look after the matter.

All regular members of the fire department and of the police department will take lessons in first aid through the St. John Ambulance, the city to pay the cost of $1 per person.

In discussion of fire hall matters, councillors decided to ask for information and prices on a new service aerial ladder recommended by Fire Chief Lynch for some years, and also on a new pumper truck.

Council agreed that capacity of culverts carrying surface water across West College Street from the north should be increased and the work will be completed if necessary materials can be secured.

Authorized to Prepare Plans

City Engineer Charles Mott was notified to prepare specifications for the proposed public lavatory to stand to the east and adjacent to the city hall on the market square. The city comptroller was authorized to ask for tenders on construction of the lavatory when specifications are completed and submitted to council.

Chairman of Public Works Alderman Charles Hyde, city Engineer Charles Mott, the foreman of public works were named as delegates to attend the convention of the Canadian Institute of Sewage and Sanitation at Toronto of Oct. 7-8-9.

Two city owned lots were recommended sold with Lot 7, corner of St. Charles and Ridley to go to Earl Buker, and lots 5-6 on Moody Street to Herbert George Hiles, a veteran of the last war.

British Political Agent Killed by Tribesmen

New Delhi, Sept. 27 (Reuters)—Maj. John Stewart Donald, political agent in the South Waziristan, tribal district of the north west frontier of India, has been found dead with a bullet wound near where he was kidnapped with two other members of the British agency last June 21.

The Britons were released July 2 after representations had been made to the Waziristan tribesmen.

After Maj. Donald's release six villages in South Waziristan were bombed following the refusal of a demand by Sir Olaf Caroe, governor of the north west frontier province for preparations for the kidnapping.

Villagers were warned to evacuate the villages and no casualties were reported, but three people were killed in th accidental bombing of a neighboring village.

GUILTY OF ASSAULT

Toronto, Sept. 27 (CP)— Harry Bobkin, local resaurant owner, was found guilty yesterday of assault causing actual bodily harm and remanded until Monday for sentence. The Assize Court jury found him not guilty of attempted rape. Bobkin had been charged with attempted rape as a result of an incident in his restaurant several weeks ago. Mrs. Rita McDill, wife of a naval rating, accused him of beating her and tearing her clothes from her when she went to work for him.

Yucca Melon Attracted Much Attention at Fair

Considerable interest was evidenced among the visitors to the agricultural display of fruits and vegetables at the Belleville Fair this week. Especially attractive was the picturesque arrangement of the exhibit of fruits and flowers belonging to Mr. Ridley Wallbridge of Ameliasburg township.

Against a background of evergreens reaching almost to the ceiling, colorful specimens from garden and orchard were artistically arranged. High up a huge diamond-shaped medallion of bright red peppers was centred with a pure white "pat-a-pan" squash, and just below, hampers of shining crimson Fameuse and MacIntosh red apples vied with baskets of beautiful dahlias in a variety of shades of the same color, while above the apples, orange clusters of Mountain Ash berries relieved the dark green of the cedar backing. On the next level below the hampers stood large baskets of golden and French marigolds, one at either end of the shelf with an immense yellow pumpkin beside it, and between them green and white squash, bantam corn and striped gourds were placed to fill the intervening space.

Used as Filler

Last, but by no means least, on the level of an ordinary table where it would be most readily noticed, lay a creamy-green gourd of an unusual size. Three feet, and eight inches in length, resembling a pear in shape, this "Yucca Melon" is the only one of its kind raised by Mr. Wallbridge this year, although he planted a number of seeds. Cultivating the "Yucca" is quite an accomplishment as hybridizing must be done artificially and great care taken to protect the blossoms. The melon is absolutely tasteless, but easily assimilates any artificial flavor and coloring. For this reason it is used extensively in the manufacture of many of the jams and pie- fillings found on the market these days and is also used in making artificial orange and lemon peels.

A well-known horticulturist of this city, Mr. David Farrell, who assisted Mr. Wallbridge in the arrangement of his exhibit, aroused the interest of some of the on-lookers by explaining to them the value and usefulness of this melon, which many of them supposed was nothing more than an over-grown gourd.

Power Supply Sinking Nearer To Danger Point

Pittsburgh, Sept. 27 — (AP) — The power supply in this industrial city sank nearer the danger point today as a strike of 3,200 employees of the Duquesne Light Company entered its fourth day — with wage negotiations continuing but no new contract in sight.

Public tenseness relaxed somewhat as an early morning union order sent 2,800 street car motormen hurrying back to their jobs to man trolleys which had stood idle since 5 a.m. yesterday, crippling the city's transportation system and stranding thousands of workers.

The Pittsburgh Railways Company announced it would continue to give the "limited" service it had been offering since the power strike started — 50 per cent of normal "off-peak" operation, which meant that about 225 of the system's 1,200 cars would be running.

About 28,000 other workers remained idle as a result of power curtailments.

Pickets marched in front of the company's power stations and substations, where supervisory workers and officials of the firm tried to keep enough current flowing to supply vital needs.

A negotiating conference late yesterday between representatives of the company and of the Independent Association of Employees failed to produce tangible results. But an agreement to resume contract negotiations today later was reached.

The union, asking a 20 per cent raise and other benefits, rejected a company offer which would have given them five per cent.

NO ICE CREAM IN SHAKES

Chatham, Sept. 27 — (CP) — The milk shake addicts in this Kent county city may be the chief losers from the increase in milk prices. Soda fountain operators said last night they will ask the Prices Board for approval of an increase in prices in the wake of the three-cent milk price boost approved yesterday by the Ontario Milk Control Board. If they don't get an increase they will (a) cut out ice cream in milk shakes;.(b) stop serving them altogether. Some of them dropped the scoop of ice cream after the Dominion government removed its two-cents-a-quart consumer subsidy some months ago.

Franco Must Pay United Nations For Money Obtained

By CARL HARTMAN

Madrid, Sept. 27 (AP)—Generalissimo Franco's government soon may find itself in the paradoxical position of settling with the United Nations, including Russia, for the money and arms Germany provided to establish it in power.

German and Italian aid to Franco began soon after his rising of July 18, 1936, against the Spanish Republic The Soviet government, and volunteers from France, Britain, the United States and many parts of Europe, fought in vain to save the republic.

Mussolini's bill for aiding Franco came to 5,000,000,000 lire, or $250,000,000. Last December, Spain signed a trade agreement with the post-war Italian government, fixing the balance due Italy at $50,000,000.

Hitler's bill never has been published, but informed sources estimate it at 400,000,000 to 500,000,000 reichsmarks—pre-war value $160,000,000 to $200,000,00, with about $40,000,000 to $80,000,000 still owing.

The Allied Control Council, as trustee for the German people, now is settling accounts with neutrals.

The Spanish government has not yet officially recognized the trustees but when it does—there will be those bills to pay up.

Early Settlement Appears to Hinge On Govt. Action

Edmonton, Sept. 27 (CP)—Early settlement of the 30-day delivery strike embracing 50,000 Alberta and Saskatchewan farmers seeking parity between farm costs and returns appeared to hinge on Federal government willingness to broaden the composition of the agricultural prices support board.

The central strike committee of the Alberta Farmers' Union, whose 20,000 members precipitated the 21-day-old holdout of all farm produce, assembled in Edmonton today to consider Agriculture Minister Gardner's letter asking the Union and an estimated 30,000 members of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, to present their views to the Support Board.

Yesterday A.F.U. president Carl J. Stimpfle said Federal willingness to broaden composition of the Agricultural Prices Support Board probably would make it acceptable as a fact-finding agency on parity prices.

Although Mr. Stimpfle emphasized acceptance of the Board would not necessarily mean an end to the strike, it is known the A.F.U. considers the fact-finding agency the most important of their nine demands. Others include "satisfactory" floor prices for livestock, poultry and dairy products equitable adjustment of freight rates, removal of farm machinery price increases since 1941 and gasoline increases.

The strike front remained quiet again yesterday with pickets active in both provinces as they hindered deliveries of grain, livestock, eggs and cream. There were no reports of violence.

Small centres in northern Alberta continued to bear the main brunt of the strike with larger centres such as Calgary and Edmonto almost unaffected.

Ivanhoe

Ivanhoe — The Centre Hastings Ministerial Association met on Monday in the Sunday School rooms of Foxboro United Church with ten members present. It was decided to hold monthly instead of bi-monthly meetings, which were a wartime arrangement due to rationing of gasoline and tires. The October meeting is to be held at the Ivanhoe parsonage. At this meeting the Rev. A. Lloyd Shorten, of Foxboro is to present a paper for discussion upon a subject to be chosen by himself.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are: president, Rev. Murray Brownlie of Marmora; vice-president Rev. W. H. V. Walker, Stirling; secretary and treasurer, Rev. A. Lloyd Shorten, Foxboro; treasurer of the Hospitalization Plan, Rev. E. Oscar Wager, Belleville.

Freighter Hits Shoal.

According to word received here from fishermen at Salmon Point, a freighter bearing the name Trans-River ran aground on the rocky shoals there early this week, but was able to release herself without damage.

The freighter was first noticed just 50 feet from shore, by Fred Partington, a farmer, about one o'clock Tuesday morning. He was able to talk to men on the boat. About six hours later the boat managed to free itself from the shoal and left down the lake. It was rainy and foggy when it ran aground.

Samlon Point juts out into Lake Ontario in the same direction as Point Petre and quite a number of boats have gone aground there.

Duck hunters report splendid success in the past two days. Ducks have been plentiful and the weather ideal. The sound of gun fire has reverberated over the county's many lakes and bays each day, and many a housewife is preparing the seasonal duck dinners.

A minute of silence was observed in memory of the late William Branscombe, first president of the local Kinsmen Club.

Factories Busy.

Canning factories in Prince Edward County are still busy canning tomatoes. There are thousands of bushels still in the fields and the warm weather for several days has helped to ripen them. Some of the crop was late and if frosts hold off, farmers will be able to harvest the majority of them. Corn is now being picked and several factories are engaged in canning it. A good crop is reported. At Cherry Valley, peaches, plums, tomatoes and pears are being canned at the same time.

Peacetime Training Program for COTC Units Announced

Ottawa, Sept. 27 (CP)— The Defence Department today announced a two-phase peacetime training program for the Canadian Officers' Training Corps and said that Canadian universities with C.A.T.C. units now were accepting applications from "selected undergraduates."

The course, divided into theoretical and practical phases, is available to British subjects, aged 18 to 22, who are studying for a recognized degree and meet Canadian army physical standards. Students are required to state their willingness to complete the entire training program and select the corps in which they desire a commission.

The theoretical phase, conducted during the first three years at university, would consist of lectures and demonstrations and "from a background to supplement the detailed and practical knowledge acquired during the practical phase."

The practical phase would be conducted during summer vacation periods by attachments to the active army of "not more than four months duration each summer" and would consist of "detailed practical studies of general military subjects special to the corps in which the student is preparing for a commission."

Those accepted in the C.O.T.C. would be appointed temporary second lieutenants and be paid at reserve army rates for each day on duty.

UNTRAINED MAN REVIVES CHILD AFTER TIMELY RESCUE

NELSON GETZ WINS Dow Award

Driving his truck over a bridge near Moorefield, Ont., Nelson Getz suddenly jammed on his brakes. A small crowd was excitedly peering down into the Conestogo River. Sensing that something was wrong, Getz sprang from his truck... and then, seeing a child's body half submerged in the water under the bridge, he quickly leapt in. Fully clothed, he swam to the drowning 4-year-old girl . . . and brought her back to shore. She was unconscious . . . and Getz thought she was dead. Nevertheless, he commenced applying artificial respiration . . . and, although he had never practiced it before, was soon rewarded by the sound of the child's voice—at first a groan — and then a very welcome cry. The youngster's life had been saved.

For his cool, quick thinking and presence of mind, we are proud to present The Dow Award to Nelson Getz of Kitchener, Ontario.

THE DOW AWARD is a citation for outstanding heroism and includes, as a tangible expression of appreciation, a $100 Victory Bond. Winners are selected by The Dow Award Committee, a group of editors of leading Montreal daily newspapers.

Fair Board Deserves Credit

The success of any organization is dependent on those who guide the affairs of the unit and on the amount of work and imagination they put into their efforts. If there is plenty of energy and proper planning devoted to the work then success is usually the ultimate reward.

Belleville Fair which has just concluded a three-day show is a splendid example of what can be done to make a fair attractive and interesting. A fair which can attract over thirty thousand people can be judged a success by any standard. If there were complaints we did not hear of them. In fact we have heard of nothing but praise, and for this the executive officers can be given full credit.

President Sandercock and his Board of Directors have given far more time to the Belleville Fair than any one but themselves and their associates know. They have visited other successful fairs to get new ledas and incorporate worth-while ones in our own fair. Many conferences have had to be held from time to time and no doubt this was all done at considerable personal sacrifice. Nothing can be left to chance and the multitudinous detail which must be provided for is a great task which requires good thinking and good planning.

There is a saying 'To make money, you must spend money' and we are glad the directors have followed this to the extent they have. The new building for horses is a fine structure which won full approval of all those who visited it. The time is near at hand, also, when something of the same type should be constructed for other livestock. The present set-up is totally inadequate and out of line with other buildings on the grounds. There is room, too, for improvement of road surface leading to the livestock area. In wet weather the roadway can be unpleasant for those wishing to see these attractions.

Improvements cannot come all at once. With each succeeding year more funds will become available and this will encourage the directors to plan for bigger and better fairs. They have every right to be proud of their efforts this year and can look forward to a bright future for the Belleville Fair. May it always have fair weather.

A Fine Move

There are about 85,000 women give birth to progeny in Ontario every year. For the first time on record, a government in Canada is instituting a free system for pre-natal examination, preferably in the third month of pregnancy. The government will pay the charge of five dollars per examination to any physician the expectant mother may choose. In 1944, there were more than 2,000 still-births in Ontario. The aim is to reduce this number to the minimum, also the number of infants who do not survive 24 hours, which is very considerable. The answer to the problem is advice on pre-natal care.

The move instituted by Hon. Russell Kelley, Minister of Health, is of much more far-reaching consequence than the mere expenditure involved. It is truly educational, and will have a cumulative effect in that direction over the years. There are thousands of women, to whom medical advice in pregnancy is unknown. When the government shows its supreme value for one examination, it naturally follows that expectant mothers will go more for it, depend upon it to a much greater extent. The giving of new life is not haphazard now, as in the old days. There are safeguards with which it can be surrounded, due to the progress of medical science. This new measure is for the help of the Forgotten Woman, even in the backwoods, says the St. Catharines Standard in commenting on the new order.

Hon. Russell Kelley, the Minister of Health, is not a member of the medical profession, but he has always been a man keenly intelligent of and in sympathy with human needs. There can only be general approval and commendation of this new step to help the mothers of tomorrow, to preserve the race and keep it stronger.

Last of the Superliners?

It is to be a brilliant social season for Atlantic superliners, what with the coming-out parties planned for the Queen Elizabeth and the America about mid-October. Voyaging in such immense ocean castles is always gay and glamorous. They hold deserving popularity not alone for the luxury these lordly ships impart but for the power and dynamic drive they pack in the swift rhythm of their long ocean strides. Just to be on hand on sailing day, to mingle with the passengers in the great cabin and along the promenade decks in the magic hour that precedes the call, "All ashore who are going ashore!" could hardly fail to thrill even the most stolid stay-at-home.

Re-entry of Britain and the United States into this luxurious mode of trans-Atlantic travel stirs considerable speculation about the economic prospects of the superliner. Popularity and profits are not always synonmous, comments the Christian Science Monitor. Even before World War Two is was no secret within the maritime trade that excessive operating costs made many a large passenger ship something of a seagoing white elephant, whose operating deficits had to be charged up to such dubious imponderables as company advertising and national prestige.

A new factor has emerged to challenge the feasibility of maintaining oversized ocean liners. That is trans-oceanic air service, in which the time-saving advantages are considerable and the difference in cost with first-class superliner fares is relatively slight. Ocean air travel is making a strong bid for the business that in the decade prior to the war was enjoyed by the superliners that made the Atlantic crossing in about four days. No one can say yet where this competition will end, but it is not unlikely that ships like the Queen Elizabeth and America are the last of their kind.

Whole Nation Affected

It's quite possible that you've never heard of soda ash. Until quite recently it did not figure very much in the news. But whether you know it or not, it affects almost every phase of your daily life.

Soda ash is an industrial necessity. It is produced at only one factory in Canada—a comparatively small chemical plant at Amherstburg. The employees number only four hundred, but they happen to be on strike. The result is this:

The big paper mills are worried over the possibility of cutting production, even making temporary layoffs, because they are running short of soda ash.

The production of aluminum, from which so many household utensils are made, is being cut appreciably for want of soda ash.

Bottle manufacturers and users are making frantic appeals to the public to conserve bottles. The dairy industry, according to the president of the National Dairy Council, can only function normally for a short time more unless housewives return every possible bottle. All this for want of soda ash.

And if the Amherstburg strike were settled today, it would take nearly two months to get glass-making furnaces back to the required 2,700-degree temperature.

What is the moral of all this? Just think about it for a while.

"HAD TO PAY"

Used to hear it many a day:
"This is what I had to pay!"
Shoes or bonnet, coat or hat,
Home she'd come to tell me that.
Always I would hear her say:
"This is what I had to pay!"

Used to smile, those happier days,
Hearing such a well-worn phrase.
Used to chuckle in reply:
"No one ordered you to buy;
Could have turned and gone away;
No one said you had to pay."

Used to think it just her way,
Telling me, "I had to pay."
Wives of other men, I've heard,
Use that sentence, word for word.
Home from shopping, always they Tell them this: "I had to pay!"

Used to smile at it back then!
Now, to hear it once again
I'd rejoice at all she'd spent,
Pay the bills and be content.
Glad I'd be to have her say:
"This is what I had to pay!"

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why is a kind of ale called porter?

"Porter" in this connection is short for "porter's ale" or "porter ale."

The term has been used in the sense of a kind of "small ale" at least since 1725. Porter's ale was originally a mixture of ale and stout and was so called because it was a favorite drink of porters.

"Porter" is derived from Latin "portare," carry, convey, transport, and at one time carriers and laborers of all sorts were called porters.

Modern porter is basically the same as beer, ale and stout. It is a dark brown, heavy English malt liquor, rich in saccharine matter and containing about four percent of alcohol.

George Washington was fond of this kind of ale or beer and often drank porter at his meals.

A place where porter and ale were sold at retail was called a porterhouse or alehouse. "Porterhouse" in this sense was used in America as early as 1800. Food was often served in porterhouses and the term in time became synonymous with "chophouse" or "restaurant."

The porterhouse steak is supposed to have received its name from its having been a favorite at a porterhouse or at the porterhouses of New York. There are many stories relating the exact circumstances under which the porterhouse steak got its name, but none of them can be confirmed.

A porterhouse steak is a thick, juicy, choice beefsteak cut from between the sirloin and tenderloin.

Some authorities believe that "porterhouse steak" was suggested by some early hotel named "The Porter House" after the analogy of "Parker House roll," which takes its name from the Parker House, a hotel in Boston established by Harvey D. Parker, who first served hot, soft rolls made from flat circular pieces of dough folded over.

Two Parties Seek To Oust Govt. In Australia

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Sydney, Australia, Sept. 27 —(CP)—A quiet campaign contested largely on domestic issues drew to a close tonight as Australians prepared to vote — under penalty of fine for non-exercise of franchise —in tomorrow's general election.

Seeking return to office is the Labor party, headed by Prime Minister Chifley, which held a commanding total of 49 seats in the last House of Representatives. Two opposition parties—the Liberals under Robert C. Menzies and the Country Party led by Arthur Fadden—have joined forces in an attempt to oust the government.

In the previous house, elected in 1943, Mr. Menzies counted 15 members and Mr. Fadden 10. The remaining seat in the 75-member house was held by an Independent.

Also to be filled Saturday are 19 seats in the elective, 36-seat Senate. Normally half the body is elected every three years—maximum life of an Australian parliament—for six-year-terms, insuring a constant number of experienced Senators.

Labor men hold the 17 seats which will not be contested and thus seem assured of a majority in the Upper House.

Third Issue

A third issue will be placed before the electorate by a simultaneous referendum to decide whether constitutional powers of the Federal government are to be broadened to permit it to increase its social services and control primary production and marketing as well as to regulate conditions of employment.

There are 233 nominees for the 75 house seats which break down by parties as follows: Labor, 74; Liberals, 60; Country, 26; Servicemen's Party—a newly-formed group—18; Communists—a party which never has held a seat—14; Independent Labor—led by colorful 70-year-old John Lang— 11; Protestant People's Party, six. Five parties have entered one candidate apiece and there are 19 Independents. There are no acclamations.

Under the preferential voting system, Australians will mark their ballots of numbering "1" after their first choice, "2" after their second, and so on.

The compulsory voting law — providing fines up to £2 ($6.40) —is expected to draw out a record 4,500,00 electors.

If the over-all tally is close, the fate of Mr. Chifley's government may not be known until after counting resumes at 5:30 p.m. Sunday (2:30 a.m. E.S.T.) or perhaps for several days thereafter.

Air Passage For Pilgrims

New Delhi, Sept. 27 —(CP)—During the war years dangerous travelling conditions virtually barred Indian pilgrims from Mecca and consequently the demand for passages this year is far above normal despite the fact that the cost of the journey has more than doubled.

Only seven out of 10 pilgrim ships remain and, with the enforcement of a new regulation increasing the shipping space available for each pilgrim from 16 to 18 square feet, their carrying capacity will be considerably reduced. Even if these ships make two trips they will be able to transport only 15,000 out of an estimated 20,000 to 25,000 pilgrims who wish to visit the Holy City.

Under the circumstances arrangements have been made for 96 pilgrims to travel from India to the Hedjas by air this year at a cost of approximately $1,300. Three planes with accommodation for 32 passengers will be chartered.

DEFINITELY, EH?

A New York specialist—specialist in what branch of medicine or surgery I can only infer from the context, ophthalmology, it would seem, is the author of this characteristic bit of medical blab:

"It has been definitely proven that thousands of people have been needlessly subjected to attacks of sinusitis and other respiratory diseases by the unwarranted exposure of an uncovered head."

In the first place let us consider the categories of people who use the word definitely. Most numerous are the lamebrains who, once they have mastered the pronunciation of the word, employ it as often as possible, apparently under the impression that it sound sophisticated. It sounds as inane as "positively" or "absolutely" when so abused. Then there is the less numerous but equally offensive class who use the term as the Manhattan doctor used it — in a childish endeavor to bolster up their own doubt of what they would have you believe.

Now, old almanac grads, if you happen to have chronic sinusitis, do keep your shirt on — and your hat 'n' muffler 'n' chest protector 'n' everything — wear whatever you find most comfortable under the changing circumstances. Indeed, I advise every one to do that—wear or leave off whatever you wish whenever you wish—your own personal comfort and that alone is the safest guide, so far as health and hygiene may be concerned. This applies to young children, youths, adults and old folks.

Makes no difference whether you happen to be subject to sinus trouble, "catarrh," "delicate" throat, "weak" lungs or whatever —your own physical (not mental) comfort unerringly dictates what you should wear or not wear for the good of your health.

There, there, now, my dear fussbudget, your sinus trouble gives you the right to behave that way, I suppose. I'm just telling ordinary folk about hygiene — I don't expect you to accept my advice. Long ago I learned the hard way that Wiseacres (in my lexicon a Wiseacre is one who thinks he knows as much or a little more than a doctor does about his ailment) with sinus trouble, like those with colon derangement (mucous colitis, they like to call it) and those with—well what they want the world to call weak nerves, are all in the same boat—they'de be unhappy without their symptoms and their claim upon the special indulgence of everybody else.

The New York doctor or specialist knew his Wiseacres, all right, when he singled out sinusitis and lumped all else as other respiratory diseases — notice he did not say infections.

Odd how they cherish these quaint legends in New York, while in Boston, as you may have read in this column, the view of such representative physicians as Dr. Vlado Getting, State health commissioner, and Dr. Cecil Dirnker, dean of Harvard Public Health School, regarding such things as sitting in the full blast of an electric fan or sitting out in a snowbank wearing only a pair of shorts, so far as pneumonia or other illness (other than frostbite, that is) is concerned, is expressed in one word: "Bosh!"

Aussies Fight Traffic Toll

Sydney, Australia, Sept. 27 —(CP)— Australia's traffic accident rate is climbing steadily to pre-war figures though there are fewer automobiles on the roads now and gasoline rationing still applies.

At present the number of people killed and injured daily in traffic accidents is about 50 compared with the pre-war peak rate of 78. During the war a total of 115,000 died or were hurt in road accidents, a figure 20,000 greater than the total of Australian casualties in the Second Great War.

New South Wales state is responsible for 60 of the Australian road toll and the State's Road Safety Council has opened a campaign against the accident rate with the co-operation of automobile associations and local administrations.

Films, posters, newspaper and radio advertisements are being employed to urge greater precaution on motorists and pedestrians. There are lectures to school children, 1,000 of whom under the age of 15 are road accident victims in New South Wales every year.

WARNING
HOUSEHOLD FUEL

Parts of Canada face a shortage of fuel for domestic use

This situation has been caused by the strikes of coal miners, the seaman's strike in the early summer which retarded shipments and the strike at the steel mills which has created a grave shortage of coke for domestic use.

To Protect Your Family Next Winter:

1—Order your fuel at once if you have not already done so.
2—Accept whatever suitable fuel your dealer can supply whenever he can make delivery. (At present there are satisfactory substitute fuels available).

Conserve Your Fuel Wherever Possible:

1—Do not light your furnace until absolutely necessary.
2—Fire your furnace carefully and save every shovelful of fuel you can.
3—Do not overheat your house.

TAKE THIS WARNING SERIOUSLY

Fuel will be scarce before winter is over.
Conserve your supply for cold weather.

WEDDINGS

BROWN—CAMPBELL

Baskets of vari-colored gladioli and ferns formed the setting in Calvary Baptist Church, Oshawa, for a picturesque Autumn wedding at 3 p.m., Saturday afternoon, Sept. 21, when Audrey Bernice Campbell, daughter of Mrs. J. S. Campbell and the late Mr. Campbell was united in marriage to Robert William Brown, of Belleville, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Brown, of Picton, Ontario. Rev. S. Helmer, of Dunnville, Ont., performed the ceremony. Mrs. Frank Henkelman was at the piano, and Mr. Ross Alloway, violinist, rendered "Because" just before the ceremony. Mrs. George Delaney of Toronto, and Miss Ruby Brown of Picton, sister of the groom, sang "O Perfect Love" during the signing of the register.

Given in marriage by her brother, Mr. W. A. Campbell, recently returned from overseas, the bride was lovely in a gown of white taffeta and point d'esprit, designed with round neckline outlined with a crisp frill, the bodice was shirred to give a soft fullness, and was fastened with tiny buttons in the back to the waistline, the sleeves ending in lily points over the hands. The graceful skirt of point d'esprit over taffeta swept into a short train; her long veil of embroidered net, extending beyond the train of her gown, was caught with a French coronet of iridiscent sequins. Her only ornament was a double strand of pearls and she carried a white Bible and a shower bouquet of white roses. Misses Winnifred Campbell and Muriel Campbell were bridesmaids for their sister. They wore similar gowns of taffetta faille and net in green and gold respectively, styled with moulded bodice, buttoned at the back, with short puff sleeves, round neckline and bouffant skirts of net with slight trains. They wore long mitts and headdresses of the same material as their gowns, and carried arm bouquets of bronze chrysanthemums and Talisman roses with long ribbon streamers, and their only jewellery was the bride's gifts English flower pendants on black velvet ribbon.

Mr. Louie Rorabeck, of Picton, attended the groom. Messrs. Carman Pattern and Victor Henkelman of Oshawa and Mr. Scott Hale, of Picton, were ushers.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at Adelaide House. The bride's mother received wearing a black crepe, street length dress with sequin trimming; black hat accented with powder blue, and a corsage of red roses. The groom's mother assisted wearing flowered crepe street length dress, navy blue accessories and corsage of roses. Mrs. Norton McBrien, aunt of the bride, poured tea and as the bride and groom cut the wedding cake, Mr. Ross Alloway played "When You Come Home". At the close of the reception Mrs. George Delaney and Miss Ruby Brown sang "A Wedding Prayer".

For a wedding trip to points west the bride chose a green English wool suit, matching hat, brown accessories and contrasting corsage. On their return they will reside in Belleville.

Brough Lodge Attracts Many U.S. Tourists

Marmora.—Among the various tourists camps near Bancroft, and just across the border of Hastings County in the neighboring county of Haliburton, which has just concluded a successful season is Brough Lake Lodge. The Lodge had its initial season this year being on what has been known as the old Evans' place. The rest of the shore line of the lake is on Crown lands. Guests have returned to their respective homes with pleasant memories of their vacation at one of Ontario's prettiest and most secluded lakes, where they witnessed good catches of small mouth bass. Post's Bran Flakes put the Accent on Flavor
...and provide other valuable food essentials
FOODS that are good for you should be good to eat, too. And that's a good way of describing Post's Bran Flakes.
Certainly they have an enticing flavor—malty-sweet, nut-like, delightfully different. You'll want to enjoy them regularly for breakfast.
That's an excellent idea, because Post's Bran Flakes contain enough bran to help keep you alert and on your toes. Bran, you know, is a natural regulator.
But Post's Bran Flakes supply other important food benefits, too, not found in every bran cereal. Proteins, carbohydrates, iron and phosphorus—good, sound wheat nourishment.
And remember, Post's Bran Flakes are just as delicious and effective in light, tender bran muffins. Recipe on both Regular and Giant Economy packages.

Fishing Areas Clear of Mines

London, Sept. 27 —(Reuters)— Sixteen minesweepers of the Royal Navy, now back in their British bases, spent two months making the coasts of Iceland and the Denmark Strait safe for the world's fishing fleets.

It has been one of their most protracted and arduous post-war missions and they swept up to the limits of the Northern Ice Pack, operating in perpetual daylight.

The craft operated from Reykjavik and Seydisfjordur where, during a short stand-off period, "several of the more ardent members sallied forth and succeeded in placing a shirt on a pinnacle overlooking the fjord," as an officer put it.

PROBE SWITCHES

Congress Desires Definite Action On Greater Unity

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Windsor, Sept. 27 — (CP) — The 61st convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada concluded yesterday with delegates expressing desire for definite action toward greater unity in the ranks of organized labor.

That stand was taken in support of resolutions which directed Congress officers to take steps toward establishment of a national co-ordinating council on which representatives of all trade union centres in Canada would cooperate.

It came up again when the convention went on record favoring affiliation with the World Federation of Trade Unions. Previously the T.L.C., while endorsing the principle of the federation at its 1944 convention, had followed the example of the American Federation of Labor in staying outside the federation. The A.F.L. had explained its position was based on the belief the federation was Communist-dominated.

Delegates said they saw in yesterday's resolution further evidence of the determination of the Trades and Labor Congress to be autonomous.

The convention protested removal of the federal milk subsidy and decided to wire the federal government to this effect. "This means shifting the load from those best able to afford it on to the shoulders of those least able," commented Percy R. Bengough, Ottawa, T.L.C. president.

The convention went on record seeking a 50 per cent increase in unemployment insurance, with payments effective from the first day and covering the entire period workers are out of a job. The Congress executive was instructed to have a model Workmen's Compensation Act prepared, providing 100 per cent compensation starting from the time a workman is injured.

Resolutions were also adopted seeking introduction of a comprehensive social insurance scheme, and the removal of wartime restrictions on the sale of beer.

AIRMEN SURVEY NATIONAL PARK

6,500 Square-Mile Area in Manitoba is Being Mapped

Yorktown, Sask., Sept. 27 — (CP)— A pup named Pru, 16 Royal Canadian Air Force personnel and two yellow-colored aircraft today are engaged in Operation Duck—a project mapping out by air 6,500 square miles of the Riding Mountain National Park area in west-central Manitoba.

Large tracts of the area, about 120 miles northwest of Winnipeg are being mapped for the first time by Detachment No. Five of No. 14 Photographic Squadron, Rockcliffe, Ont. The detachment is using the airport at this town 100 miles northeast of Regina, as its base.

Flt.-Lt. J. M. Gibson, who served as a Spitfire pilot in North Africa, is in command of the unit. He said that on old maps of the area many lakes are marked upside down with shore lines the reverse of their actual alignment.

Economical Survey.

Twin-engined Anson aircraft with cameras fitted in the nose are doing the job at a cost estimated at 1/10 of the former land survey methods. They cruise at about 130 miles an hour at an altitude of 12,000 to 13,000 feet and map out several hundred square miles each day during clear weather.

Flying east and west over the area, the cameras take a shot every 20 seconds, making an "overlap" strip picture of the terrain.

The undeveloped films are sent to Ottawa where they are processed and the strips fitted together to make the complete picture of the area. From this experts can identify types of rock and mineral formations, signs of oil beds, and whether trees are hard or soft wood variety.

The flying job is exacting for the pilot must keep the altitude of the plane within 50 feet of the specified level and the navigator must be accurately on his course to within a few hundred feet.

Duck is one of five R.C.A.F. detachments doing surveys for mines, fisheries, highways and forests federal departments.

CANADA UNLIMITED — The Formative Years

"Navigation Flight"—After a painting by Donald Anderson, Official War Artist, R.C.A.F. War Records

+ + + Wings for the Youth of Empire + + +

FROM THE FAR CORNERS of the Empire they came—bronzed striplings from the Antipodes, pink-cheeked youths from England, lads from India and from the Indies—to train for the greatest battle of all time under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

Over Canadian prairies, forests and towns they won their wings, and with them flew the youth of Canada, closely integrated in a new unity of purpose and a new understanding. Their courage, and the skill they learned in Canadian skies, held the enemy at bay during the dark years of the war and provided a flashing spearhead for the final victory . . . We shall be forever indebted to them.

The training of 225,000 men for air force duty was a major Canadian contribution towards the winning of the war, but equally important, it was a portent of future greatness, for out of such unified and far-reaching efforts will come the Canada of tomorrow—Canada Unlimited.

To each of us whose savings went into Victory Bonds to contribute to this great achievement, there remains the continuing challenge to hold those Bonds as our investments in a glowing future.

Greenberg Needs Only 3 More Home Runs to Break R. York's Single-Month Record of 18

Detroit's First Baseman Hit His 43rd and 44th in Thursday's Encounter

By JOE REICHLER
Associated Press Sports Writer

Hank Greenberg, Detroit's hard hitting first baseman, who yesterday collected his 43rd and 44th home runs, needs only one in each of Tiger's last three games to break Rudy York's single month record of 18 established in August, 1937.

Bothered by a troublesome back, sore feet and sore hands throughout most of the season, which only two months ago caused critics to say he was washed up, Greenberg slowly but surely appears to be regaining his pre-war form.

Greenberg's pair of round trippers brought his September total to 16 as he helped the Tigers defeat St. Louis Brown 6-3.

The battling Brooklyn Dodgers cut St. Louis Cardinals' National League lead to a mere half-game when they defeated Philadelphia Phils 8-2 before a capacity crowd of 31,708 at Ebbetts' Field.

The Cards, idle yesterday, have three games left to play compared to only two for the Brooks. Each team plays its remaining games at home, the Cards taking on Chicago Cubs in all three games and the Dodgers clashing with the Boston Braves.

The Dodgers victory proved costly, however, since outfielder Pete Reiser suffered a broken fibula in his left leg sliding back to first base in the first inning.

The Dodgers got off to a one-run lead in the first inning, knocked out Charlie Schanz in the fourth with a four-run outburst and added two more against Oscar Judd of Ingersoll, Ont., and one at the expense of Charlie Stanceu. Joe Medwick banged out a two-run homer in the sixth.

Kirby Higbe had a three-hit shutout for seven innings but was tagged for three safeties in the eighth which accounted for both Philly scores.

The Cubs came up with four runs in the last half of the eighth to defeat Pittsburgh Pirates 5-3 and break a third place deadlock with the Braves, as Boston was held to a split by New York Giants.

Mort Cooper nabbed the first game for the Braves 8-9 with a neat three-hit performance, but the Giants won the second 5-4.

With Mickey Haffner outpitching Jess Flores, Washington Senators shut out Philadelphia Athletics 2-0.

No other teams were scheduled.

OTTAWA, ARGOS TILT FEATURE OF WEEKEND GAMES

Leading Toronto Team Will Be Minus Services of Doty and Myers

(By The Canadian Press)

The wound and fury emanating from Ottawa Saturday won't be from the House of Commons—it will be from Lansdowne Park where the Ottawa Roughriders have every hope of trouncing the Dominion Champion Toronto Argonauts.

Argos at the moment have a two-point lead over Ottawa in the Eastern Big Four League. But the Argos have finally lost the services of quarterbacks Fred Doty and Billy Myers to the University of Toronto and their last encounter in which they narrowly evaded defeat showed the loss weakened the double blue.

A week ago with Doty and Myers in harness, Argos received Ottawa at Toronto, and won by a single point only after the entire Argo line combined to block Ottawa's attempted last-minute convert for a tie. On Wednesday night, minus the college players, Argos actually were tied 15-15 by the lowly Hamilton Tigers. It required Joe Krol's punting, passing and running to avert defeat.

The Argo-Ottawa clash is one of six Canadian Senior games over the weekend. The other Eastern Inter-Provincial game, when Montreal Alouettes welcome Hamilton Tigers, will be played Sunday.

Before the fray starts, a glance at the standings shows Argos with six points, Ottawa four, Montreal three and Hamilton one.

A full schedule of three games in the Senior Ontario Union, all on Saturday, sees Ottawa Trojans at Toronto Indians, Toronto Balmy Beach at Hamilton Wildcats and the Windsor Rockets at Sarnia Imperials.

The loop-leading Indians looked a safe bet to keep their margin to two points at top of the standing for their visitors Saturday have yet to win a game while Indians have taken three in a row.

How the Hamilton and Sarnia games will come out is in the lap of the gods. At the moment Hamilton and Sarnia are tied for second place and their respective opponents are two points farther back.

In the West the leading Calgary Stampeders are idle this weekend while the Winnipeg Blue Bombers entertain the last-place Saskatchewan Rough Riders from Regina.

POLICE INVADE "DOG INFERNO"

Southampton, England, Sept. 26 ..(CP)— Three men armed with sticks and truncheons fought their way through a "Dante's inferno" of savage dogs to arrest their owner and clean up a "dog den' 'on the outskirts of Southampton.

Charles Edwards, 65, was sent to jail for three months for causing unnecessary suffering to seven dogs. Inspectors told of savage attacks by dogs chained in kennels made of oil drums, broken boxes, pieces of wood and old cisterns.

"It was a kind of Dante's inferno experience," said one.

BOSTON HURLING CORPS WILL BE BEST IN SERIES

Red Sox Team Does Not Like Southpaws Any Too Well

By JOE REICHLER

New York, Sept. 27 (AP)—Boston Red Sox, on paper at least, appear to have a tremendous pitching advantage over either Brooklyn or St. Louis in the forthcoming world's series, but the National League entrant, be it the Cards or Dodgers, will be armed with the weapon that has had more than fair success against the Red Sox sluggers during the regular season—southpaw pitching.

The Boston pitching staff overshadows those of the Cards and Dodgers so completely that it is almost useless to make comparisons. In Dave Ferris, a 25-game winner; ex Hughson with 19 victories and Mickey Harris, with 17 triumphs, the Sox boast a trio which has won 61 games. Compared to this, the Cards' best three, Howie Pollett, Murry Dickson, and Harry Brecheen, have won only 48 while the Dodgers' top three, Kirby Higbe, Vic Lombardi and Joe Hatten, have notched 43.

But here is the rub. The Sox winner of 103 games, have been able to win only 15 times from lefthanders compared to 14 defeats by portsiders.

Now it so happens that Pollett, a 20-game winner with the Cards this season and Brecheen, who is a better pitcher than his 14-15 record, pitch with the left hand. And Hatten and Lombardi, winner of 13 apiece with the Brooks, also are southpaws.

Of course the above named are not the only pitchers on their respective teams. The Sox own a pretty fair pitcher with one of the best curve balls in the business in Joe Dobson who has won 13 and lost six.

The Cards can counter with George (Red) Munger, who has won two out of three since returning from the army in late August.

As for the Dodgers nobody can guess who Leo Durocher would start. He may come up with an untried youngster like Ralph Branca, who has astounded the baseball world only two weeks ago with his shutout victory over the Red Birds after warming the bench most of the year.

COLONELS MAP SERIES STRATEGY

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 27 (AP)—Louisville Colonels of the American Association mapped final stragegy today for their clash here Saturday night with Montreal Royals of the International League in the first of the Little World Series games.

The Royals tucked the International League's Governors' Cup series away last night with a 7-4 triumph over Syracuse Chiefs and left Syracuse last night for Louisville. Montreal beat Syracuse four games to one, in a best-of-seven series.

The Colonels previously had won a berth in the Little World Series by taking four straight games from Indianapolis Indians in the American Association play-off finals.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

Coach Speedy St. Louis was non-committal today when asked by this desk who would be his pitching choice for the third game between the Belleville Kiwanis Juniors and the Ottawa Wrightvilles scheduled for the Megaffin Stadium, Kingston, tomorrow at 3 of the clock.

• • •

"The boys are in fine shape for the battle, and I have the greatest faith in them," was his reply. "Personally I think the kids, if they play the brand of baseball of which they are capable can take this Hull team, and with a ten-day rest under their belts they should be in top-notch condition."

• • •

"Agreed," we replied, "but who are you sending to the mound. Bunton should be ready and you have Kelleher, Fitzpatrick and young Art. Wright able to go out there."

"There are a lot of people in this town who have their doubts as to our ability to win tomorrow," came back the Speedy, "but I doubt if there is one of them or anyone else as far as that is concerned who knows these young hellions better than I."

• • •

"You have done a marvellous job with the kids, bringing them to their present high status," we agreed, "and in our opinion the kids will go out there and give all they've got in an effort to cop the win tomorrow," he said, "but who is your choice for the mound assignment?"

• • •

'Y'know,' said Speedy, showing his mail-carrier's bag further back on the bald spot, "if these kids hit tomorrow like they did in that game in Peterboro against Oshawa, they should take the Wrightvilles handily. But they've got to hit to win. Hits mean runs and runs win a ball game especially if you've got one more than the other fellow."

• • •

That not being of much news value, we tried another tack. "We hear that Bunton's arm is in good shape and the kid is rarin' to go against the old enemies from Hull. How about it?"

• • •

"Bunton's arm is all right," he grinned, "so is Huck Reeves. Verny Green's legs are in fine shape and Kelleher is still able to tuck a quarter pound of 'Brown Mule' in his jaw. Fitzpatrick's batting eye appears to be back at the old stand and 'Mouse' Bush's throwing flipper is as good as ever."

"Yeah," in a bit of exasperation, "the town clock is still running; so is Niagara Falls, the mail must go through and the sun rises in the east. Now, talk, chum. WHO is going to get that chucking job tomorrow?"

• • •

Speedy mounted his trusty bike. "Newhouser for the Tigers and likely Feller for the Indians. Seeya in Kingston, mate," and he pedalled away with a burst of speed that would make Torchy Peden look like a tyro.

• • •

The juniors will leave by bus from the YMCA at approximately 12.30 tomorrow, and there is every indication that a large following of fans will accompany them. Train service is such that fans can easily be in Kingston by game time and back in this city by mid-evening. Trains leave here, it is understood at 1.20 p.m. returning from Kingston at 8.20 fast time, that is.

• • •

The Wrightvilles will very likely throw their ace Bobby Laurialt against our prides in the "croocial" tilt. Laurialt is a starry left-hander who has plenty between the ears as well as on the ball. In any event, it should be a honey of a game, and whichever team loses, will know they have been in a baseball game and beaten by one of the best teams in Ontario.

• • •

Kitchener's junior OBA entry eliminated the starry Windsor kids in two straight games in their series and Toronto's Columbus Grads took out the Niagara Falls entry by the same margin of wins. Grads and Kitchener will now hook up in the semi-finals series and the winner will clash with the winner of the Belleville-Ottawa game tomorrow for the Ontario junior title.

• • •

If the Kiwanis win tomorrow and go on and win the title they will have done it the hard way. Other teams in the running have played but two series and the present one is the third for the local kids. They will be worthy champions indeed if they come through, and there are thousands of fans in this city pulling for them to do just that.

• • •

Batawa residents are agog over the baseball epic being played in their bailiwick tomorrow afternoon when the Shoemen duel with Niagara Falls in a double-header OBA Intermediate playdown series. The first game starts at 2 p.m. and will likely see "Smoky" Smith out there in an effort to cop the all-important opener. Lotsa luck to the Easton - Duncan crew.

• • •

When the old-time great wrestler Stanley Stasiak died in Belleville hospital away back when, this city went on the international sporting map with the news. Tonight, it is just possible that the town may again hit the world sport news spotlight for champion Wild Bill Longson will be battling Larrupin' Lee Henning and anything can happen. And it probably will — but just what is hard to predict.

• • •

This wild and wicked Iowa Cornhusker may have become a very unpopular man in the wrestling fans' bad books around here but no one can gainsay the fact that Lee 'The Scowl' can wrestle out a consistent winning streak. When Henning gets an opponent going on that rope trick or that equally ruthless turnbuckle manoeuvre of his, it has always spelled curtains for said opposition.

• • •

What a spectacle that will be if Henning can get the World Champion roped up and start in on his devastating smashes and kicks to the tied-up titleholder. The world title can change hands right then and there for the National Wrestling Association has officially okayed the match with Longson's title laid squarely on the line. The N.W.A. controls or supervises professional wrestling in some thirty-nine of the United States, Canada, Mexico and South America so Longson's title recognition means something to the mat world.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

(By The Canadian Press)

Montreal sports columnists are so keen on the Little World Series hopes of their baseball Royals that they are giving but scant space to the training camp capers of their hockey Canadiens. Maybe the up-and-coming football Alouettes also have something to do with the lack of pre-season tub-thumping on behalf of hockey's world champions.

It's a different tale in Toronto where the baseball Maple Leafs failed to make the playoffs and the fans seem willing to absorb training camp gossip hopeful that their hockey Leafs won't meet a similar fate in the National League.

Eddie Shore, who seldom missed all-star rating when he played defence with Boston Bruins, was on the sidelines as the Leafs drilled in St. Catharines yesterday. Eddie was enroute to Barrie, Ont., where part of his minor league farm system is in training.

Manager Conn Smythe in a dressing-room pep talk let his Leaf charges know that he does not want them to feel proud of the team's record last year — the least penalized. He said he wanted a squad which carried shoulder chips, took the ice that way and fought all the way.

Smythe decried talk of unionism and said his players were well enough paid to forget such ideas. He promised there would be no more talk from him on that particular topic for the balance of the season.

A "rookie parade" took over the afternoon session in the Montreal camp and Leo Gravelle, speedy forward with Montreal's amateur Royals last season, impressed coach Dick Irvin. A few extra pounds seemed to have given the crafty centre a lot of added drive.

It seems that the Bentley brothers, Doug and Max, sneaked a few skating drills before they reported to the Regina camp of Chicago Black Hawks. In their first drill they flew so fast manager Bill Tobin advised them to slow down. All fears that a late-season crash with Montreal's Toe Blake would slow up little Doug can be forgotten — he's as fast as ever.

Counting on injuries and giving every player a chance to earn his place in the big time manager Frank Boucher plans to carry his players on New York Rangers roster in the early part of the N.H.L. schedule. Six defencemen, 12 forwards and one goalie will be used although Frank will be able to dress only 15 exclusive of his netminder.

Six members of last season's New York Rovers, amateur club in the Ranger chain, have been sent to Port Arthur where they will lineup with Muzz Patrick's St. Paul club. Muzz himself seemed headed for starry defence spot when war cut his big-league career short. After a few years service with the United States Army Muzz wasn't able to hold his berth last winter.

Canadian Sport Snapshot

By FRED KERNER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 27 —(CP)— Don't tell a chess fiend this, but the Amateur Athletic Federation of Canada ranks chess in a general category with horseshoe pitching, checkers and marbles. Chess, it seems, is one of the few games — if not the only one — in which professionals and amateurs may mingle freely and accept cash awards without endangering their play status.

It is perhaps because of the fact the A.A.F. of C. calls chess a pastime and not a sport that Abe Yanofsky, the young Winnipeg chess master, will not lose his "amateur" standing for having been awarded the princely sum of $40 when he finished 14th in the recent international chess federation tourney at Groningen, Holland.

For that matter, the pastime — or science or art, as some insist— of chees goes unrecognized by the International Olympic Committee. Added to which G. S. Halter of Winnipeg, president of the A. A. F. of C., says "if the chess federation approves cash prizes, its all right with the amateur authorities."

So, despite the protestations of masters — and "just players" — chess continues to be classed in the same pastime category as archery, bowling, euchre, bridge and other card games.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Face an obvious fact in bridge. To fulfill any bid, your pair must take the number of tricks contracted for. Consequently, your numeral in any bid is a trick-taking promise.

If your bid is one, your pair agrees to take seven tricks. If you bid two, it needs eight tricks. A bid of three requires taking nine tricks. These are facts that will not be denied.

Nothing mysterious about any of this. Each player is entitled to an average of three tricks; six in a pair. Each bidding numeral simply states how many tricks above the pair average of six.

There you have the basic meaning of the bidding word one. It says: "Partner, you must help me take one trick in excess of our expected total average of six tricks."

Let me remind you that partner is entitled to an average of three tricks. But at the same time let me warn you that he may not have his average. Provide for this possible lack. Count on him for two.

If you are the first bidder in a deal, you are known as opener or opening bidder. If you open with one, you say you have better than average in all essential items. Among these are tricks.

Your own average is three tricks. Better than average would be four tricks. But you must also prove for the one short of average in partner. Consequently, an opening one bidder needs five tricks.

Besides these five tricks, an opening one bidder also says he has better than average in sure tricks, high cards. Therefore, he must also have four high cards with two sure tricks among them.

You are the dealer with this hand:

♠A 10 6
♥K 8 4 3
♦A J 10 6
♣K 7

You have two sure tricks (two aces), four high cards (two aces and two kings), five tricks (four high cards and a short card in clubs.) Open with one diamond. Enough is enough.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.

New York, Sept. 27 — (AP) — If precedent and punch mean anything, tonight's Tony Zale - Rocky Graziano middleweight championship fight will end in a knockout . . . There has been at least one title bout in every other division this year and all but one of them wound up on the floor . . . Joe Louis stiffened Billy Conn and Tami Mauriello; Gus Lesnevich stopped Freddie Mills in England; Marty Servo flattened Red Cochrane to take the welterweight crown; Bob Montgomery knocked out Allie Stolz in a lightweight title bout; Willie Pep stopped Sal Bartolo, a rival claimant for the feather title, and Manuel Ortiz finished Luis Castillo . . . The only champion who had to go the full distance was flyweight Jackie Patterson in turning back Joe Curran's challenge.

Today's Guset Star

Carter (Scoop) Latimer, Greenville, S.C., News: "No wonder the country at large has a meat shortage; all the beef is out there on the football fields."

Sport Before Your Eyes

When Rev. Benney J. C. Benson prayed for the success of the Dodgers, apparently the only one who listened was Deacon Bill McKechnie . . . Detroit Tigers expect a sellout crowd of 56,000 Sunday for the second Hal Newhouser-Bob Feller mound duel. All the 40,000 reserved seats were sold by mid-week . . . And when Pittsburgh Steelers opened the National Professional Football League season on a rainy night they drew the biggest gate in the club's history — something over $76,000.

DIAMOND'S DEBUT

Agnes Sorel of the French court is credited with being the first woman to use the diamond as a personal adornment. She wore one in a necklace about 1444.

Hollywood Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Sept. 27 —(AP)— Every once in a while a Hollywood reporter gets the creeping fear that this town is becoming a normal place. Then someone like Lizabeth Scott comes along to dispel that possibility.

You may get the impression Lizabeth is a mite eccentric. It is true. But in a charming, blond, deep-throated way. It's a pleasure to talk to her, even if her conversation does resemble Gertrude Stein's prose at times. When I saw her on the "Desert Town" set, she was all wound up about blue birds.

"A blue bird flew into my dressing room today," she said. ordinarily this wouldn't mean much. But to Liz it is significant.

"Something big is going to happen," she predicted. The last time something of this sort occurred, she said, was the night before Producer Hal Wallis discovered her in "The Skin of Our Teeth." Somehow a blue bird (I couldn't figure out if it was a real or figurative one) staggered in from the cold, sneaked past the stage door guard and lowered its flaps in Liz' room. The next day — fortune!

Are all actresses beginning to look alike? Sometimes I think so. I can identify the established stars, but personally I couldn't tell Janis Paige from Janis Carter or Martha Vickers from Martha Ivers. Ann Harding sympathizes with me.

"Perhaps new actresses are chosen because they resemble the present stars," she suggested.

Some years ago, actresses were known for their distinctive appearances — Ann for her straight combed golden locks and angelic face; Clar Bow in her short bob; Greta Garbo with her sharply defined features.

"But now," said Ann, "they all have a similar appearance, accentuated by round features."

ROCKEY GRAZIANO MEETS TONY ZALE IN THE STADIUM

Rough, Tough Boys Will Battle for Middleweight Title of World

New York, Sept. 27. (AP)— An explosion goes off in Yankee Stadium at 10 p.m., E.D.T., tonight, and the fellow who walks out of it all in one piece—whether it's titleholder Tony Zale or challenger Rocky Graziano—winds up with the middleweight championship of the world.

That's how most folks figure this match in which the 32-year-old ex-Indiana steel-puddler puts his crown on the line for the first time in his five years as champion against the young tough-guy challenge of 24-year-old Rocky from the sidewalks of New York's lower East Side.

From all you hear along bash boulevard, it practically has to wind up with one or the other hearing the birdies sing some time along the 15-round route.

That is why, too, Promoter Mike Jacobs is expecting some 40,000 customers and a gate of over $400,000—possibly exceeding even the all-time record of $452,648 for a bout between a couple of little men, other than heavyweights.

The Rock will scale about 153 pounds at the weigh-in, while Zale will carry 157 or 158 to the scales.

The third and deciding heat of the international match race for aged horses at the Lexington, Ky., trots yesterday resulted in victory for Custer Volo, 15-year-old veteran of the U.S. harness tracks, over Tracey Hanover, 14-year-old trotter owned by Frank Scott of Halifax, N.S. The American entry stepped the 1 1-16-mile distance in 2:14 3-4.

The featured Lexington stake for two-year-old trotters went to Hoot Mon, recently purchased for $50,000 by the Castleton Farm of Lexington. His fastest mile was 2:03 1-2.

Vic Ghezzi of Knoxville, Tenn., showed the way in yesterday's first round of the $10,000 Dallas, Tex., open golf tournament with a one-under-par 69. George Fazio, Canadian open champion, was four strokes behind.

President Maurice Podoloff of the newly-formed Basketball Association of America, announced at Chicago yesterday the 11 teams would be divided into two divisions. Toronto is grouped with New York, Boston, Providence, Washington and Philadelphia.

By defeating Lennart Bergelin of Sweden in three sets, national champion Jack Kramer of California entered the semi-finals of the 20th annual Pacific southwest tennis tournament at Los Angeles. Bob Falkenburg of Hollywood downed Gardnar Mulloy in five sets.

Will Fleming, 28-year-old son driver, Canadian-born Viv Fleming, earned a double for the second night in succession at Roosevelt raceway in Westbury, N.Y., scoring on Waac and Eria Reynolds in two 6 1-2 furlong pacing events.

The New York State Athletic Commission ruled yesterday the welterweight title vacated by Marty Servo because of an injured nose, would be awarded to Rya Robinson if Beau Jack or Tippy Larkin declined to meet the dusky contender.

Babe Didrickson Zaharias of Denver yesterday handed a five-and four setback to Maureen Orcutt, Haworth, N.J., to earn a place in the semi-finals of the National Women's Amateur Golf Tournament at Tulsa, Okla. She meets Helen Sigel of Philadelphia today.

Buddy Knox, the Dayton, O., heavyweight, is a fast worker. Wednesday night he knocked out Larry Crawford, of Brooklyn, in the first round of a scheduled 10 at Miami, Fla. Then he hopped a plane for New York and got to Fort Hamilton arena, Brooklyn in time to headline the Thursday night card there. In the fourth round of a scheduled eight, he knocked out ommy Campanella, knocked out Tommy Campanella, of the famous harness racing

MINK COAT

CHAPTER 14.

This chanced to be an exquisite spring day; sunshine was forcing its way into the dark parlors, and Isabel's old rooms where the children left their coats and washed their hands before lunch, looked pleasant and spacious and familiar. Her onetime mother-in-law had greeted her with a kindly, "I'm glad to see you again, Isabel," and had stooped at once to embrace the children. "How well you look, my darlings, and how I've missed you!" she had said.

Everything was easier after the first plunge, and superintending the little girls' meal of chops and baked potatoes, carrots and cookies and ice cream helped Isabel to keep a natural friendly conversation going as she ate her own lunch. The old Chinese who was Mrs. Hardisty's only servant greeted her cordially.

"Boss get well now," he said amiably. Isabel turned startled eyes to the other woman's face.

"Was Dennis sick?"

"He was wounded. Better," his mother admitted briefly. But later, when the children were in bed, and Isabel had returned from a quick errand or two downtown, she was more expansive. "Yes, Dennis had a shoulder wound at Bataan," she said. "He was more than a month in the hospital."

"Oh, what a pity! But they didn't send him home."

"No." Mary Hardisty went on knitting quietly. "He might have come home, he said he would rather not come just then," she said.

Isabel was also knitting; she watched her stitches for a moment.

"That was how long ago?" she asked, clearing her throat.

"Just about eight months."

Yes, that would match. He didn't want to come home to the house his wife and children had left.

"But I suppose he will be coming home soon, on leave anyway?" Isabel asked, her mouth dry.

"Oh, he is coming at any time now," his mother answered, surprised that she had not known it.

"For—for long?"

"For always, Isabel," Mary Hardisty said, still surprised. "Although I don't know why I thought you would know," she added, after a second. "They're honorably discharging him— he doesn't have to go back. His right hand has been injured, I don't know how seriously, and he had an attack of jungle fever. He is to work a Marinship, over on the Sausalito side. From his letter I imagine that he is not willing to waste an instant—he will go to work immediately. They are decorating him — I don't think he'll tell me the whole story, but perhaps I shall hear from someone else."

Isabel sat stunned.

"What—what a relief to you," she finally said dully.

"God only knows! If other mothers could know what I felt when that letter came, I think perhaps they might bear these days better. You remember the Sausalito place, Isabel? Dennis wants to live there. I know, from what he writes me, that his great hope is to have Pussy and Catherine with him—with us, much of the time, when he comes home."

Isabel felt something quiver deep inside her; she began to tremble.

"There's an excellent school, when the girls are a little older." Mrs. Hardisty knitted gaily. "He sent me your letter assuring him that he might ask for them whenever he was ready to have them," she said. "I think—I think perhaps the keenest sensation he has had in this whole affair is the need of his children. He writes me of his plans for them in every letter."

"He wrote me," Isabel said, "that he wouldn't consent to my divorce unless he could have a free hand with the children."

"Yes, he wrote me that."

"But at the time—I felt that he was so generous—I never thought—I mean, with the war and all—it didn't seem likely that he would ever take them!" Isabel stammered.

"He said that you had agreed that he should have them. He asked me to count on that," said Dennis's mother.

"To count on that! But—he was away at the war. He mightn't have even—he mightn't have even—"

"No, he might not even have come home."

"But he is coming home?"

"He is at Pearl Harbor, just waiting for a ship or a plane."

"But—" Isabel fell silent, her mouth filling with salt water. "uch little children always stay with their mother," she presently said weakly.

Mrs. Hardisty knitted on in silence, and the homely, established comfort of her upstairs sitting room, the handsome mismated chairs and tables, the well-curtained windows against which afternoon fog was softly pressing, were as so many telling arguments in her defence. Family photographers were ranged on the mantel; family history spoke from the high old glass-fronted desk and the crewelwork fire screen; decorum and integrity were personified in the solid, handsome figure of the gray-headed woman who sat opposite her, Isabel.

"He has had a hard experience, Isabel," said Mrs. Hardisty, after a moment.

"Oh, I know."

"We plan to close this house here and go to Sausalito for a while. The children would be an immense comfort to him."

"Oh, of course," the younger woman said. "Of course—if he wanted them. For a while—until school opens, anyway. I've registered Pussy at such a wonderful school.... You and I," she went on, almost pleadingly, as Mary Hardisty did not speak, "we have never had any arguments about the girls—we've always talked the same language. I've always thought you'd—you'd give me the breaks," she finished youthfully.

"Oh, Isabel, why—why—why did you do it!" Dennis's mother burst out suddenly.

Isabel walked again to the window, spoke over her shoulder again, after a long pause. "I don't know," she said. "I wish I did. Perhaps then I could understand my own heart. Mom," she went on, coming back to take a hassock at the older woman's knee, "why do we do things? I married Dennis just as suddenly as I did Avery. We'd only known each other a few weeks. I've always done things that way—done them, and then analyzed them afterward. I'm older now. I see things differently. I can't—I can't let my children go! What shall I do?"

Mrs. Hardisty looked into her eyes.

"What shall I do, Isabel?" she asked simply. "Dennis is my child—the only one I have left."

"I know," Isabel whispered, and was silent.

"He's coming home dead tired, wounded, he's been ill. I want him to get well."

"Yes—yes, I know," Isabel said hurriedly. And then, with a little effort, "You let me know—when he comes, I mean. I could have the girls ready—he could meet them somewhere—"

"Will you leave it that way?" Mrs. Hardisty asked, her voice slightly husky.

"Yes, we'll leave it that way."

"So that I could say to him, 'Isabel understands that the girls are to be ours for a while'."

"Oh yes, yes—say that." Suddenly she was crying, crying silently with her face against the older woman's knee. It was only for a moment, then she braced herself blew her nose and wiped her eyes, smiling resolutely with trembling lips. "I don't know what's the matter with me," Isabel muttered.

After a moment she went back to her chair, picked up the mustard-colored service yarn, began knitting again.

"I am thankful to have had this talk with you," said Mary Hardisty.

"Yes." Isabel was at her loveliest as she smiled back, tears still on her lashes, the blue of her eyes softened. "It won't be so hard to bring them, next time," she said.

"It was hard this time?"

"Well, yes. I didn't know how you felt."

"I feel much better now.' The older woman drew a long breath of relief. "I'm so glad you could talk to me this way. I've wondered—wondered. I didn't understand."

"You understand that I love Avery—that as far as he could, he's been perfect," Isabel said.

"Yes, I understand that."

"It isn't Avery. It's just that—when you get off your base, nothing seems quite to go straight again. There's so much explaining! I've not been married to Avery a year," Isabel went on with some difficulty, "but already I look at women who are divorced—I mean, as I was, without any special cause, without any grievance—and you look at the women who've been wives, year in and out, and you—you feel the difference."

"You have to — we all have to —go on from here," said Mary Hardisty.

The bitter weeping with which Catherine always awakened from her nap now made itself heard in the house, and both women went upstairs, to button and tie the small girls into their clothes, put on hats and coats, and say good-by to Grandma. Nothing more of Dennis was said.

The coats carried the smartest label of Fifth Avenue, but Isabel knew that Dennis's mother didn't know or care about that as she knelt to cling to the little forms and kiss the soft little temples.

"It's been so lovely having them, Isabel."

"Wivout Yelta," Catherine said decidedly. Both women laughed at the small, emphatic, elfin creature.

"Because we can't do anything when Yelta's with us," Pussy added on a piteous note. "Not even anything ever."

Isabel smiled with a troubled heart.

"We'll do this again," she promised them. A sudden slamming of the front door, far downstairs, and the sound of running feet made both women look questioningly at each other. Who would come flying up the stairs in that fashion?

In the next instant, the questioning looks of the woman who was his mother and the woman who had been Dennis Hardisty's wife were changed to certainty, and both paled. Then Dennis was in the room.

"Dennis," Isabel whispered, her mouth dry and her throat closed. For a long space they stood looking at each other; then Dennis, without speaking, went to his mother and took her into his big embrace, and after that he had eyes only for the children. He knelt before Catherine, who was staring with her finger in her mouth; Pussy he had caught against his shoulder his lips were against her dark hair.

"My God, they are beautiful!" he said under his breath. "My girls—how I've hungered—how I've longed—"

His voice died away into silence; he buried his face in Catherine's neck. Pussy, who had bust into wild tears, was held firm in his right arm; he was in a deep chair, with Catherine solemn and curious, but not frightened, also on his knees. "My Daddy's back!" Pussy kept repeating.

"Dennis, you didn't let us know!" his mother said, wiping her eyes.

"I hardly knew myself. I was in Honolulu yesterday, being checked at the hospital, when I got this chance to fly. I didn't know—I'm glad—" He fumbled, the grave smile she remembered was on his face as he glanced at Isobel. "I didn't know that you sometimes — sometimes brought them in to see my mother. I'm glad," he said.

As he spoke he had kissed the top of the dark heads in turn. Now he rested his temple against Pussy's butterfly bows and shut his eyes.

He looked tired; he was very thin, and the olive-drab uniform was shabby. In ways so teribly familiar, yet in other ways Isabel felt as if she had never seen him before. A lean, tall, definite sort of man, with a fine resonant voice and clever square-fingered hands. Dennis Hardisty. She thought of the night they had met, at a church fair in Sutro's Mill. She had gone there with Jerry Larkin and a lot of joyous young folk; someone had introduced Mr. Hardisty. She could hear now her sharp laughing whisper, "Who is this serious-looking stranger that you're wishing onto me, Marge?" and Marge Dean's prophetic murmur in reply: "Sh-h-h! He's divine, you'll love him."

The old I.O.O.F. hall was up a flight of stairs over the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce; the street windows were filled with tall jars of mammoth peaches and polished redwood burls and sprays of berried juniper. To reach the hall one walked to the back and ascended a flight of weather-beaten outside stairs. Isabel had never gone up those stairs without a thrill of expectation and excitement. Even in grammar-school days there were entertainments there for the various ages; all fairs were held there.

On that special night bunting and flags draped the room; booths were set at intervals along the walls, and between the booths were chairs ranged for women of the older group, who sat fanning and watching the dancing. Everyone was laughing; children dodged about everywhere; Miss Lacey was playing the piano with great spirit, and small boys were sliding on the waxed floor. Isabel had felt what she sometimes called "lifey"; all the boys were there, there would be simply no end of good dancing, and everyone wanted to dance with her. She knew she looked her best; she felt as light as thistledown as Cuddy Macdonald whirled her out across the almost empty door.

"Oh, I love dancing!" she had said breathlessly, brought up beside the group in which stood the strange young man. He had asked her for the next dance, if it was not promised, and Isabel had answered simply that she never promised dances, it made too much trouble. Much better just to dance with whoever was there, she said.

NO PHOTOGRAPHS ALLOWED

Nuernberg, Sept. 27 —(AP)— The International Military Tribunal has ruled that no photographs will be taken at the sentencing of Nazi war crimes defendants here next week. The tribunal unanimously rejected even attempts to have documentary pictures made by an official photographer from a hidden position in a booth. The courtroom is to be cleared of all photographers and cameras just before the sentencing.

Trenton Padre Receives Call To Dunnville

Brantford, Sept. 27 — (CP) — Honorary Wing Cmdr. E. C. McCullagh, formerly minister of Alexandria Presbyterian Church here, who has been on active service as a chaplain with the RCAF for nearly six years, has received a call to the Dunnville Presbyterian Church, Dunnville, Ont. Wing Cmdr. McCullagh is stationed at Trenton, Ont., at present.

A veteran of the First Great War, during which he served as a gunner in the 2nd Field Battery, Ottawa, Wing Cmdr. McCullagh had been active in military circles in Brantford after arriving to take over ministry at Alexandria Presbyterian Church in April, 1930.

He was padre of the local branch of the Canadian Legion for nine years prior to going on active service in December 1940.

Largest Part Of $39,000 Haul Is Recovered

Regina, Sept. 27 (CP)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police said last night the largest part of the $39,000 stolen in a holdup of the Bank of Montreal at Nipawin, Sask., Sept. 14 was recovered yesterday buried on a farm 15 miles south of the scene of the robbery.

Peter Minosky, 24, was arrested Sunday near Sheho, Sask., about 100 miles north of here and charged with armed robbery. Some $600 was found in the bush near Sheho at the time of Minosky's arrest. Previously the R.C.M.P. said it was believed the bulk of the stolen money was shipped in suitcases to either Vancouver or Hamilton.

The find yesterday was made by R.C.M.P. near Leacross, Sask., and was in two packages.

William Dixon, 23, and Stanley Kruchka, 20, were earlier arrested in Hamilton in connection with the holdup and sent to Prince Albert, Sask., to stand trial.

Police said the only money not recovered was a small amount spent by the men.

Nipawin is 200 miles north of Regina.

Engagement Rumors Are Not Confirmed

Brussels, Sept. 27 (AP)— A Royal spokesman declined to confirm or deny today reports that regent Prince Charles of Belgium is engaged to Winston Churchill's daughter, Mary.

"Rumors have been spread several times," the spokesman said, "that the Prince was engaged to a foreign princess or to the daughter of some foreign statesman, but in each of these circumstances it has always been the Prince's policy neither to confirm nor deny these rumors."

Since Mr. Churchill and his daughter arrived in Belgium Wednesday they have been guests of the Prince at the chateau of Ciergnon in the Ardennes and it has been emphasized that the former British Prime Minister's visit was purely of a private nature.

The elderly man took sick at the lumber camp on Sunday and his foreman told him to lay off and go home. He vanished later that day and a search party found him yesterday in woods close by, tired and hungry.

King of Greece Given Tumultuous Welcome at Athens

Drives Through City in Open Car Flanked by Crown Prince

Athens, Sept. 28 —(AP)— King George II of Greece received a tumultuous welcome today upon his return to Athens after five years of exile.

The King who arrived in Greece last night from England, landed at 10 A. M. on the quay at Faleron Bay and proceeded along a four-mile route through the heart of the city, which was lined with cheering thousands, to the Greek cathedral for the Deum services.

The king and Crown Prince Paul flanked Princess Frederika in an open automobile carrying the King's flag.

King George was brought into Faleron Bay by a destroyer escorted by another destroyer and two escort vessels. A 22-gun salute signalled his departure from the destroyer Themistocles into a launch that took him to the quay. Six Greek spitfires flew overhead.

British and Greek Military and Naval honor guards stood at attention as the King steped smartly from the launch to the carpeted quay, spread with symbolic olive branches.

Cabinet Greets King

The entire cabinet, headed by Premier Constantin Tsaldaris, in silk top hats, tailcoats and stripped trousers, greeted the King, summoned back to his throne by Greek voters in a plebiscite Sept. 1.

Shortly after the heavily-guarded royal convoy left the quay guns on conical Lycabettus Hill started a 100-gun salute.

Thousands who packed the streets waved and cheered in wild enthusiasm as he passed.

Thousands of police and gendarme were posted along the line of march, carrying out elaborate precautions to safeguard the life of the 56-year-old Monarch as he returned to a land torn by civil strife and fierce border fighting in the north.

The King taken by automobile from Elevis airport to a warship flotilla in Salinis Bay, spent the night aboard the destroyer Miaoulis after conferences with Premier Tsaldaris; the regent, Archbishop Damaskinos, and other government leaders.

Premier Tsaldaris was expected to hand in his resignation immediately but he has said he will be reappointed and will name a new government.

Twenty-Five Held After Outbreak On Strike Front

Edmonton, Sept. 28 — (CP) — Royal Canadian Mounted Police today investigated an outbreak of disorder on the Alberta strike front that resulted in injury to one man and brought 25 arrests. Meanwhile, leaders of an estimated 50,000 Alberta and Saskatchewan farmers seeking parity prices met to discuss Dominion proposals for ending the 22-day-old delivery strike.

The central strike committee of the Alberta Farmers' Union, whose 20,000 members precipitated the 30-day holdout of all farm produce to back their demands for parity between farm costs and returns, met today behind closed doors to consider Agriculture Minister Gardiner's proposal that farmers present their views to the Agricultural Prices Support Board.

At Regina, leaders of the estimated 30,000 Saskatchewan members of the United Farmers of Canada supporting the A.F.U. met to consider the same proposal.

The new outbreak of violence occurred near the Saskatchewan border yesterday as a stockbuyer, Lloyd Lybbert, attempted to deliver 113 head of cattle to the Beaver Crossing stockyards. About 300 pickets routed the herd despite the efforts of 12 cowboys assisting the stockbuyer.

Lybbert fell from his horse during the scuffle and suffered a fractured leg when his frightened horse rolled on him.

Six R.C.M.P. constables near the scene promptly placed 25 pickets under arrest. Reports early today said more arrests were contemplated.

Earlier disorders had resulted in 29 convictions in Alberta police courts as picketers failed to heed pleas from both R.C.M.P. and A.F.U. officials to "avoid violence."

Smaller centres continued to be most affected by farm produce shortages today with some points reporting cream, eggs and meat in short supply.

Predicts Shortage Will Continue For Some Time

By MARVIN L. ARROWSMITH

Washington, Sept. 28 (AP) — Chairman Roy L. Thompson said today the Price Decontrol Board will "act promptly" if it gets an official appeal for removal of meat ceilings in the United States — but he doesn't expect one before November.

He gave no indication of what the Board's decision might be, saying he does not believe it "proper" that he make any predictions.

As for the current meat shortage, Mr. Thompson predicted it will continue for "some time."

The decontrol chief expressed these views to an interviewer as:

1. Some western cattlemen disagreed with President Truman's forecast that the normal fall run of grass-fed cattle should increase the supply of beef soon.

2. Government food officials said that if the military's meat requisitioning is continued at the new reduced rate the rest of this year, the United States armed services will get no more than perhaps 3.5 per cent of the total output.

3. The Office of Price Administration, yielding to a torrent of industry protest, announced it will scrap its order restoring June 30 price ceilings on restaurant meat meals. Higher ceilings will be set next week.

Agriculture Department officials said that meat production during the final three months of this year is expected to total between 5,000,000,000 and 6,000,000,000 pounds, depending upon the number of animals farmers sell. Of this, the army under its reduced purchase program announced yesterday would take about 150,000,000 pounds.

Reds Ask Turkey For Discussions On Dardanelles

Moscow, Sept. 28 — (AP) — The foreign ministry disclosed today that Russia had asked Turkey to enter into direct unilateral discussions on the future control of the Dardanelles.

Under the Soviet proposal, such a two-power meeting would precede any formal conference involving nations signatory to the present nine-power Montreux convention under which the Straits are controlled.

Russia desires to share defence of the Straits with Turkey and to limit control of the Dardanelles to Black Sea powers only.

A demarche delivered in Ankara Tuesday and quoted in a Moscow office communique distributed in London today by Tass, Russia warned Turkey against 'taking military measures' in the Straits "jointly with some non Black Sea powers."

"This, of course, would run directly counter to the interest of the security of the Black Sea powers," the communique added.

Speculation Arises That Accident To Jet Plane Due to Air Wall

All-Hallows-on-the-Sea, England, Sept. 28 —(AP)— Police, troops and German prisoners of war searched the desolate salt flats around the mouth of the Thames today in the faint hope that Capt. Geoffrey de Haviland might have parachuted to safety when his jet plane exploded yesterday on a test flight.

The 37-year-old flier, scion of a famous aviation family and known as England's No. 1 test pilot, was presumed dead following the explosion 10,000 feet above the Thames of his tail-less experimental "Swallow," as speculation arose that the accident may have been the first supersonic speed blast in history.

"Was this the first air wall accident?" the Daily Express inquired in a speculative story accompanying that of the explosion. The plane, powered by a 3,500-horsepower turbojet engine, disintegrated in the air with a blinding flash, witnesses said.

The craft was designed to go 650 miles an hour and its designers hoped it would defeat the feared "compressibility." At speeds approaching the speed of sound, scientists say, air tends to pile up like a solid wall, against which a plane could batter itself to pieces.

C.C.L. CONVENTION ENDORSES C.C.F. AS ARM OF LABOR

Delegates Pledged To Support the 50,000 Members of C.I.O. Now on Strike

By GEORGE RONALD
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 28 —(CP)— As the sixth regular convention of the Canadian Congress of Labor ended last night, 754 delegates from all parts of the Dominion left for home pledged to an all-out campaign to support the C.C.L.'s 50,000 members now on strike.

Congress officials hailed the convention as the greatest labor conference in Canada's history.

Main outcome of the five-day deliberations was a resolution which, in effect, re-endorsed the C.C.F. as the "political arm of labor." It was passed after more than seven hours of heated debate which underscored the existence of a small but powerful Labor-Progressive party faction.

Some of the bitterest remarks of a convention at which tempers often ran high were made in connection with Dominion government action at the basic steel strike in Hamilton.

And yesterday, as election ballots were counted, the delegates donated $14,525 in cash and pledges to aid strikers. Secretary-Treasurer Pat Conroy of Ottawa was greeted with cheers earlier when he suggested each C.C.L. member donate a day's wages to the same cause.

A. R. Mosher of Ottawa was re-elected president, defeating C. S. Jackson, United Electrical Workers, Toronto, decisively. Conroy was re-elected with an easy victory over Harold Pritchett, International Woodworkers of America, Vancouver.

Alex McAuslane of Vancouver was re-elected first vice-president and Sol Spivak of Montreal second vice-president, both by acclamation.

The executive committee:

Silby Barrett, United Mineworkers, Toronto; J. E. McGuire, Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees, Ottawa; C. H. Millard, United Steelworkers, Toronto; George Burt, United Automobile Workers, Windsor, and Jean Marie Bedard, C.C.L. Regional Director in Quebec.

Watching and besetting charges against three U.A.W. officials in Windsor were branded by the convention as attempts to intimidate labor.

A resolution deplored "resurrection of antiquated legal machinery" for use against George Burt, Tom Maclean and Harry Rooney and asked Ontario Attorney-General Balckwell to discontinue "misuse of such sections of the criminal code."

Another last-minute highlight was a charge that the Vancouver Sun, "an all-union paper," was facing a "conspiracy" to prevent it obtaining enough newsprint to supply its readers' demands.

A resolution by the Vancouver Newspaper Guild asked investigation of newsprint supplies in Vancouver.

Adopted with comment was a non-concurrence motion on a proposed constitutional amendment to bar known Communists and Labor-Progressives from the C.C.L. executive. It was submitted by the London (Ont.) Labor council.

Three resolutions submitted by affiliates called for Labor Minister Mitchell's resignation but a substitute resolution asked merely that the labor department be returned "to a basis of impartiality and objectivity."

Among the approximately 295 resolutions dealt with were demands for better housing, working conditions and wages and a unanimous protest of any milk subsidy removal. Others supported free Jewish immigration into Palestine, supervised immigration of refugees into Canada and condemnation of the atomic bomb as a weapon of war.

WILL HE EXECUTE NAZI WAR CRIMINALS?

STRIKE NEAR END BUT BOTH SIDES MOST CAUTIOUS

Major Stumbling Block is Differential Pay Between Three Steel Plants

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Sept. 28 — (CP) — Canada's 10-week steel strike today appeared on a new road to settlement but there was obvious caution from all sides in advancing expressions of opinion.

Hopes for an end to the strike —which has affected 15,000 workers in plants at Sydney, N. S., Hamilton and Sault Ste. Marie — were based on discussions in Montreal Thursday between C.H. Millard, national director of the United Steelworkers of America (CIO) and F. B. Kilbourne, government controller of the plants.

The fact that negotiations had been re-opened was disclosed yesterday at the Canadian Congress of Labor convention and almost immediately an Ottawa source was quoted as saying the discussions were based on a wage increase of 13 cents an hour which gave hope of an end to the strike within a day or two.

The 13-cent figure compared with the previous government offer of 12½ cents and the union demand of 15½ cents. The Ottawa report left indefinite the question of whether payment was to be made for statutory holidays which, if included, would have the effect of increasing the annual earnings more than 13 cents. Settlement of the union security demands of the union were also uncertain.

Union Insistent

Reports today were that the major stumbling block was the question of whether the differential which places the Sydney rates five cents below those paid in Ontario plants, was to be removed. The union has been insistent on this and had called off the 1943 strike in the belief that the differential was to be wiped out. With this background it appeared unlikely that the union would agree to any settlement plan which did not include a clear-cut commitment for removal of the differential.

Licences of Four Hotels, One Club Are Suspended

Toronto, Sept. 28. (CP)—The Liquor Authority Control Board of Ontario today announced the suspension of the beer and wine sale authorities of four hotels and one club—one in Toronto, one in Chatham and three in Windsor and district.

The Howard Hotel at Windsor was suspended indefinitely for unsatisfactory operation. The Riverside Yacht Club at Riverside was suspended for two weeks for selling beer after hours and the Belle River Hotel at Belle River for a similar period for failing to operate in accordance with Board regulations and orders.

BAR YUGOSLAVIA AS A SIGNATORY TO ITALIAN TREATY

Conference Adopts American Proposal After a Heated Debate

Paris, Sept. 28. (AP)—A peace conference commission adopted today an American proposal to bar Yugoslavia from the privileges of a signatory to the Italian treaty if she persisted in her announced refusal to sign the pact.

The Italian political and territorial commission adopted the "French Line" as the boundary between Italy and Yugoslavia, and Marshal Tito's delegation promptly announced Yugoslavia would "not sign the peace treaty with Italy nor withdraw her army from northwestern Istria."

A Yugoslav proposal to turn the whole boundry question back to the foreign ministers was voted down, and the United States quickly proposed the new amendment, stating that the terms of the treaty should "not benefit any state mentioned in the preamble as allied and associated powers unless such state becomes a signatory of the treaty".

A Yugoslav delegate vigorously attacked the American proposal as "a threat and an attempt to intimidate Yugoslavia."

"Yugoslavia has shown by its four years of fighting it will not yield to any intimidation," the delegate said.

The formal Yugoslav decleration followed a sharp debate between United States Senator Tom Connally and Russia's Andrei Y. Vishinsky, with the latter supporting a Yugoslav demand that any preliminary agreement of the Foreign Ministers Council regarding the boundary should be approved by Yugoslavia.

No One Trembling

Senator Connally said the Yugoslav threat not to make peace with Italy unless her demands were met "doesn't make anyone tremble in his boots."

"Yugoslavia's attitude doesn't frighten anyone," Senator Connally said.

The Italian political and territorial commission adopted the "French line" previously accepted by the Foreign Ministers Council, fixing the frontiers between Italy and Yugoslavia, and of both states with the free zone of Trieste.

Yugoslavia's formal statement, read to the Commission by Vice Premier Edvard Kardelj, charged that the commission "wants to impose its will upon the Yugoslav people and prevent the liberation from the yoke of Italy of a considerable portion of the Slovene and Croat people."

When Senator Connally charged that Mr. Karelj's attitude was undemocratic in refusing to submit to the decision of the conference, Mr. Vishinsky inquired: "It is always democratic to submit to the majority vote?"

Gag Rule Enforced

The new gag rule was enforced for the first time during the debate.

LABOR GOVT. OF AUSTRALIA RETURNS TO POWER

Two Hours After Polls Close Papers Concede Govt. Returns With Increased Majority

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Sydney, Australia, Sept. 28 (CP Cable)—Four hours after the close of polls in today's general election, Labor government candidates led in 35 of 62 federal divisions in the eastern states.

The Liberals—hoping to form a coalition government with the country party if labor should lose control of the 75-seat House of Representatives—led in 11 divisions and the Country Party in seven.

Voting was close and results in doubt in nine divisions—six of which were held by Labor at parliament's dissolution, Aug. 9, and three by the opposition parties.

The government had held a commanding total of 49 seats in the last lower house, in which 38 are necessary to control.

Two hours after the polls closed two Sydney newspapers had declared labor had been returned to office and Reuters news agency termed the continuation of the administration "certain."

Early senate returns favored Labor—which already holds 17 seats in the 36-seat house. First results on the constitutional referendum were adverse to the incumbents.

Comfortable Margins.

Labor also was holding its own in a handful of "swing" seats which observers watched as a pointer to the trend of the election.

The Sun said the Chifley government "has received a clear vote of confidence."

The Telegraph reported a "clear indication the government would be returned with no loss of seats and with the possibility of increasing its majority."

Both newspapers are classified as Independent.

Robert G. Menzies, leader of the Liberal party, was well ahead in his constituency of Kooyong, Victoria.

These cabinet members seemed assured of re-election by early returns: Arthur W. Calwell (immigration), J. J. Dedman (postwar reconstruction), A. S. Drakeford (air), and E. J. Holloway (labor).

Prime Minister Returned.

A fifth cabinet minister, Herbert V. Evatt (foreign affairs) seemed certain of return in Barton, New South Wales.

Prime Minister J. B. Chifley also seemed certain of re-election in MacQuarie, N.S.W.

The only woman in the last house of representatives, Dame Enid Lyons, was trailing the Labor candidate, H. A. Kirkpatrick, in early returns. Dame Lyons, widow of a former prime minister, is a Liberal.

Mounting tallies showed Labor men holding key seats in Victoria, New South Wales and Tasmania.

The first 90 minutes' counting failed to show a single sitting Labor representative ousted. The government held 49 seats in the dissolved lower house.

Survey Shows Abundant Crops Will Give Canadians Plenty of Food

Ottawa, Sept. 28 (CP)— Canadians can count on eating well next winter, a survey showed today. Across the land abundant crops of practically all staple foods give promise that no one need go hungry and that many sections will have more than enough to furbish family dinner tables.

That's the overall picture, but it has darker aspects. Shortages of such articles as lard and soap continue to dog the housewife, rationing of sugar and preserves, butter and meat remains in effect and in many cases temporary shortages of various foodstuffs develop.

The limited quantity of canning sugar and the difficulty of obtaining sealers restricted women who otherwise could have filled cupboards with jars of preserves and pickles.

Merchants blame the soap shortage on panic buying, the salt and bottle scarcity on strikes. A Prices Board official says the soap shortage is due to two disputes. Shortening, vital ingredient in flaky pie crusts, is expected to be more plentiful in about three weeks, thanks to arrival of edible oil from fthe Argentine.

Bountiful crops made vegetables plentiful. Their abundance is reflected in the appearance of larger quantities of canned vegetables. Prices generally are about the same as last year, lower in some lines.

Hotels and restaurants say fall reduction of tourist traffic, together with good harvest eased their food problems. Opening of schools and universities meant a further drop in demand, but many hotels remain crowded.

Except in some rural areas, pork continues scarce. Canned salmon is hard to get, as are jelly powders, corn starch and laundry starch, pepper (the real thing) and some lines of fruit juices.

Orchards in all parts of Canada yielded abundantly.

Ontario's crop of fruits and vegetables surpassed 1945 in quantity and quality. Some farmers said this was the best year within memory, others the best growing summer in 10 years. Reports of bumper crops came from growers of potatoes, corn, apples, peaches, cucumbers and wheat. Canning factories at Leamington described the tomato harvest as the best in years.

Effective Control Of Atomic Energy Believed Feasible

U.N. Atomic Commission Submits Exhaustive Report

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Lake Success, N. Y., Sept. 28—(CP)— United Nations atomic commission scientists today published an exhaustive report in which they declared there was no apparent reason why effective control of atomic energy is not "technologically feasible."

They warned, however, that by surreptitious diversion of nuclear fuels from storage or from plants of origin it would be possible for highly-skilled technicians quickly to make atomic bombs.

"The danger there is extremely serious," the scientists said.

The finding was made public when the United Nations released a 22-page report adopted unanimously Thursday by the scientists who make up the commission's scientific and technical committee.

The report will be submitted to the commission's committee No. 2 (political) at a meeting here next Wednesday.

The report was designed to put together the basic technical facts relating to atomic energy, so far as they are open to public scrutiny, as a guide to the atomic commission in planning a method of international control.

The atomic commission is composed of the United Kingdom, the United States, Russia, France, China, Egypt, Australia, Poland, Mexico, Brazil, The Netherlands and Canada.

The scientists, who acknowledged they dealt with non-secret and previously published information, said that in approaching the assignment they kept in mind that the problem was not solely what to do about atomic energy as a weapon "but rather the entire problem of what use shall be made of a discovery so great that its consequences will affect the future of human society."

Secrets Not Open to Committee

The report mentioned not only the fact that secrets of the atomic bomb were not open to the committee but also to the fact that as far as the committee was aware, it was possible that "major discoveries as distinguished from technological developments may have been made somewhere in the world."

It explained uranium and thorium — basic raw materials of nuclear fuels — were difficult to produce in quantities without involving large-scale operations and the danger of diversion for war purposes was not great in the mining area, but should be safeguarded.

Greatest danger was in the plants producing and extracting these basic elements, often far removed from the mines as in the case of Canada, where surreptitious diversion of nuclear fuels might be possible unless elaborate precautions were taken.

The report said uranium occurs principally in deposits of pitchblende found in Canada, the Belgian Congo and Czechoslovakia, and also as carnotite and autonite in the Western United States. Thorium occurs principally in monazite sands in India, Brazil, The Netherlands East Indies and Australia.

Dakota Airliner Seen to Fall in Flames on Mountainside in Brazil

Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, Sept. 28 —(Reuters)—Twenty-five people were feared to have been killed in a Dakota airliner of Panair Do Brazil believed to have crashed last night.

The airliner, carrying twenty-one passengers and four crew members, was seen to fall in flames on a mountainside in the state of Minas Geraes, according to an unconfirmed report received here today. It has been overdue more than twenty-four hours.

Trolleys Halted For Second Time By Power Strike

Pittsburgh, Sept. 28 (AP) — Operation of Pittsburgh's streetcars was completely halted early this morning for the second time within 48 hours as a result of picketing by members of a striking power union.

Headquarters of the A.F.L.-Amalgated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees said efforts to operate the cars, which had maintained partial service through the early hours of the night, were abandoned after pickets surrounded all 12 car barns of the Pittsburgh Railways Company.

The pickets were members of the Independent Association of Employees of the Duquesne Light Company.

Meanwhile, another session of the apparently stalemated wage contract negotiations between the struck Duquesne Light Company and the Independent Union of its employees was scheduled for this afternoon, with a mass meeting of the union called for tonight to vote on "any offer the company may make."

The power union has given no reason for halting the street cars but apparently it acted because (1) current for the cars is supplied by the Duquesne Light Company and (2) both Duquesne Light and Pittsburgh Railways the subsidiaries of the Philadelphia Company.

The A.F.L. - Central Labor Union, which earlier had supported the Duquesne Light workers, issued a statement saying "we now serve notice on them (the strikers) that the A.F.L. will not tolerate any interference by them with any companies using power with which we have agreements."

The street car men and bus drivers are members of an A.F.L. Union.

BASKET OF EGGS STOLEN FROM CAR; BOYS RAID ORCHARD

That it does not pay to leave a car unlocked and unattended, especially when it contains merchandise, was learned to his sorrow by Robert Marner, Corbyville, on Friday afternoon.

Mr. Marner parked his car on the local market square to attend an auction sale which was in progress and left his auto unattended while he bid on some wanted article. When he returned to his car a basket of eggs had disappeared from the rear seat.

The general conception that fruit tastes sweeter when stolen was the reason for a complaint from a Lingham and Emily Street resident which reached the city police station on Friday. The resident owns a small apple orchard in the above vicinity and has been troubled lately by uninvited boys carrying away the apples.

The complaint to the police station brought the long arm of the law in the person of one of the constables who apprehended three young boys in the act of pilfering from the orchard. The lads were told to stay away from the apple trees.

Speakers were limited to 10 minutes the first time they took the floor and five minutes the second time.

The Yugoslav argument came as the conferees, striving to meet their Oct. 15 adjournment deadline, grappled with the delicate problem of Trieste. Only 10 clauses of the Italian peace treaty remained to be completed, but three of them involved the knotty Trieste situation.

High spots of the conference's ninth week were reached in yesterday's session of the Balkan and Finland economic commission, a group controlling the financial clauses of four of the five treaties being discussed, and in Thursday's session of the Italian economic commission when Russia and the United States joined to reduce the figure for compensation for property losses sustained during the war from the 100 per cent demanded by Britain down to 75 per cent on damage amounting to approximately $250,000,000 in the five countries.

The United States delegation then proposed a further reduction to 25 per cent, a figure agreed upon after some argument by the Russians who, until this week maintained that they wanted only "up to 33 per cent."

Emergency State Exists as Result Of Movie Strike

Hollywood, Sept. 28 (AP)—A state of emergency, proclaimed by the sheriff, existed in Los Angeles county today as tne movies, latest labor dispute entered its third day.

Sheriff Eugene Biscailuz called in about 150 additional special deputies to police the gates of the major firm studios, which are being picketed by the conference of studio unions in their jurisdictional dispute with the rival International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, Both are A.F.L groups.

A fierce melee, in which about 200 persons engaged, broke out yesterday at the gates of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio, one of the largest. It required half an hour for Culver City police and sheriff's deputies to quell the rioting, in which pickets smashed automobile windows, ripped out ignition wires and tried to upset several cars. Twenty-three pickets were arrested.

Warner Brothers obtained a court order limiting gate pickets to eight, and workers dispersed. M-G-M shortly afterward obtained a similar order.

The dispute, recurrence of one which led to a 34-week strike last year, arose from refusal of C.S.U. workmen to nandle sets which they claim had been built by I.A.T.S.E. members.

DAMAGED SHIP IN PORT

Sydney, N.S., Sept. 28 —(CP) —The freighter Liverpool Packet, damaged Tuesday night in a collision with the New Zealand ship Kaipaki 45 miles off the Cape Breton coast, was towed into port Thursday by the tug Foundation Franklin and entered drydock for repairs.

The 4,700-ton packet arrived with her engine room flooded and her deck housing and starboard lifeboats badly crushed. Two of her crew were injured but their condition was not serious.

The freighter was carrying 2,500 tons of newsprint from Botwood, Nfld., to New York. The cargo was not damaged.

EFFECTIVE

The report showed that the large scale production of electric power from atomic energy appears feasible, though the scientists said it still is in the developmental stage.

"Examples based on published information suggest that raw materials are readily available for the production of from 70 to 3,500 (atomic) bombs per year, or for the generation of electric power at a rate of 2,000,000 kilowatts and possibly many times this rate," the report added.

Can Be Made Easier

The committee said the possibility had been considered that some day the production of atomic weapons could become easier. "Whatever the future may bring, those charged with responsibility for maintaining safeguards on atomic energy will best be able to make necessary adaptations in these safeguards if they are intimately associated with and participating in new developments in the entire field."

In conclusion the scientists said: "We do not find any basis in available scientific facts, for supposing that effective control is not technologically feasible."

The report was finished three weeks ago but was held up in the hope that Russia would sign it and make it unanimous. The Russian approval came Thursday but with the reservations that the information was not complete.

This fact was stressed throughout the report which made frequent references to the fact that it was correct only so far as could be learned at the moment.

The scientists, by failing to make recommendations, however, did little to resolve the sharp differences between the United States and Russian plans for controlling atomic energy.

Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, Canada's delegate on the atomic commission, was in New York today but declined to offer any comment on the report.

SPECULATION

London, —(CP)— Capt. Geoffrey de Havilland, dare-devil test pilot and scion of a famous British aviation family, was presumemd killed at dusk tonight in the explosion, 10,000 feet in the air, of a radical new tailless jet plane he had hoped to fly to a world's speed record.

The R.A.F. announced officially finding of the wreckage of the experimental plane spread over a mile of deserted sea marsh in the Thames Estuary.

Lord Winster of Civil Aviation paid Britain's tribute to the "gallant" 37-year-old flier who had tested every new de Havilland plane during the last nine years.

The plane that carried Capt. de Havilland to his death was a 3,500-horsepower turbo jet DH—108 Swallow in which he was making a final test before undertaking an attempt to break the world's plane speed record of 616 miles an hour established last autumn by a Gloster twin jet Meteor.

Wings Fall Off

"I heard the explosion and saw both wings fall off," a farmer reported. "The plane then dived steeply."

Searching planes were sent out immediately.

It was one of two aviation accidents of the day in Britain. Seven persons were killed when a civil aircraft crashed into a hilltop north of Glasgow in the first fatal accident in the history of Scottish airways. The dead included two members of the plane crew. There were no survivors. The crash occurred while the plane was flying through a heavy mist on a flight from the Island of Islay to Glasgow.

Capt. de Havilland was on a last check-up flight before going to Britain's high-speed course at Tangmere, Sussex, on the south coast, to attack the air speed record.

The airman was joint chief test pilot for the de Havilland Company founded by his father. During the last nine years he tested every de Havilland type.

CHASTISES C.C.L.

Senator William Duff, Lunenburg, N.S., 74-year-old native of Newfoundland, who has chastised President A. R. Mosher and the Canadian Congress of Labor for passing a resolution calling for abolition of the Senate. The C.C.L. called for abolition of the Senate during its convention in Toronto, Ont. Sen. Duff stated that the Senate was "a steadying influence on Canadian life."

City Recommends Armouries Be Used for Housing

The city of Belleville has requested the Hon. C. D. Howe, federal Minister of Reconstruction that the barracks on Church Street and the Bridge Street Armouries be made available at once for the housing of families who are without shelter.

Mayor Frank Follwell in a telegram yesterday to the minister pointed out that the housing situation here is desperate. Families are being quartered in municipal buildings, he told the minister, and the situation calls for more or less drastic measures in the suggested taking over of government buildings.

The mayor added in his wire, that if building materials could be supplied, contractors here, the housing situation would be eased to a great extent.

A similar telegram was sent to the Hon. Colin Gibson, minister for air.

U.S. Wants Danube Opened for Free Navigation

By JOHN A. PARRIS, JR.

Lake Success, N.Y., Sept. 28 —(AP)— The United States moved toward a showdown with Russia today on the explosive issue of opening the Danube to free navigation and commerce.

As the United Nations Economic and Social Council prepared to resume discussion (at 11:30 a.m. E.D.T.) of Yugoslav and Czech claims for restitution of vessels held by American occupation authorities, the United States stood accused by Russia of direct interference in the internal affairs of countries involved in traffic on the Danube.

The Soviet accusation was made in a 3½-hour council session yesterday after United States delegate John G. Winant proposed that a conference be held of Russia, United States and the southeast European States in Vienna to resolve problems now obstructing the resumption of international traffic on the Danube.

Mr. Winant told the council that 214 Yugoslav and Czech vessels held by the Americans would be returned when some working agreement is reached which "will permit the unrestricted movement of those vessels throughout the entire course of the Danube."

Nikola Feonov of Russia charged that the United States in refusing to return the vessels under this stipulation was putting pressure on both Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. He accused the United States of presenting an "ultimatum" to these two countries, declaring that it was "like putting a pistol at a person's head."

The United States, he said, was proposing the Vienna conference as a means of preventing Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia from obtaining their demands before the economic and social council.

Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia have asked the council to recommend to the United States the return of their vessels without delay.

JILTED SUITOR DIES

Geraldton, Sept. 28. (CP) — Jacob Kowal, 34, a miner in this northwestern Ontario community was said by police to have committed suicide Thursday in a novel manner when Miss Mary Mahortoff rejected his proposal of marriage. Police said he tied a stick of dynamite around his belt, lighted the fuse and walked into Miss Mahortoff's home. Seconds later the dynamite exploded, killing Kowal. Miss Mahortoff was uninjured.

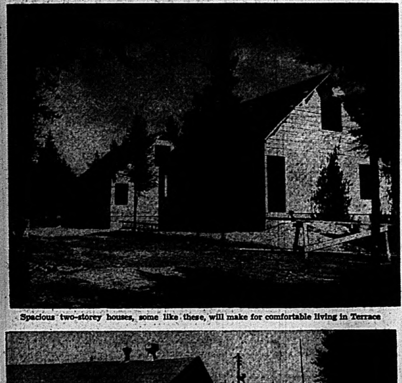
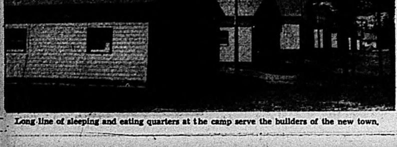
Latest of the $100 million series of developments along Lake Superior's north shore is Terrace, four miles east of Schreiber. Careful planning by Longlac Pulp and Paper Co. is expected to make the town, when completed, one of the most beautiful in the province. Construction workers building the town aim to keep accidents to a minimum. Left to right here are John MacIvor, Murdo Campbell, both of Fort William, and Charles Renner and Allan Livingstone of Kenora.



Spacious two-storey houses, some like these, will make for comfortable living in Terrace



Long line of sleeping and eating quarters at the camp serve the builders of the new town.

CHANNEL ISLANDS MAY SOON RECEIVE NEW CONSTITUTION

British Privy Councillors Visit Islands to Investigate Proposed Judicial Changes

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

St. Helier, Jersey, Channel Islands, Sept. 28—The constitution King John gave the Channel Islands 700 years ago may soon be changed.

Four members of the Imperial Privy Council—Home Secretary Chuter Ede, Conservative R. A. Butler, Liberal Lord Samuel and Labor Lord Ammon—are here to inquire into proposed reforms of the constitution, the judicial system and the procedure of the States, the Jersey and Guernsey parliaments.

It was the States which suggested the changes; but aside from an active Communist element there is no particular interest in the project among Channel Islanders, busy trying to restore the islands' prosperity after German occupation.

"Some people are always trying to make the islands more like England," said one elderly fisherman. "I'm against 'em. We've grown up in our own way and the more we differ from England, the more appeal we'll have for visitors."

The main recommendation put forward in Jersey relates to the positions of the Rectors and Jurats. It is proposed to abolish the 12 Rectors' right to sit in the States by virtue of their office. Instead there would be ten additional deputies.

Elected for Life

The position of the Jurats is more involved. At present they are elected for life; and they not only sit in the States which make the laws but also in the Royal court which interpets them

When King John set up the islands' constitution, his English lawyers didn't understand the laws of Jersey and Guernsey. To help administer justice an English judge was sent to the islands but his job was to decide cases on interpretations of the laws provided by the Jurats.

In English courts, the jury assesses facts and the judge interpret the laws. The proposal is to bring the Channel Islands into line by turning the island Jurats into an English-type jury.

"Politically, this reconstitution would reform Jersey and Guernsey by making them more democratic," said a Jersey lawyer. "It is long overdue."

Deliberate Attempt To Burn Club Is Uncovered

St. Catharines, Sept. 27. (CP) —A deliberate attempt to burn the Club Henley buildings on the Ontario Street Highway just north of St. Catharines was reported today by Provincial Constable Norman Fach.

He and Fire Chief Arthur Burch of St. Catharines, described the incident as "a deliberate attempt at arson". The attempt failed due to the bungling of the firebugs and the alertness of the housekeeper, Mrs. Emily Wood, who saw the flames through a window in another part of the building.

She immediately aroused her employer, Robert Thompson, who with his wife, two sons, daughter and son-in-law were sleeping in the building immediately above the fire.

Dressed only in his night attire, a bathrobe and slippers, Mr. Thompson dashed downstairs where he saw two five gallon tins of highly inflammable liquid burning on the floor of a partially completed addition to the main building.

Both cans were almost full and flames were shooting up from one. Only the fumes above the can had ignited and he put the flames out immediately by placing his foot over the small mouth of the can.

In the other can was a wick made of rolled up newspaper and this still had some three inches to burn in order to ignite the liquid.

Fire Chief Burch said he was calling in for consultation Inspector Lucas of the Ontario Fire Marshal's office and inspector Ray Nelson of the Underwriters' Investigation staff.

Police Jail Twelve Pickets In Movie Strike

Hollywood, Sept. 27 (AP)—The movie strike entered its second day with conference of Studio Unions leader Herbert K. Sorrell telling newspapermen that "there may be men killed before this is over, but we're in no mood to be pushed around any more."

Police jailed 12 pickets yesterday.

"This strike will go on for at least three weeks," Mr. Sorrell predicted.

The Superior Court, acting at the behest of Warner Brothers Studio, granted a temporary restraining order limiting the number of pickets within 200 feet of that big plant to 50. It also prescribed that only eight pickets be stationed at the main gate, and four at other entrances.

"Intimidation, coercion, violence, cursing, etc.," said the order will not be tolerated.

The resumption of C.S.U. picketing yesterday in the jurisdictional fight with International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees caused production to be suspended temporarily at MGM and Warners. These two studios, Mr. Sorrell claimed, are the principal targets of the C.S.U. because "they are the worst anti-union studios."

GIVEN THREE MONTHS

Sarnia, Sept. 27 —(CP)— William Prest, of Bonarlaw, today was sentenced to three months imprisonment and a fine of $100 on charges of reckless driving on which he had been found guilty by a Supreme Court jury here yesterday. Prest was charged following the deaths of three persons in an accident in Thedford Aug. 17 and also with failing to remain at the scene of the accident.

Community Service Chest

Three service organizations in the city, the Children's Aid Society, the Victorian Order of Nurses and the Young Men's Christian Association next week will appeal to the citizens of Belleville and district for funds to carry on their welfare work for another year. The objective of the campaign is $12,000.

Twelve thousand dollars may seem like a lot of money but in terms of the service work which these three organizations will do within the next twelve months it will be little enough.

All three of the above organizations render services on a "less than cost" basis and it is essential that they receive public support in financing. In view of this fact it is important that funds be secured to ensure a continuance of the work throughout the coming year.

The care of the needy and neglected children, and unfortunate mothers; the care of the sick, and the program of wholesome character building activities given through the Y.M.C.A. are dependent upon a generous contribution to the campaign which will get underway on Monday. The work of the Children's Aid Society is well known while many Belleville citizens are dependent upon the nursing care provided through the Victorian Order of Nurses.

The Y.M.C.A. offers health and happiness to youth through wholesome recreation, friends and good fellowship, cultural groups and other character building activities.

On Monday these three organizations will unite in a joint appeal for funds through the Community Service Chest. One call by the canvasser and one contribution will cover all three.

Oshawa Paper Expands

Beginning next Tuesday, October first, the Oshawa Times-Gazette is to publish daily after a long period of printing only on three days a week. As this happens to be the 75th anniversary of the founding of the newspaper a special edition will feature its return to the daily field.

Under the capable management of Mr. Arthur Alloway, the Times-Gazette has developed into a most successful enterprise. Being so close to Toronto there has always been considerable competition from the metropolitan dailies. To combat this the publisher decided some years ago to concentrate on local and district news almost exclusively. And it paid off handsomely. Circulation climbed until now it is near the ten-thousand mark and still continuing to grow. The Whitby Gazette and Chronicle was combined with the Oshawa paper during the war and the whole district is served by the one district newspaper.

It requires courage and resourcefulness to take such a radical step as Mr. Alloway did to depart from the general custom of giving world news along with local news and tread new ground. During the war years it must have been a great temptation to depart from his policy of giving only a summary of war news. However, the publisher knew he was on the right track for circulation continued to rise showing that people are primarily interested in what happens in their own district. They could get reports of world events in other ways but they could not get word of their own home town except by reading the home-town newspaper. That in a few words explains the success of many home-town newspaper whether they are dailies or weeklies.

The entry into the daily field is a natural thing considering the growth of the Times-Gazette and it is the wish of the Ontario Intelligencer that our good friends up west will continue to reap the rewards of success they so justly deserve.

Gambling Should be Defined

Ministers of Ottawa Presbytery of the United Church of Canada have denounced gambling on grounds that it is "not Christian," have supported the General Council of the Church in its appeal to members to abstain from all forms of gambling, and are calling for anti-gambling legislation. With this stand an overwhelming majority of men and women of all religious denominations will agree. The evils of gambling, only too apparent today in Montreal and painfully evident in Ottawa district some years ago, are beyond question.

Clergy of the United Church and of other churches might well go farther than a simple denunciation of gambling. At their councils they might throw further light on exactly what constitutes gambling — evolve a clear definition. There are instances of "border-line" gambling, as witness the bingo games in Ottawa which nobody knows are legal or not. Again, is a person who invests in gold-mining or other highly speculative stocks indulging in gambling? Is a man who trades in grain (not wheat), pepper or cocoa futures a gambler?

Not even the most optimistic hope to see gambling speedily and completely wiped out. It receives mention in the Old Testament in the "casting of lots" and gambling devices have been unearthed in buried cities of the early civilizations. The evil has been reduced even here in Ottawa district, and can be reduced still more.

But first and foremost there must be a clear and unequivocal definition of what gambling is. Then and only then can the best means be devised to fight it.

—Ottawa Journal.

Stooking

Stooking seems to be on its way to join the dodo and the sarabande. A jaunt through the Manitoba countryside where harvesting operations are in full swing discloses that comparatively few fields present the chenille-like appearance that orderly rows of stooks give, says The Winnipeg Tribune.

Most of the fields show only stubble or the grain lying in long swathes. This seems to justify the estimate that fifty percent of the grain harvest in the province is bundled with combines or swathers. If a field is uniformly ripened a combine can cut and thresh 35 acres a day without stripping too many gears. Indeed one farmer is reported to have joined two combines behind a single tractor and is working his way through his fields at the rate of 80 acres daily and threshing 35 bushels to the acre.

In cases where grain is still green in spots the swather cuts it and spreads it in long rows in such a way as to allow heads to ripen quickly. The combine then comes along and finishes the job.

So it does seem that stooking is on the way to become a lost art. Few who have done much stooking will mourn its passing, however. By nightfall that bit of binder twine could become a hot iron to tender hands.

Robbing the Land in Britain

Food production in Britain is going down and down. Unless we change our policies it will continue to fall. How has this decline come about? Mainly by allowing our agriculture to become unbalanced. For years we have been cropping too extensively at the expense of a reduction in our livestock population. We are suffering from a policy of too many crops, too little livestock. Since 1943, when we had a record harvest, yields have fallen because newly-plowed up land has been called on to produce several straw crops in succession. With less grazing and less manure the heart has been taken out of the land. We have put nothing back. And so there has been a marked overall decline in fertility.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is the Grand Chaco?

The Grand Chaco (El Gran Chaco in Spanish) is a vast wilderness of about 300,000 square miles in the heart of South America.

It is a sparsely populated region of marshes, lagoons, tropical jungles, grassy plains and open woodlands. Some of it has never been thoroughly explored and some of the Indian tribes there have never submitted to any governments but their own.

This "Green Hell" was called "Chaco" or "Chacu" by the Incas before Pizarro conquered Peru. The term is believed to signify "hunting ground" or "drive of wild animals." Chaco tribesmen, unable to cope with the trained warriors of the Incas, scattered in all directions like game in a hunting drive when their territory was invaded by the more civilized people from the Andes. Bolivian Indians apply "chaco" to an unctuous earth that they eat with chocolate.

The Grand Chaco is composed of Chaco Boreal, Chaco Central and Chaco Austral. Its known natural resources consist of palms, cabinet and building woods, quebracho (source of tannin used in curing leather) and some minerals and oil.

Argentina, Paraguay and Bolivia began to fight over the control of this area soon after their liberation from Spain. Wars over El Gran Chaco have cost more lives than the territory has inhabitants.

That part of the Chaco south of the Pilcomayo River — about 500,000 square miles — was definitely acquired by Argentina. The remainder is still the subject of a century-old dispute between Paraguay and Bolivia. The crux of the Chaco dispute was landlocked Bolivia's demand for a port on the upper reaches of the Paraguay River. That part of the Chaco claimed by Paraguay is larger than Paraguay proper. A strip of the Chaco known as the "Hayes Zone" was awarded to Paraguay in 1876 when President Rutherford B. Hayes of the United States acted as arbiter.

After intermittent fighting for years Paraguay formally declared war on Bolivia in 1933. When hostilities were suspended in 1935 this war had cost more than 100,000 lives. Bolivia got the worst of the contest because her troops, chiefly Indians reared in the high Andes, could not endure the hot, sultry and rainy climate in the Chaco lowlands.

In 1938 the two countries agreed to a formula by which their boundaries in the Chaco were to be determined without further bloodshed.

Capital Closeups

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Sept. 28 — (CP) — A parade of British cabinet ministers through Canada and a similar parade of Canadian ministers through Britain within the last few months has not only provided some grounds for speculation that the peacetime co-operation between the labor government in London and the Liberal government in Ottawa is becoming closer than any previous existing Commonwealth relations but at times has given both governments a quorum at either Wellington Street or Whitehall.

It is know that Prime Ministers Clement Attlee and Mackenzie King has established a deep personal regard for each other and are as close together as Mr. King and the late President Roosevelt were at one time. And one of the fruits of this intimate relationship is an agreement that Canadian and British cabinet ministers are to intermingle as freely and as often as possible.

The new status of Canadian-British relations has been described in some circles as resulting in a shift of Canadian foreign affairs weight further away from the United States and closer to London. It is known that Mr. King and President Truman have not taken up the deep close personal relationship that existed between Mr. King and Mr. Roosevelt.

One of the most recent visitors to Parliament Hill has been humorous and likeable Hugh Dalton, holder of the exalted office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has a happy faculty of serving finance in interesting helpings.

The other day he and members of the parliamentary press gallery enjoyed a press conference that contained little news but much entertainment.

Tulip A La Carte: Another Finance minister who visited Ottawa this week was Dr. Pieter Lieftinck of The Netherlands. He told reporters his country was gradually recovering its position as the world's primary supplier of tulip bulbs.

This objective was being reached despite a wartime setback which saw the resourceful Dutch forced to use their store of tulip bulbs as a food.

"But were they palatable?" inquired a reporter who is also a keen gardener.

"It all depends on the housewife who disguises them," said the minister with a philosophical shrug.

SHORTAGE CAUSES DIVORCE

Chicago, Sept. 28 — (AP) — Mrs. Mary Kelin, 30, told Superior Judge George M. Fisher the meat shortage caused the breakup of her marriage to John Klein, 34, a butcher. She said Klein became so irritated when his two markets were meatless that he would come home and strike her. After their separation, she said, she continued patronizing his shops but two weeks ago he not only refused her meat but struck her for asking for it. Mrs. Klein was awarded a divorce on grounds of cruelty.

SAY RESISTANCE AND YOUR QUACKERY DEFIES EXPOSURE

The common cold, says one of my colleagues, is not a clearcut disease for other infections in the body start with symptoms resembling the common cold.

That makes it pretty soft for us doctors—when patients come with symptoms resembling the common cold" (by the wy, it would take a lot of wind out of my sails, or would you call it hot air, if as many as three doctors of standing were to get together some time and agree on just what are the symptoms of "the common cold" —when patients come with such symptoms we can guess it is or it isn't—and our guess is as good as the guess of the patient any time.

The good colleague goes on to say:

"The common cold is highly contagious. The infection is spread to susceptible persons in the first 24 to 48 hours. Resistance varies from person to person, and it varies in the same individual from time to time throughout the year."

If I thought I had my colleague on a spot my delight was momentary. Unless to butt my head against the Great Wall of "resistance".

Not only has no physician of standing or no medical scientist, dared to write a definition of "the common cold" but no health authority can or will define "resistance"— and this, children, is a challenge to all of my medical brethern and to the health authorities of the country.

How my good colleague knows that "resistance vvaries" as he so kindly explains, is a mystery he will never divulge, I am sure—for the simple reason he doesn't know a thing about it.

No physician can determine or even guess, any better than your Aunt Harriet can, in any instance, whether any individual has or has not "resistance" —if that means immunity against whatever respiratory infections he chooses to regard as "the common cold."

All this medical double-talk about "resistance" is sheer hokum. Half the time when the doctor or health authority beats his gums about "resistance" he does so innocently, sincerely, because he has been brought up and educated, if education is the right word for it, to believe such hokum—medicine, even in these days when we docs put on "scientific" airs, is still shot through with medical fallacies, and it is an unhappy, disillusionng experience for a doctor to find himself eventually constrained to relinquish any of these traditional theories in the face of newer knowledge. And half the time the doctor prating about "resistance" does so expressly to befuddle his customers and keep them from realizing that he practices quackery. A quack, says Webster, is a person who professes skill or knowledge in any matter of which he knows little or nothing. So I say any doctor who gives you that hackneyed line about "resistance" is one.

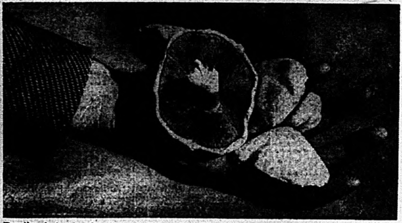
Wild Grapes, She Said—Then 'Cripes' She Said

OLD-TIMERS THINK IT WILL BE A TOUGH WINTER

There are more wild grapes, elderberries, chokecherries, nuts, mushrooms and autumnal whatnots than there have been for years. But there isn't enough sugar to allow the thrifty housewife a frenzy of jam and jelly-making. And anyway, as witness the above pictures, while the wild grapes are easy to find, they can't be eaten "au natural."



Beauties, just out of a dew-spangled pasture, these field mushrooms would be the perfect garniture for steak — if one could get steak, or afford it. Most popular of Canada's edible fungi, first frosts have brought up a fine crop of mushrooms for early-morning seekers.

'Squatter' Movement Giving Govt. its Biggest Headache

By GEORGE KITCHEN

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Sept. 28 — (CP)—The veteran-led "squatter" movement, centred for the moment in Ottawa and Vancouver but capable of spreading to other cities of the Dominion, is giving the government one of its biggest post-war headaches.

Outwardly, the government has taken little notice of the movement, except for cautious defence headquarters statements condemning the taking over of present and former service buildings, but behind the scenes the situation is believed to be causing considerable concern lest it spread afield in other house-short centres.

In Ottawa, where the recently-formed Veterans Housing League has taken over three service buildings to house nearly 50 families — about 200 persons — of ex-servicemen, the matter was brought to the attention of Prime Minister Mackenzie King by Mayor Stanley Lewis, who discussed the situation with Mr. King in a 45-minute conference.

The outcome of this meeting was the formation of a committee, made up of federal and civic officials, to survey the capital's housing possibilities and arrange suitable accommodation. The committee promptly announced it expected to have 90 family units available for occupancy before the snow flies.

But even this hopeful prediction failed to deter the league which this week, in its most militant thrust to date, forcibly occupied two of the capital's military buildings, a naval building at H. M. C. S. Carleton and a former C.W.A.C. barracks at Lansdowne Park, and settled 20 families in them.

The league previously had occupied Kildare barracks, an old-time Ottawa family home and former C.W.A.C. resident, and an army hut on Porter's Island for six veterans and their families.

Born Last January

There was a parallel movement, though on smaller scale, at Vancouver, where the "squatter" activity was born last January in the occupation by veterans of the old Vancouver Hotel, when eight ex-servicemen's families took over buildings at Vancouver's Little Mountain Army barracks.

Latest reports from the coast say the veterans are determined to continue their occupation of the barracks despite lack of water, heat and electrical services, which have been cut off on orders from defence headquarters.

An aftermath of the Ottawa League's earlier occupation of the Kildare barracks was an announcement by Ottawa city health authorities of two cases of infantile paralysis among children living in the temporary quarters. The youngsters were taken to hospital and others who had played with them were quarantined.

While these developments were in the making, Canada's housing picture was brightened somewhat by a statement from Reconstruction Minister Howe that the housing target of 60,000 units during 1946-47 was "well within" the country's productive capacity.

Mr. Howe made the statement in releasing a survey of the "demand side" of housing manpower and materials. A bulky, technical document, the report gave over-all estimates of material and manpower requirements for housing targets varying from 50,000 to 80,000 units a year.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics also shed some new light on the housing situation, reporting that despite shortages of materials and skilled labor Canadians obtained almost twice as many building permits in the first eight months of the year as in the corresponding period of 1945.

The Bureau said that up to September 32,040 permits were granted for construction of new dwelling units against 18,363 at the same date a year ago. The permits were valued at $267,361,578, an increase of 116 per cent over the $123,889,319 total of Aug. 31, 1945.

NEWS about a NEW PLAN of SAVING created specially for you

● If you are one of the thousands of Canadians who started buying bonds in the very first Victory Loan, you certainly are lucky. Even if you bought bonds in only a few of the loans, you still are lucky. You have your bonds tucked away for a rainy day. You're getting extra income by cashing the coupons regularly.

With the war over, the question was whether or not Canadians still wanted to keep on buying bonds. To find the answer to this question, thousands of people all over the country were asked if they wanted to continue their wartime savings habit. Eight out of ten of those asked said they were anxious to keep on saving—by buying bonds.

In answer to this demand, Canada Savings Bonds will go on sale soon. They will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and $1000. The interest yield will be attractive. The bonds will be registered, providing protection against loss. They can be cashed at any time at full face value, with interest, at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank.

Complete details will be announced in this paper on Monday. Watch for this announcement, and make plans now to buy the new Canada Savings Bonds.

8 out of 10 will buy again....

WEDDINGS

POULTER—McPHEE

Emmanuel College Chapel, Toronto, was the scene recently of a very pretty evening wedding when Jean McPhee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McPhee, of Toronto, became the bride of Theodore (Ted) Poulter, son of the Rev. A. Poulter and Mrs. Poulter, of Madoc.

The chapel, decorated with gladioli and lighted by candles, made an effective setting for the double ring ceremony performed by the father of the groom, while Mr. Stanley Hawthorne, of Madoc, a close friend, played the wedding music. Before the ceremony, Miss Joan Brabant, soloist of Carlton Street United Church, sang "The Lord's Prayer", and "O Love Divine", during the signing of the register.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, made a charming picture in a gown of white Alencon lace, train-length veil and carried a bouquet of white gladioli. Her only attendant was Miss Connie Green as bridesmaid, wearing a gown of blue lace and carrying a bouquet of yellow gladioli.

Mr. Frank McPhee, brother of the bride, acted as groomsman, and Messrs. Jack Wallens, of Toronto and Douglas Steinberg, of Wooler, were the ushers.

Following the marriage, a reception was held at 45 Pacific Avenue, the home of the bride's parents, where her mother received in a gown of pansy-purple, assisted by the mother of the groom in pale grey with an orchid corsage.

Out-of-town guests were from Owen Sound, Sault Ste. Marie, St. Catharines, Trenton, Madoc and Belleville.

The happy couple left for a motor trip to eastern points, the bride travelling in an ensemble of copen-blue with navy accessories. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

V.O.N. News

Mothers just home from the hospital with a new baby and rather diffident about giving it that first bath or a little inexperienced in planning the best day's schedule have at their reach a special V.O.N. service . . . "the demonstration bath". The nurse, if arrangements are made early enough, will call at their home the first morning that the mother is back from the hospital. Not only will the nurse demonstrate and instruct the mother in the best method of bathing the baby, but she will prepare the whole day's feedings from the prescribed formula and outline the most efficient daily routine for baby's health and mother's convenience. The nurse will come as often as the mother feels that she needs this service.

The popularity of such a service with young mothers is increasing and it is often the practice for the mother to get in touch with the Victorian Order Nurse before she goes to the hospital to be sure that the nurse will be available the morning that she returns home again.

In connection with the Community Service Chest a window display for the Victorian Order can be seen at the Belleville Utilities next week and this display is centred around this particular phase of Victorian Order work. Citizens who are aware of and appreciate the skilled nursing service available at a very low cost (and often free of charge) to the people of this community can demonstrate their interest in a practical way by giving generously to the Community Service Chest appeal which begins next week and of which the Belleville Victorian Order of Nurses is a member.

The program was in charge of the group headed by Mesdames Massie and Myers. A duet, "Rock of Ages", by Mrs. Rollins and Miss Brown was greatly appreciated. Rev. D. C. Amos was the speaker of the afternoon. He said —"The church in the coming years will be just what we make it", and urged the ladies to do their best to further the efforts of the Crusade Cavalcade coming to Bridge Street, church in October, as many recruits are needed to extend the Kingdom of Christ both overseas and in Canada.

At the close of the meeting dainty refreshments were served by the ladies in charge.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A 13-Year-Old "Can't Forget"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My problem is a very common one. I guess you would call it "puppy love".

I met a boy last year in the movies. He is an usher. I came to the movies often and began to know him well. He moved away four months ago and hasn't written to me once. I am only 13 and most people think it is impossible to be in love so young and they only laugh at me. I have tried to get him out of my mind by going out to parties and shows and various places, but I can't forget him. I love him so much, I just wish I would drop dead right now. I don't know what to do. I failed in school and became nervous and mean. It is so foolish of me to be this way, but I can't help it.

I know his address and would love to write to him. Please tell me if it is useless to write him.

"Ronnie"

Since you already know that it is foolish of you to act in the way you have been doing, Ronnie, I don't have to tell you. As for your not being able to help it, that is foolish too.

Why would you want to write to this boy if you have never heard from him since he moved away? If he wanted to hear from you, he'd write to you first, don't you think? Apparently, he never gave you any reason to believe that he thought anything special of you, as you don't say he ever took you out anywhere and you had to go to the movies when you wanted to see him.

No doubt this boy is considerably older than 13, and, if he thinks of you at all, he probably remembers you as a nice kid. Don't let him get any other idea about you by trying to pursue him.

Keep on going out to parties and other places, and the first thing you know, you will find you're having a good time again.

She Wants to Correspond—The She Wants to Correspond — The Boys Don't

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 15 and my sister, who is 23, is married to a man from Arkansas who has six brothers.

I have never had the pleasure of meeting any of them, but I wrote to four of them four months ago. I carry on a correspondence with one of them who is in the army. Another brother answered my letter immediately, but failed to answer my next one. Two brothers didn't answer at all.

My sister's husband says that none of them went any further than the eighth grade and are ashamed of their writing, and he says they never learned how to write letters. He gave that as their reason for not writing to me. However, every letter I have received from them was perfectly understandable and I enjoyed them.

Should I write again to them, and if so, what should I say to make them understand that I want very much to write to them?

Betty

You live a long way from Arkansas, Betty. Why not stop trying to interest boys so far away and look around closer to home? Surely you'd have a lot more fun.

Frankly, it would seem silly to me to keep writing to boys who don't give any sign that they want to correspond with you. Letter-writing as a rule, isn't anything men enjoy doing. Don't you know that it's the wives who do most of the family correspondence, even with the husband's own relatives? So it's hardly likely that boys who are complete strangers to you would get up any great enthusiasm about making the effort to write you letters. I'd advise you to give up the whole idea.

The Big Four Foreign Ministers, U. S. Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin, French President and Foreign Minister Georges Bideault and Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov, at the Paris peace conference are convening once more — this time to iron out differences and pave the way for an Oct. 15 adjournment of the conference. Greatest problem to be tackled by the four is the question of a statue for the governing of Trieste as a "free territory" and disposition of the Adriatic port's frontier between defeated Italy and victorious Yugoslavia. The boundary line as previously proposed by the Big Four and agreed upon in committee at the conference, is shown on the above map as well as the pre-war and the temporary lines.

SOUTH AFRICA MOVES TO CURB BLACK MARKETS

New Control Legislation Provides Prison Terms for Second Offenders

Capetown, Sept. 27 —(CP)— South African authorities, striking against black market activities in food and other commodities, have revised control regulations to provide imprisonment without the option of a fine for persons convicted for the second time of profiteering.

Soap has become scarce in the Union and soap manufacturers have little hope of any immediate improvement. The soap industry is entirely dependent on an oil quota from an international pool and a trade ban imposed by the Indian Government in protest against South Africa's Indian Land Tenure Act was believed chiefly responsible for the soap shortage.

Dr. Hendrick van Eck, director of food supplies, appealed for increased food production for the relief of millions of South Africans who were not receiving enough food to supply sufficient energy for working. He said large-scale experiments were under way to fortify corn meal with yeast and that the fortified meal would be produced in large quantities if the experiments were successful.

Financial relief for sugar beet growers was forecast by the Rand Daily Mail as another step toward increasing production. The Board of Trade, which investigated the sugar beet industry, has submitted recommendations for the relief of the planters.

A 10 per cent cut in the sugar quota to distributors was put into effect because of drought conditions in Natal and grave shortages are feared for next year unless conditions change. There has been no appreciable rainfall in the sugar belt since March.

The government has called for bids from private airlines which propose to establish feeder services to supplement eight trunk routes now operated by South African Airways, a government airline.

The government propose to grant licences to private operators empowering them to provide service along previously determined routes.

The Johannesburg Star has predicted a 10 per cent increase in railway fares because of a rise in the cost of living. The government price controller is re-examining prices of food and other commodities to determine wnat industries can absorb increased freight costs.

A statement by the Chamber of Industries charged that the railways were more interested in balancing their own budget than in keeping down the cost of living.

Further tax concessions next year have been indicated by Acting Premier and Finance Minister P. H. Hofmeyr. Mr. Hofmeyr told a United Party meeting the country's first task should be increasing the national income and predicted big changes in South Africa, possibly along the line of the great discoveries of the last century such as diamonds and gold.

WAR AMNESIA VICTIM STILL UNIDENTIFIED

World Search Fails to Solve Case of New Zealand's Gunner "Chrisp"

By J. C. GRAHAM
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Auckland, N.Z., Sept. 27 —(CP)—After a search ranging over the Middle East, New Zealand, England, America and Poland, Gunner "Chrisp," perhaps the most publicized amnesia victim of the Second Great War has been discharged in England with his past still clouded in mystery.

Gunner "Chrisp" was found in the Western Desert in 1943 in a dazed and exhausted condition. Wearing a New Zealand hat badge and shoulder titles he was admitted to a New Zealand hospital. He had lost his memory; from documents found on him it was thought that identification would be simple.

The evidence included the tattered remains of an army paybook, two photographs of himself, one of a girl, a view of Pallister Bay, Wellington, and a notebook containing two Auckland addresses, reference to a New Zealand flying officer, to the Methodist Church, farming, milking machines, manures, and several persons in New Zealand.

Each of these clues led to a dead end. Neither the relatives of the flying officer, who had been killed, the people living at the addresses given, nor any others named or remotely connected with the evidence had ever heard of Chrisp nor knew anyone resembling him.

In the Middle East every means medical and psychological was tried to restore Chrisp's memory. A well-built but noticeably short man — his height was only 5 feet 2½ inches — he seemed intelligent and fairly well educated. About 30 years old, he was growing bald and wore a small moustache.

Because of his accent it was thought he might have been an Englishman who enlisted with the New Zealand unit raised there early in the war and eventually Gunner "Chrisp" was sent to England. Inquiries there proved equally futile. Apart from his complete loss of memory he was fit and well and apparently well able to start life anew. So he has been discharged with the mystery still unsolved.

BRUNNER MOND CHEMICAL STRIKE HAS WIDE EFFECTS

Has Halted Production in Only Plant That Makes Soda Ash

By JACK WILLIAMS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Amherstburg, Sept. 27 (CP) — The strike of 400 Brunner Mond Company workers—one of the most critical work stoppages Canada has ever experienced — is well into its third month with no indication of an early settlement.

The strike dates back to July 12 when the workers, members of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), walked out in an effort to enforce their demands on wages, hours and union security.

It halted production in the only major Canadian plant that produces soda ash, essential to the manufacture of such varied products as soap, glass, pulp and paper, aluminum, nickel and the processing of some base metals. These primary products quickly felt the pinch and it has since affected manufacturing plants using these materials.

Labor Minister Mitchell has described the stoppage as "out of all proportion to the number of workers involved."

Differences between company and union extend back to November, 1945, when their contract expired. When negotiations over a new agreement collapsed the union called a strike and the federal government launched an investigation, conducted by Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan of Windsor, who reported in early August that he had been unable to effect a settlement.

Little Difference

Since the strike started there has been little difference in the positions adopted by the company and union. On wages the union asked an increase of 25 cents an hour. The company offered 10 cents. The company said it was sympathetic to the union's request for a shorter work week but considered it impractical.

Main stumbling block was—and apparently still is—the question of some form of union security. Mr. Hanrahan reported the company had "steadfastly refused" to negotiate on security.

To the union security is a vital matter. The plant, located 18 miles from Windsor, is in one of the most highly organized areas of Canada, an area where union shops are common and where there has been wide acceptance of the Rand formula which flowed from the Ford Motor Company strike of a year ago. The Rand formula requires all employees to pay union dues but leave actual membership on a voluntary basis.

The Union has contended that their efforts to negotiate with the management have been hampered by the fact that top officials of the company are in Montreal and the United States.

Mr. Hanrahan gave some support to this argument when he reported: "This situation of absentee policy-makers who have apparently given their able counsel inflexible instructions to say no to all suggestions as to some form of union security makes further conciliation efforts—regretably futile."

There have been no major developments since the Hanrahan report. A few informal conversations which have taken place between company and union representatives have failed to provide a basis for renewed negotiations.

Glasgow Citizens Unwontedly Sober

Glasgow, Sept. 27 —(CP)— Glasgow is a more sober city, thanks to shortage of liquor supplies and new forms of recreation.

"Drunkenness is no longer a problem to us," said Chief Constable Malcolm McCulloch.

Police records show an improvement in drinking habits since the beginning of the century. In 1905 proceedings were taken against 183 persons in every 10,000 of the city's population on charges of being drunk and incapable. The 1935 figure was 57 in 10,000; last year it was at a record low of 16.

"Cinemas, dance halls and improved opportunities for sports and other recreations are undoubtedly strong counter-attractions to the public house," said Chief McCulloch.

"Young people are growing up away from the atmosphere of public houses and when liquor again becomes plentiful I don't believe they will change their present temperate or teetotal habits."

"LIZZIE" TO MAKE HER MAIDEN TRIP AS CIVILIAN SHIP

Giant Cunarder, Queen Elizabeth, to Start Peace-time Service Soon After Six Years as Troop Carrier

By R. J. ANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, —(CP)—A great grey ship loomed out of the early-morning mist, sped southward off the coast of Long Island and slipped into the port of New York. The world's largest liner had crossed an Ocean made perilous by prowling U-boats and reached haven.

Next month the Queen Elizabeth will receive the tribute due an ocean queen that New York was unprepared to tender 1940. Six years and 492,635 miles of war service behind her, the stately queen of the sea will be in the service for which she was built—speedy, luxurious trans—Atlantic travel.

Warm-hearted New York City, always eager to give a vociferous reception to the reigning queen of the Atlantic, was electrified in 1940 when the Admiralty in London, with the Elizabeth in safe waters, announced her imminent arrival. New York welcomed her in regal fashion the following morning, but it was not official. There was no time for that. Too, the Elizabeth then was not truly a queen. She was an uncompleted ship, a hull.

But the 83,673-ton Cunarder will come into her own when she sails from Southhampton Oct. 16 on her maiden voyage as a luxury passenger liner. Except for the stout hull laid down in a Clyde shipyard, she will be practically a new ship. Behind her is the greatest maritime refitting job on record. She sails as undisputed Queen of the Atlantic.

Transformed Ship

The Queen Elizabeth of 1946 would be a transformed vessel to the Canadian soldier of the Second Great War who saw her only as a floating barracks, every available inch of her interior turned into sleeping quarters for 15,000 troops. Gone, too, are the initials he carved on her deck; planking worn smooth by more than 811,000 pairs of servicemen's boots has been replaced almost in its entirety.

The war history of the Queen Elizabeth, a job that won the Royal Navy's "well done," began Feb. 26, 1940 when she slipped down the Clyde on a supposed trial run. The trip ended in New York where her sister ship, the Queen Mary, lay beside the ill-fated French liner Normandie, now a fire-wrecked hull at a Brooklyn dock. She completed the hazardous journey in five days.

For nine months in New York American workers swarmed over her, rushing her to completion. On Nov. 13, 1940, she sailed for Singapore to be refitted as a troop transport. From Singapore, she sailed for Sydney to begin her first voyage as a passenger-carrying liner—bearing 5,600 Australian and New Zealand troops bound for Suez.

The 40,000 troops she carried to the Middle East in the remaining months of 1940 provided the core of the army that eventually turned the tide of war in favor of the allies in that theatre.

Then with the United States at war, she transported American troops from San Francisco to Sydney. In 1942 she reinforced the British 8th Army in time for the offensive which the following year swept the Germans out of Africa.

Took Yanks Overseas

With the Queen Mary, she began in 1943 the tremendous task of ferrying American troops across the Atlantic to Britain for the invasion of Europe. On each eastbound voyage she carried an average of 15,000 troops—a division. On return trips she carried thousands of war prisoners. By the end of 1944, on the trans-Atlantic run alone, she had transported nearly 500,000 troops.

In more than five years of hard war service the Queen Elizabeth became known to more than 811,000 Allied servicemen and women, more than 60,000 of them Canadians who recall her as the ship which returned them to the homes they had left for war. Now, her hull painted black, superstructure a natty white and funnels blazoned with the red and black of the Cunard White Star Line, she's a proud civilian once more.

The reconversion job began immediately after the liner completed her final voyage as a war transport last March 6. Some fittings were removed in New York, the remainder in Southhampton. Heavy work was carried on at the Clyde. Reconditioning the electrical installations was a major task. Four thousand miles of wire had to be examined. Firebrick in the 12 great boilers were renewed. Galleys which had prepared 22,000,000 meals for combat troops were overhauled.

While this work was being done furniture and similar equipment was being collected at Southampton. Ordered and delivered before the war, these unused furnishings and decorations had been stored in the United States, Australia and other parts of the world. They include such items as 21,000 pieces of furniture and 4,000 mattresses.

Now the Queen Elizabeth is all but ready for her first luxury crossing of the Atlantic under command of Sir James Bisset, Commodore of the Cunard White Star fleet and a veteran of nearly 50 years at sea.

He sailed both the great queens during the war.

TRIAL DRAWS CROWDS

The trial of George Heath (ABOVE), former South African air force pilot, for the sadistic murders of two women, Mrs. Margery Gardner, film extra, and Doreen Marshall, ex-Wren, is making London's staid Old Bailey look like the bleacher gate of the Yankee Stadium during the World Series. Morbid Londoners stand in line all night in hopes of securing one of the 35 seats available to the public. Other hundreds stand about hoping for a sight of one of the principals in the trial.

Post-Season Playoff Now Highly Probable, With Brooks, Cards Tied for First Place

Bobby Feller Ties Rube Waddell's Listed Strikeout Record of 343

By RALPH RODEN
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

The first Major League post-season play-off to decide a pennant loomed today as St. Louis Cardinals and Brooklyn Dodgers headed into the final week-end deadlocked for first place in the National League.

The co-leaders, with identical won and lost records, have only two games left to play. Both will be at home, the Cards winding up the season with Chicago Cubs tonight and tomorrow afternoon at Sportsman's Park, and the Dodgers clashing twice with Boston's Braves at Ebbet's Field.

Chicago Cubs, themselves in a battle with the Braves for third place, shoved the Red Birds into a first-place tie with the idle Brooks last night with a 7-2 victory.

Hank Borowy, repeated his Sunday win over the Cards—even to the extent of the same score—hanging up his 12th victory although he was forced to retire in the eighth inning because of a blister on his pitching hand. Hooks Wyse, originally scheduled to hurl against the Birds, took over and stopped the Cards the rest of the way.

Feller Ties Record

In the American League, Bob Feller, Cleveland Indians' great righthander, struck out six Detroit batsmen in a five-inning relief stint to tie Rube Waddell's listed Major League record of 343 strikeouts in a single season and defeat the Tigers 9-8. A recent research however, revealed that Waddell in 1904 actually fanned 349—more than the official record credits him with.

Tex Hughson staggered through to his 20th victory as Boston Red Sox downed Washington Senators 5-4.

Chicago White Sox moved to within half a game of the fourth-place Senators by taking both ends of a twin bill from St. Louis Browns, 7-3 and 8-3.

In the only other National League game, Cincinnati Reds, behind the five-hit pitching of Joe Beggs, shut out Pittsburgh Pirates, 8-0.

Royals, Colonels Ready for Series In Louisville

(By The Canadian Press)

Montreal Royals, champions of the International League and Louisville Colonels of the American Association face off tonight at Louisville in the first game of the best-of-seven Little World Series. Manager Harry Leibold pronounced his Colonels in top shape after five days rest since defeating Indianapolis four in a row in their league playoff. Montreal take four games of five from Syracuse to win the International League nomination.

The teams will play two more games in Louisville — Sunday and Monday — and then shift to Montreal.

After eliminating Helen Sigel of Philadelphia 3 and 2, Babe Didrikson Zaharias of Denver advanced to the championship final at Tulsa, Okla., to meet Mrs. Clare Sherman of California today in the National women's golf tournament.

Jack Kramer of California, national tennis champion, eliminated Bob Falkenburg of Hollywood in five sets yesterday at Los Angeles to enter the final of the 20th annual Pacific Southwest tennis tournament. The second finalist is not yet known.

Ben Hogan, P.G.A. champion, assumed the lead at the half-way mark yesterday with a 139 total in the $10,000 Dallas, Tex., open golf competition. One stroke behind was a dark horse, Harry Todd of Dallas.

Henry Cotton, former British Opn x
Open champion, and James Adams of Scotland yesterday became finalists in the British match play golf championship at Liverpool. Adams eliminated Dick Burton while Cotton disposed of Bobby Locke of South Africa in the semi finals.

After Beau Jack declined to meet Ray Robinson for the world welterweight title yesterday, the New York State Athletic Commission decided to delay action with respect to a match for the vacant throne until next Friday.

ST. KITTS BEAT QUEBECERS IN SECOND GAME

Will Now Meet Salmonbellies of New Westminster for Dominion Lacrosse Title

Quebec, Sept. 28. (CP) — Fresh from a 16-7 victory over Quebec Mountaineers last night and a clean sweep of their Eastern Canada Senior Lacrosse finals, St. Catharines Athletics packed their kit bags and headed for Toronto for the opening of the Dominion finals there Monday.

With two straight under their belts, the Saints now meet the perennially potent Salmonbellies from New Westminster, B.C., in a best-of-five series for the Canadian Championship and the coveted Mann Cup.

The Saints had little difficulty taking the first game from Quebec Wednesday when they sank the Mountaineers 19-12. Last night they found the Quebecers an even softer touch, winning the second game of the best-of-three Eastern Canada finals 16-7.

The Quebec crew put up the stiffest opposition in the first stanza of last night's game and twice took the lead only to have the Ontario Champs finish the period with a 4-3 edge.

St. Kitts started to roll in the second frame and added four tallies to their score, but it was really in the last two periods that the Mountaineers felt the full force of the Athletics power as the visiting snipers broke through the wobbly Quebec defence to score eight markers.

Wandy McMahon was the scoring star of the night with four tallies while teammates Jimmy McMahon, Joe Cheevers, Stu Scott and Urquhart nicked two goals apiece. Smith, Nelson, Fitzgerald and Don Cove accounted for the other St. Catharines scores.

Syd Wright did his level best to keep the Quebecers in the swim with three goals while Frank King bagged a pair and punch Imlach and Aime Constantin, registered one each.

ZALE DEFENDS TITLE WITH K.O. OVER GRAZIANO

Savage Fight in Which Challenger Had Zale in Bad Shape

By JOHN D. HAMILTON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Sept. 28 — (CP) — Forty thousand sports fans trickled out of New York's Yankee Stadium last night, muttering superlatives and grinning with satisfaction.

Zale, staggered by Graziano's savage punching and tottering on aging legs, got up off the floor in the second round to stage one of the great come-backs of ring history.

Badly hurt in the fifth round, his superior ring skill barely held off Rocky until the bell. But with a minute's rest, he came back to crush the Lower East Sider with a paralyzing body attack which set his rival up for a knock-out punch at one minute and 43 seconds of the sixth.

Beamed Over Fighters

Promoter Mike Jacobs, who has been under sharp fire for alleged mismatches in the immediate past, beamed over both fighters and told the beaten Graziano in his dressing room:

"Don't feel bad, Rocky. You'll be right back up there."

He wouldn't talk about a rematch but from the fans' point of view it looked like a natural for next summer or sooner.

Ironically enough, the champion — and victor — took by far the worst physical beating of the two participants. Rocky, noted for his pulverizing punching, lived up to advance notices and his slamming rights and lefts nearly finished the battle on a dozen occasions.

Badly Cut Up

In the dressing room after the fight, Zale nursed a mouse under his right eye, a badly cut lip and nose, and a possibly fractured right hand.

But Graziano was almost unmarked.

It was Zale's first defence of the title he won in 1941 — and couldn't put on the line for four years in the navy. It ended the myth that Zale, at 32, was washed up. At 160 pounds—the weight limit — the champion outweighed the challenger by six pounds and was in superb physical condition.

The crowd of 40,000 paid in $342,497 for one of the largest gates in non-heavyweight fight history at a $30-top for ringside seats.

ARGOS TO PLAY THREE GAMES IN EIGHT DAYS

Coach Teddy Morris Says Team on Spot in Game at Ottawa

(By The Canadian Press)

Coach Teddy Morris of the Dominion champion Toronto Argonauts takes a dim view of the eastern Interprovincial schedule, which has had his favorite team playing three games in eight days. Morris and his team arrived in Ottawa today to tackle the Ottawa Rough-Riders at Lansdowne Park, and despite the tribulations of the Argos Morris was still of the opinion that his team is tops.

The Argos were definitely on the spot at Ottawa today. They have a two-point lead in the eastern Big Four over Ottawa and a victory would leave them sitting pretty. But, Argos at Toronto last Saturday beat Ottawa by only one point, and on Wednesday night at Hamilton they were held to a 15-15 tie by the lowly Wildcats.

Argos of course are only one team out of four in the eastern Interprovincial, but their troubles are of importance simply because they hold the Dominion title and up to now have been the team to beat.

Morris still thinks that he's got a championship team, and this afternoon's fracas at Lansdowne Park should show whether he's right.

Forgetting Argos, there's a hefty schedule of four other senior games today. Three of them are in the senior Ontario Union, with the last - place Ottawa Trojans travelling tc Toronto Indians, Toronto Balmy Beach travelling to Hamilton Wildcats, and Windsor Rockets travelling to Sarnia Imperials.

In the west, the Saskatchewan Rough-Riders play at Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

The sixth game this weekend takes place Sunday at Montreal, where Lew Hayman's Allouettes entertain the Hamilton Tigers.

Toronto, Sept. 28 — (CP)—The 60-game schedule in the National Hockey League this season — that's 10 more than each club played a year ago — gives hockey players a chance to make more money at their favorite pastime.

None of the six league clubs has come out and publicly announced its salary plans but it is reported that contracts call for increases proportionate to the increase in games. In other words a player who drew $5,000 for the 1945-46 50-game schedule is asking — and getting — $6,000 for the 60-game season, other factors being equal.

Of course, hockey salary contracts are usually flexible affairs. They may fix a salary at $4,500 or $5,000 for the season but offer opportunities to make considerably more, depending on such variable factors as how the team makes out in the league race and Stanley Cup play-offs and the player's own individual performance. Players with $3,500 contracts have been known to make $2,000 to $2,500 more in a season. Others with contracts calling for top salary limit of $6,500 have been known to make more than $10,000.

Gossip in hockey circles says that the Montreal Canadiens will dish out the most money in salary increases. It is said that, as befits a championship club, its payroll has been higher than most in recent years. Moreover, the players have a Stanley Cup championship of last season to use as a bargaining point in seeking somewhat bigger increases than just enough to re-imburse them for the longer schedule.

The Taylor-Watson trade gave the hockey faithful their biggest morsel of gossip of the week. One thing about it, manager Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings is quite happy to have Billy (The Kid) Taylor and managing director Conny Smythe of the Leafs is equally joyful over the acquisition of Harry Watson.

The Adams joy is easily understandable. Taylor is a slick playmaking centre, one of the league's best in recent years, and should add punch to the Detroit attack.

Smythe feels that Toronto needs defensive strength and if Watson doesn't provide it as a defenceman he will as a backchecking forward — he's tops at the shadowing job. The Toronto boss admits that one reason for the deal was that he wants to use young Ted Kennedy at centre ice. As long as Taylor was around, along with the numerous other centre ice men in the Toronto camp, the Port Colborne youth appeared due for a right wing berth.

'Flying Forts' Name of New Line Of Toronto Leafs

St. Catharines, Sept. 28. (CP) —Gaye Stewart, Gus Bodnar and Bud Poile, playing together as the "Flying Forts" in Toronto Maple Leafs Training Camp, appear headed for stardom in the head-of-the-lakes tradition, if Manager Conny Smythe keeps them together.

The way they have been flying in practice sessions recalls to many an old-timer the great hockey players and teams the lakehead produced in other years —Sault Greyhounds, Port Arthur Bearcats and Fort William thundering herd. Lakehead players have starred in the N.H.L. but this is perhaps the first time three Fort William hockey stars have teamed up on a "big-time" forward line.

The way they are skating, passing and scoring in practice indicates the Wily Smythe may have a new crowd-pleaser for Toronto fans—another line like Primeau-Conacher-Jackson and Metz-Kelly-Conacher "kids lines" of other years, only this one appears to be a natural for the moniker "The Flying Forts".

The three played together and against each other at various times in Lakehead minor hockey.

Stewart turned pro, in February 1942, Poile in the Fall of 1942 and Bodnar in the Fall of 1943.

New York, Sept. 28 —(AP)— As he walked into the subway after last night's fight at Yankee Stadium, a veteran New York sport writer remarked: I don't mind standing. I've been standing for the last six rounds." . . . That just about covers the furious fistic doings between Tony Zale and Rocky Graziano . . . in the opinion of his observer, it must be classed among the great all-time fights . . . Graziano didn't have any squawk about the sudden ending . . . "All I heard was eight, nine, 10," he said, "and it ccame up on me very fast." As for Zale, he should get a job predicting results. He even called the round a day in advance.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

An ace in bridge is quite a card, deserving fruitful ends. If you employ it wisely pard, it pays good dividends.

Against a suit contract, the opening lead of an ace says: "When I get through leading this suit, I will have no more cards in it." It shows a lone ace or the ace and only one more card in that suit.

In a no-trump contract, the opening lead of an ace has a meaning that is entirely different, of course. There are not any trumps. So, an ace could not be led to show a suit that will be trumped.

For the safety of the ace, there is no rush about leading it in no-trump. Therefore, when an ace is an opening lead in no-trump, it is employed as an unusual signal.

The signal is: "Partner, drop on this ace your highest card in this suit. No matter how big a card it is, throw it away on this ace. I want your highest card out of the way."

Against three no-trump, it is your opening lead from this hand:

♥7 4
♦6 2
♣A K J 10 9 4

If you can pick up the queen of clubs at once, you can defeat the contract promptly with plenty to spare. Lead the club ace. If partner has the queen, you are asking him to get rid of it now.

If he does, you can run the rest of your clubs. It will happen before declarer can get into the lead to take any tricks. Your ace lead says: "Get the heck out of my way."

Now that you know it, chances are you may not get a chance to use it. Or your partner at the time will not know what it means. Or he will be looking out of the window. He usually is.

Hollywood Column

Hollywood, Sept. 28 —(AP)— A sight I will always remember was Margaret O'Brien peering from the back seat of her car outside M.G.M. yesterday, wondering whether she should pass the picket line. Tearful Margaret finally went in, but not to work. She had to attend school and if she missed a day, it would have to be made up during vacation.

Wonder why Paramount continues putting Ray Milland in costume pictures which do nothing to follow up his "Lost Weekend" hit. He is not happy about his recent ones.

Cary Grant fans will be saddened to learn that he will be absent from these parts most of next year. He'll be in England working for Alexander Korda.

Those who predict a Jane Russell - Bob Waterfield bust-up aren't familiar with their unusual temperaments. They fight often, but never discuss divorce.

Reason for the "Sacred and Profane" retakes is that the Greer Garson-Richard Hart love scenes might be too torrid for the screen. M.G.M. promises a new Garson in it.

Sports Item: Frank Sinatra's Dodgers and Bing Crosby's Crooners engage in a softball fracas Oct. 12. It'll be the world series of the baritones.

Note of relief to 20th-Fox night watchmen and janitors: Vic Mature will no longer live in his dressing room. He is moving to a five-room house nearby which he is decorating himself.

The whole town's talking about . . . The sameness of the "new" Bob Hope radio show, particularly the commercial . . . Rudy Vallee's new blond hair, of which he has grown fond . . . The racy dialogue in "The Big Sleep," which makes moviegoers wonder if they are hearing correctly .

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Sept. 28 —(AP)— A dead Irishman made what theatrical news there was this moribund week on Broadway. "Gypsy Lady," a melange of the late Victor Herbert's operettas "Serenade" and "The Fortune Teller," opened to moderate critical approval and the hosannas of operetta fans.

Fine, sentimental renditions of the Herbert score — including "Serenade," "Romany Life," and "Gypsy Love Song" — pander again to the post-war nostalgia which brought success last year to such revivals as Herbert's "The Red Mill" and "Jerome Kern's "Showboat," both of which survived the summer and still are going fine.

Herbert's "Sweathearts" is slated for revival later in the season with veteran Bobby Clark in the comedy lead.

"Gypsy Lady" purports to be a sort of musical "pygmalion" with a Gypsy girl revamped into a passing imitation of a princess.

Comic Melville Cooper, as the Gypsy Galatea's father, salvages some fire from the Libretto, and Helena Bliss is good in the title role.

A couple of Canadian girls in good voice added their bit to the proceedings. Doreen Wilson of Victoria was properly regal in the second female lead — that of Valeri, Marquise de Ronceval. Red-haired Kaye Connor of Vancouver and Toronto sings the role of Yvonne, leader of the vocal chorus.

Agatha Christie's "Hidden Horizon," an acutely silly piece incorporating all the cliches of all the detective thrillers ever written survived a week. At one point in the nonse a character surveys the corpse-littered arena and comments: "This is a very bad business." The first-night audience tittered and tottered out. Diana Barrymore headed the cast which included David Manners of Halifax.

Toronto's Mary Pickford, founder and part owner of United Artists Film Company, announces during her current visit to New York that she has merged her theatrical properties with those of producer Lester Cowan to form an independent film company. Miss Pickford will be president of the new company.

SPORT SHORTS FROM BRITAIN

By JACK SULLIVAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Sept. 28 (CP)—Blame it on Britain's housing shortage or the post-war "new deal," but big-league soccer managers willing to part with big sums for players now find inflation has hit the market.

One of the best examples concerns 31-year-old Tommy Walker, Hearts' Scottish international inside right who, apparently, had a lot to say in his recent transfer to Chelsea, English League first division club.

Services of Tommy, a big noise in pre-war football, were sought by Charlton Athletic. Jimmy Seed, Charlton's manager, made a couple of London-to-Edinburgh trips to make the deal but Chelsea a last-minute "dark horse", signed him on the dotted line for £6,000 ($24,000).

It isn't known what Tommy got out of the deal but sports writers weren't hesitant about mentioning a home, plus a good position. In all, it was figured that Tommy's soccer-playing and position would net him about £30 a week.

During negotiations in the Scottish city between managers of the clubs concerned, Tommy was called into the discussions and stated the terms and conditions he wanted.

"The sky was the limit, but even that wasn't high enough," Seed told newspapermen on his return to London after Chelsea had obtained the player.

There may be two answers to this latest twist in soccer transfers. Players are looking for some of the "gravy" in the financial deals; they are becoming increasingly conscious of the gate receipts and post-war crowd interest in the game with attendance at the 44 English league Saturday games nudging the seven-figure mark.

The other answer may be that lack of experience of some of the youngsters who made a name during the war years is enhancing the status of the old-timers who proved their worth in pre-war.

Wild Bill Longson Retains World Title Defeating Lee Henning in Smart Main Bout

Henning's Villainous Tactics Offset by Champion's Speed and Aggressiveness; Karl Davis Winner Over Frankie Taylor Challenges Victor of Main Bout

There were howls of glee and mirth at the Hume Arena Friday night when the villainous Lee Henning, who has monopolized the Belleville wrestling throne for the past few months was toppled from his seat with a resounding crash by none other than Wild Bill Longson, National Wrestling Association champion of the world.

The champion, spotting the challenger at least ten pounds, gave full evidence as to why he wears the crown. He looked quite small against the 247 pound Henning, but what he lacked in weight he made up in aggressiveness, speed and a fiery mode of action that delighted the faithful.

But it wasn't easy. La Henning pulled everything he had out of his bag of tricks and often resorted to his favorite method of leaping outside the ring and picking up pieces of whatever is to be found in such a place, secreting them in his trunks and putting the works on the optics and face of the opposition.

Longson lived up to his name. Incited by the rough tactics of Henning he fairly flew apart and on numerous occasions had the capacity-crowded arena in wrestling hysterics with his agile aggressive methods.

He won the first fall after nine minutes of rough tough going and pinned the Henning with a body spread after that worthy had given him some rough out-of-the ring treatment.

Henning took the second fall with his time-honored gag of using the ring posts as a reception committee for the noggin of the opposition. He softened the champion with a number of skull-crushing blows and finally sprawled across him for the fall.

But the champ came back in the third heat to win more or less handily. Enraged by the post-butting methods of Henning in the second fall, Longson chopped, slapped and punched the Iowan cornhusker into more or less submission.

In the dressing room afterward Henning loudly berated Referee Ernie Powers for what he charged was a "quick count." "You even skipped 'two, three and 4' " he howled. "What am I up against in this man's town. The next time I wrestle here there won't be any d - - - referee. I'm getting tired of having to defeat two men in the ring when my contract calls for one."

The Henning was fighting mad and Phil (The Voice) Lawson was called upon, when he could get his mind off Whipper Billy Watson and his alleged adverse publicity, to cast the appeasing oil on the troubled waters.

In fact, it looked for a minute that Longson and Henning would resume hostilities in the dressing room, but the visiting pachyderms stepped in and peace was finally restored.

During the intermission between the second and third falls, Karl "Krippler" Davis issued a ring challenge to the winner of the main bout.

N.H.L. Training Camp Notes

By The Canadian Press)

Likeable Clarence Campbell, new president of the National Hockey League almost had an opportunity to prove his published statement that players who don't see eye to eye with their employers don't need to organize a union to assure themselves a square deal.

Campbell, who shocked hockeydom generally by speaking his mind—something almost unheard of among his presidential predecessors—would have had the salary dispute case of Alex Kaleta vs. Chicago Black Hawks in his lap today if the player had not weakened. Late last night the starry left winger agreed to quit his sit-down strike at Canmore, Alta., and join the Hawks' Regina camp after Manager Bill Tobin declared him a "holdout" and threatened to refer the case to Campbell.

It was good news for Coach Johnny Gottselig who had counted on big things this season from the high-scoring Kaleta. The winger's holdout upheld Johnny's selection of forwards for the Hawks first-string Club but he chose the defenceman—Johnny Mariucci, Eddie Wares, Reg Hamilton, Ralph Nattras and Leo Reise. The last two mentioned starred with Kansas City Pla-Mors last season.

The Wings took the day off yesterday because ice was removed from the Detroit arena for a boxing program. They return to their training chores today and are billed for an exhibition contest Sunday.

MINK COAT

CHAPTER 15.

"I am here, then," Dennis had answered, extending his arms, Isabel had had to ask him his name again.

'Dennis Hardisty," he had said, looking down from his height.

"Do you know mine?"

"Isabel Jordan. I was watching you. I asked."

"Oh." They didn't talk any more, they danced the way perfectly matched partners dance, absorbed in their art.

Dennis was tall, but that was not what made him seem to stand head and shoulders over every other man in the room. There was a quiet force about him; he was years older than Cuddy or Phil or Tom or any of the others, and compared to him they seemed immature and countrified. Her first dance in his big arms carried Isabel off her feet in more senses than one; she looked up at him with serious sapphire-blue eyes and said she was sorry that she was wearing her old white lace.

"Why?" asked Dennis.

"Well—I think I look better in my blue."

"Then God help us all!" Dennis said. Presently he asked her if she came to San Francisco sometimes.

"Yes, I do. I'm coming next weekend."

"And where do you stay, Miss Jordan?"

"With Miss Henry. She's a teacher who went to school with my mother. She lives on San Jose Avenue."

Dennis took out a little book, when the music stopped, and wrote down "Miss Henry, San Jose Avenue" in a small firm scrip.

"You write a sort of English hand, don't you, Mr. Hardistry?" Isabel asked, frankly observant.

"I don't know. I've tried to make it compact. It has to go on blueprints and things like that."

"You're an architect?"

'Engineer."

"Oh." They danced on. In Isabel's heart these facts assembled themselves and were satisfactory. A San Francisco engineer, and attractive in a sort of lanky, Lincolnesque way, and six years older than herself. Just right.

She was an outsider now, of course. An onlooker. Once she would have been the very centre of this wildly excited group; she would have been the one to receive the first of those hungry kisses. As it was, she sat down and watched the scene, a sympathetic expression on her face, hurt and confusion in her trembling heart. Only to keep smiling—only not to cry....

Dennis was in a deep chair, both girls on his knees, his eyes on his mother's face. Now and then he bent his head to hear some question of Pussy's or to kiss the top of Catherine's head. He looked so tired—he looked exhausted now that the first flush of the arrival had paled.

Isabel's throat was thick and her eyes dimmed; she felt confused and awkward. She did not belong here. It was not for her to go with him to the room they always had shared when they were here at his mother's house. It was not for her to make him lie flat on the big bed, resting, while she sat beside him and questioned and listened, and interrupted their talk now and then to kiss the weary eyes.

"What luck to have you here with the children just when I get here," he said, smiling at her.

"Just chance. In another half hour we would have been gone."

"They're grown so tremendously."

"Catherine's going to be tall. She's just even with Pussy now."

"Do you do this very often?"

"Not often enough. But now that Avery—now that Avery is in the Navy I'll hope—but I suppose everything will be changed now," Isabel interrupted herself confusedly.

"We'll probably be in Sausalito, Dennis," his mother said on a questioning note.

"I suppose so. I'll be at Marinship."

"Too early for plans," Isabel said, once more in complete control of herself. She got to her feet. "I think I had better get these girls started for home."

"Mummy, kin we stay here?" Pussy asked eagerly.

"Oh, darling I'd love to leave you. But we have no nightgowns—" Both the children were clinging to her now; Dennis was watching them. "Not tonight, I think?"

"Not tonight," said their grandmother. "But very soon."

"You look so well, Isabel." They were all standing now. "I am very well. I wish you looked a little fatter, Dennis." She half knelt to fasten the little coats, to pull down the children's round hats.

"They're wonderful," their father said.

"They're good girls." Her throat was thickening, her eyes were stinging again. "Say goodby to Daddy, Catherine."

The girls hurled themselves upon their father.

"Daddy, was your picture in the paper?" Pussy demanded, against his final hug and kiss.

"I don't think so, dear."

"Why not? That other soldier's picture was."

"Perhaps he was a general."

"Why?" said Catherine. It was her favorite remark.

"You'll let me know what your plans are? You'll want them for a visit anyway." Isabel looked bravely into Dennis's eyes for the first time and felt the blood rush up over her face.

"Yes, I will."

They went down to the street door, leaving his mother among the photographs and the handsome old chairs and the looped curtains, and Martin came around from the side door and opened the door of the big car for them. Dennis said something to Isabel and she answered, hearing neither his words nor her own.

Then they were spinning down the long road toward home. But Isabel knew, even in that moment of earthquake, that home was where Dennis was. Home wasn't the magnificent, pretentious old Latimer house; home wasn't where Avery could come in and kiss her, and call her wife. The relative merits of the two men, the relative strength of her feeling for both of them, had nothing to do with it. Whatever Avery's claim was, it wasn't that of a husband; she was Dennis's wife, and always would be Dennis's wife.

She belonged in the Laguna Street house tonight; they three belonged there, she and Pussy and Catherine. They should all have been there together—mother, son, son's wife, baby granddaughters. That was a family, that would be home. It was all wrong to have a man come home, war-tired and lean, khaki-clad and with battle stars on his breast, to find his wife wearing another man's name, his children no longer wholly his, his mother his only companion tonight.

Well, but what had become of her life then? How had it suddenly evaporated into this shadow of a life, this play-acting as the rich young Mrs. Latimer? How could she get back to real living, living that had the taste of reality in it?

He had looked so weary, and yet so fine. He had been so quiet, and yet somehow Isabel had sensed, for the first time today, the real values of the situation that she herself had brought about, the meaning of it to all five of them—all six indeed, for Avery would be coming home in a few months, and had his place in the story, too.

"Oh, Dennis, Dennis, Dennis," she said half aloud.

"Dennis is Daddy," said Pussy promptly.

"Dennis is Daddy," Isabel agreed, swallowing with a dry throat.

"Are we goin' to live with that Daddy now, Mummy?"

"Do you remember Sausalito, Pussy?"

"I 'member Sautalito," said Catherine proudly.

"You do, too, baby?"

"We bofe do," said Pussy. "But she calls it Sautalito. I call it Sausalito, don't I, Mummy?"

"Well, I think perhaps you are going there, to visit Daddy and Gran. Would you like that?"

"Today?" asked Pussy.

"No, not today. As soon as Gran can get it all nice and clean."

"Oh," said Pussy, disappointed.

"I want to go today," observed Catherine.

"Very soon you can go. And you must be good."

"Will you go, Mummy?"

"Not at first—no."

"Yelta goin'," Catherine stated.

"No, not Yelta either. Just you two, and Daddy and Gran."

"This Daddy," Pussy sai din deep satisfaction.

"This daddy."

They drove on, past the little newly developed towns, with their terraces of bright little white homes rising up the slopes of the western hills; Burlingame Gate and San Mateo, Redwood City; the car turned right, began to climb the hill. Catherine grew drowsy, but Pussy was gaily communicative all the way home. It was a bright, dear little face that kept turning to Isabel's eagerly and lovingly. She was so happy to be alone with Mummy!

The evening was lonely. Isabel begged off a proffered bridge engagement; she played so poorly, she pleaded. Clare Winston telephoned to ask about bringing an extra guest to the luncheon tomorrow. "Isabel, you're a lamb!" she exclaimed in relief, when Isabel answered with a cordial, "Don't be ridiculous, Clare. Bring her of course."

Why shouldn't Clare bring anyone she liked to luncheon tomorrow? Eight or nine or ten women at the table; what difference did it make? She had forgotten that she was giving a luncheon. Not that it mattered.

No matter how many came the table would present its aspect of arresting beauty; beauty of cut Italian linen, exquisitely arranged flowers, glinting crystal and heavy silver. No matter how many came there would be a perfect meal; jellied soup in the rich dark gold-and-blue cups, followed by something that bubbled brown and crisp in a silver casserole, followed again by the tender cold meat—pheasant or turkey or chicken, and a green shining salad. And after that some one of Fong's miraculous desserts, with rum and custard and cream and pastry all mixed up in it, and everyone complaining loudly that the Latimer cook was a perfect pig about telling anyone how on earth he did things!

Then four women would fall like breathless vultures upon the waiting bridge table, ripping open the new packs of cards in feverish haste, and four more would split hurriedly into two teams for gin rummy. Isabel and her remaining guests would remove themselves to the library fire or the terrace spattered with shade and sun, and open their knitting bags. And so another afternoon would pass in gossip and laughter, to break up at five with flattering farewells, and reminders that tomorrow Jane expected everyone, and Thursday was the Marshall wedding at noon and cocktails at Mary's afterward.

Beautiful clothes and jewels for all these occasions; for whose benefit? Isabel didn't really care what these people thought of her. It was night; she couldn't sleep.

She got out of bed, paced the floor, writhing her shoulders as if she were trying to escape from the burden of her body. Dennis, Dennis, Dennis.

It wasn't possible—it couldn't be possible—that she had made a terrible mistake. It wasn't possible that her heart still belonged to Dennis, that every fiber of her being longed to return to him. She would not believe that the sight of him today, the sound of that deep pleasant voice, the grave expression of the worn, handsome face had stirred her to the very deeps of her being. It must be that she was tired—she was nervous. Luncheon with his mother, the long drive, responsibility for the children, all that had wearied her, soul and body.

But no, no, no, it was true! She was hungering for him, she was mad to get back to him, to have his arms about her. She belonged there, where he was. She had cheated herself—cheated herself to the right to welcome him this afternoon, the right to cling to him, her wet cheek against his, her incoherent laughter and tears telling him just what a joy it was—how right it was to have the man of the house home again!

Pussy and Catherine, too. "My God, my God," whispered Isabel, pacing to and fro, "how simple it is, when everything's right and normal! How simple for the girls! Just at home, with their own father and mother, but what a difference!"

They would be tucked up in their own little beds now, in the old familiar nursery. They would be free forever of the cloud that was Yelta, the bewilderment of being put aside, made secondary to the claim of a "new Daddy."

Well this was nonsense and would get her nowhere. She must get back into bed—so, and open her book—so, and begin to read herself sleepy. Sleep was a dark sweet mirage; there was no such thing.

Avery, who always slept as deep and as swiftly as a boy of ten, had a bottle of pills that he took whenever he boarded a train or was in any other way expecting a broken night. Isabel took one of these little pink capsules now; her principles were all against it, she hated to do it, but one had to sleep. Presently she was off into deep slumber; she had escaped for a few hours the thoughts that she simply could not bear. But they came back again with the morning and there was no end to them.

Two days later she had a letter from Dennis's mother. Written in Mrs. Hardisty's firm large dashing hand, it seemed to bring echoes of her actual voice.

"Dennis and I are moving to Sausalito place as soon as Hing can get it ready; we all go over to see what's needed there tomorrow," wrote Mrs. Hardisty. "He will begin work at Marinship on the first, and if we could have the girls from the beginning of June it would be a great delight they looked so well and so pretty when they were here last week! Pussy always had been a conversational little thing, but it is wonderful to have little Catherine piping up in her turn, too. She has such a peppery quality that very much reminds me of my mother. I will meet you anywhere in San Francisco that is easiest for you; perhaps at the Francisca Club. Dennis has been resting and looks more like himself; Dr. West says a very simple operation will entirely—or almost entirely—restore the hand, and on the whole he is amazingly well."

Isabel wrote back that she would bring the girls herself to Sausalito; that would be simpler, suitcases and coats considered, than breaking the move. She gave Yelta a two-month holiday.

"Vill dey be bacck in de autumn, matam?"

TRENTON

Probably Four To Seek Mayor's Chair this Year

Trenton — The regular bi-monthly meeting of the Evening Auxiliary of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was held on Thursday evening last at the home of the Misses Barker, 73 Leopold Street. There was an excellent turnout and a number of new members. Final plans were made for the Harvest tea and sale to be held in the Sunday School rooms on Friday, October 4th. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. (Rev.) R. C. MacLean, 52 Marmora St.

Although civic nominations in Trenton are nearly two months away, there are rumors of impending battles at the polls for both mayor and council. It is understood that at least three members of the present council will seek the mayor's chair Councillors Norman Banfield, Victor Ryan and Ross Burtt, and, of course, Mayor Harry Cory, is expected to again toss his hat in the ring. "Those in the know," have gone as far as to say that there will be a dark horse loom up on the election horizon just about nomination time. It is further added there will be a big scramble for council seats.

The Trenton Rotary Club will hold an auction sale on Saturday, October 12th on the used car lot on Elgin Street, opposite Weaver's Store, to raise funds for crippled children. Citizens are asked to donate and help in this humanitarian effort in which Trenton Rotary Club has long been interested. The club has taken this method to raise funds owing to the decision not to operate games of chance on which a ban has been placed.

To Launch Campaign

With an objective of $150,000 the Board of Directors of the Trenton Memorial Hospital have decided to launch a campaign, opening on October 14th and continuing until the end of the month. The drive will be carried on in Trenton and adjoining townships who will benefit from the erection of a modern hospital in Trenton. Reeves of Murray and Sidney have expressed interest in the hospital project. General chairman of the campaign will be Kenneth J. Couch, president of the Chamber of Commerce, who will be surrounded by a band of capable and willing workers. The organizer will be Norman Matthews, vice-president of Mailways, direct mail advertising, and one who has headed important financial drives in Toronto. Mr. Matthews was organizer and director of the Sick Children's Hospital campaign, Toronto Rotary Club Crippled Children's Fund, a recent very successful hospital campaign in Winchester, Ontario and several others. He also did outstanding work in connection with Canada's Victory Loan drives.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was reeding a thin green book, saying to ma, This is really a remarkable little book, I wouldn't be sérprised if it revilutioned my whole life.

You've been revilutioning your life about once a month ever since I've known you, for land sakes, ma said. What book is it? she said, and pop said, It's called Inertia, the Enemy of Time.

Goodness, such a title, ma said, and pop said, The man's really got something here. His big point is the importance of action, any action at all as long as it has some constructive value to it. You've always got time for action, but if you haven't got action you haven't got anything, not even time, because what you dont use you haven't really got, pop said.

I can suggest a wonderful line of action that'll get the révilution started right now, ma said. It would be a very constructive action if you got right up and sat right down again at your desk and dashed off a few nice lines to congradulate my sister Fanny on her berthday. Fanny invaribly remembers your berthdays with an unappriciated necktie, so it's the least you can do, so why dont you get ahead of inertia by doing it immeeditly? she said.

My dear, that's a good idea, but no idea is so good that it cant be improved, and that one is no exception, pop said. I'll shake the dust of inertia off my heels by going around to Peets bowling allies for the ideal combination of muscular and mental action, hurling the bowling bowls while I exchange brilliant persiflage with the other players. Meanwhile why dont you write your own letter to Fanny and I'll add a sparkling postscript to it when I get back. I'll even sign it personly, he said.

Oh you're just too wonderfill, ma said.

Being sourcastic.

VOLCANO IN ERUPTION

Rome, Sept. 28 — (Reuters) — Stromboli, the 3,040-foot volcano in the Lipari Islands north of Sicily, today was reported to be in eruption. A shower of ashes and cinders which has been falling for the last 36 hours now has considerably lessened, a report in the Rome paper Messaggero said, but lava still is flowing from the crater to the sea. Stromboli, always in a mild form of activity, is sometimes called the "Lighthouse of the Mediterranean."

Actual Verdicts Not Expected Until Tuesday

Nuernberg, Sept. 28 —(AP)— Mrs. Hermann Goering, one-time queen of the Nazi social set, and her small daughter Edda, emerged in tears today from the Nuernberg prison, where her husband and 20 other Hitler disciples await a verdict on war crimes charges.

Mrs. Goering, led by two other women, was weeping uncontrollably after having visited her husband.

It could not be learned immediately what had cracked the composure of Mrs. Goering, who had remained calm and unruffled throughout the long trial before the international military tribunal.

Although activities in the grim prison were veiled by a court-ordered news blackout, it was learned that the visiting hours for the wives of the defendants had been lengthened.

Col. B. C. Andrus called for a four-power meeting to tighten security measures around the prison against any slip-up at the last minute.

A committee representing 200 correspondents of all nations will ask an audience with the justices of the international military tribunal today to seek a reversal of the latter's decree barring photographers from the court room during the sentencing of 22 Nazi leaders.

It is believed that the tribunal will take two days — Monday and Tuesday — to hand down its decisions in the 10-months-old trial. The actual verdicts are not expected to be read until Tuesday afternoon.

Moira

Moira.— On Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Manly McDonald, noted Canadian artist, visited Moira United Church and with the assistance of Mr. James Vanderwater and Mr. Wesley Farrell gave the picture of the Good Shepherd, which adorns the front wall of the church, a much needed cleaning. This kindly and gratuitous service is much appreciated as the picture, a particularly fine one painted some thirty years ago by the late Mr. Fritzen, is now again giving much pleasure, particularly to the children who for the first time realize its beauty.

Mrs. J. Farrell spent a few days last week with Mrs. J. Forrester, Tweed.

Last Sunday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Mullett entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Warren, Windsor. Guests were present from Enterprise, Frazerville, Windsor, Actinolite and Perth.

A number from Moira attended the Anniversary Services at West Huntingdon to hear their former pastor, the Rev. W. H. Truscott.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Vanderwater, Billie and Lily Dunlay, attended the Vanderwater-Dixon wedding in Belleville last Tuesday.

Mrs. Peter McInroy, of West Huntingdon, is spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Angus Mumby.

Mrs. V. Clark, of Bethel, who has been ill is recuperating at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Emerson.

On Monday night, Messrs. M. Simmons, W. Goodkey and John Spence were fortunate enough to escape without injury when the truck in which they were transporting two horses, was forced off the road by a careless motorist, and turned over near Rossmore.

W.A. Dinner Meeting

Mrs. George Foster was hostess for the September dinner and meeting of Moira W.A. The President, Mrs. John Farrell, took charge of the meeting with the following program. An opening hymn followed with prayer by Mr. Stewart and Scripture Lesson read by Mrs. G. Foster. Preparations were made for the anniversary services to be held on Sunday. Reading by Miss Bessie Holbert, a solo rendered by Mrs. Angus Mumby, a reading, "Hit or Miss" by Mrs. W. Farrell, a piano solo by Mrs. Arthur Emerson and a short address on "Truth", prepared by Mrs. G. Thompson and read by Mrs. W. McInroy, completed the program. The Mizpah benediction closed the meeting.

Canada likes it!

This is a picture of the Monarch—graceful newcomer to the medium price field. It is a handsome, big, roomy car, built exclusively for Canadians by Ford of Canada. It is the first of a long line of distinguished Monarchs; a car we are proud to present to Canadian buyers.

Already, in its first year, Monarch has been enthusiastically welcomed for its gentle ride, smooth 8-cylinder power and tasteful interiors. Most enthusiastic are the "Monarch families" now enjoying the pride and pleasure which go with Monarch ownership.

The only thing wrong with this picture is that we can't make nearly enough Monarch Eights to fill the demand. One thing we are sure of—you'll be glad you waited to become one of Canada's "Monarch families".

22 NAZI LEADERS FACE PRISON OR GALLOWS

Charge Yugoslavs With Disregard Of Regulations

Protest by U. S. Refers to 'Mischievous Propaganda'

Washington, Sept. 30. (AP)—The United States Government, in a formal protest today, accused Yugoslavia of "disregard" of allied military regulations in Trieste and of spreading "mischievous propaganda."

In a note over the signature of Under-Secretary Will Clayton, the State Department acknowledged that authorities in Venezia Giulia had detained six Yugoslav soldiers Sept. 9 and said they were found carrying hand grenades concealed in their clothing contrary to regulations.

The soldiers, about whom the Yugoslavia government protested, have since been released.

The note, one of a number between the two governments on various incidents, informed Yugoslavia that the arrest had been investigated by an American Military Board of officers which found that the action was "justified".

It added the U.S. Government "is confident that if Yugoslav military personnel in Zone A (the Anglo-American Zone of Occupation) will evince an attitude of loyal co-operation toward their allied comrades in arms in Venezia Giulia, they will meet with a most full and friendly response on the part of American military personnel."

"At the same time," the note added, "this government desires the Yugoslav government to know that it resents the charges that allied military authorities took no steps in this matter and that they inspired a small 'fascist' press to give a small 'false' account of the incident, and that it rejects these charges as mischievous propaganda without any foundation in fact."

The arrested six soldiers were guarding U.N.R.R.A. supplies in Trieste near a point where a large explosion had just occurred. The note said the soldiers were searched and found to be carrying hand grenades in their clothing despite instructions that U.N.R.R.A. guards were not to be armed.

FREE NAVIGATION OF DANUBE RIVER IS GUARANTEED

Written into Peace Treaty With Romania And Overrides Strong Russian Objections

Paris, Sept. 30 — (CP) — The peace conference's Balkans economic commission today wrote broad guarantees for freedom of Danube navigation into the peace treaty with Romania, overriding strong Russian objections.

At the same time the commission inserted provisions for a Danubian conference of all Riparian states, together with the United States, Russia, Britain and France, within six months from the time the treaty takes effect, to draft definite traffic rules applicable to all traffic on Europe's greatest inland waterway.

The decision was taken by an eight-to-five vote on east-west lines, with one abstention. The decision still must be ratified by the full conference and the foreign ministers' council to have any effect. A Russian "no" could keep it from passing the foreign ministers' council.

The proposal adopted was a French amendment, strongly backed by the United States and Britain. Russia's delegate had insisted no mention of the Danube should be made in the treaty. The decision was foreshadowed when the commission voted nine to 5 against the Soviet proposal. The French amendment makes freedom of navigation on the Danube binding upon Romania.

Gladwyn Jebb of the British delegation called for urgent action to open the Danube, declaring that, according to reports received by Britain, the great river was rapidly silting up and might become unnavigable in a short time.

The commission was expected to write the same river clause into the treaties with Hungary and Bulgaria.

Yugoslav delegate Milos Rasovic inserted in the record that all riparian states represented here — Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and the Ukraine — had voted against the proposal. White Russia and the Soviet Union were the other two dissenters.

The commission also adopted an article authorizing Allied powers to seize Romanian property within their borders, after approving an Australian amendment exempting artistic and literary rights from confiscation.

The military commission, meanwhile, adopted the military limitations sections of the treaties with Hungary and Finland, thus virtually winding up its work. The commission has only to define the terms "demilitarized" and "completely demilitarized" as they appear in the Italian treaty, before taking up its final report to the plenary session.

Army Limited to 65,000.

Hungary was limited to an army of 65,000 and an air force of 5,000 with 70 combat craft and 20 trainers and was forbidden to possess or construct self-propelled or guided missiles or submarines. The prohibition against atomic research written into the other treaties also was adopted.

Finland was limited to an army of 34,000 a navy of 4,500 men and 10,000 tons and air force of 3,000 men and 60 craft.

Before the Balkan economic commission could vote on the French proposal on Danube navigation, Soviet delegate V. S. Gerachenko protested the wording, which he said in the Russian text mentioned Britain, France and the United States as "other" riparian countries.

Commission Chairman Josef Korbel of Czechoslovakia sought a vote on the French version of the text, which he said was worded correctly, but Yugoslavia objected and the ballot was deferred.

Two Floors Collapse In Woodstock Plant

Woodstock, Sept. 30 (CP) — Two floors of a factory on Mill Street owned by the Wood Mosaic collapsed Saturday. The portion of the building affected was being used for storage by the Ralston Purina Co. The building was heard creaking in a section of one wing and about 40 minutes later the third and second floors collapsed.

A party of workmen brought in to shift the weight from the straining floor were ordered out of the building ten minutes before the cave-in. No one was injured.

Crown Asks Adjournment

Cobourg, Sept. 30 — (CP) — The Crown today requested an adjournment to Oct. 22 of the drunk driving and dangerous driving charges against Judge J. C. M. German in Cobourg. The court was informed that Magistrate R. Menzies of London would hear the case and the Crown prosecutor would be F. E. D. Walsh of Brantford.

'Too Much Pessimism, Too Much Discounting Progress'—Eisenhower

Berlin, Sept. 30 — (AP)—Gen. Eisenhower, United States Chief-of-staff, back in Berlin where the four big powers are co-operating in running occupied Germany, said today that there was "too much pessimism in the world about international relations and too much discounting of progress that is being made."

"We have evidence here," he told a press conference, "that international co-operation is not a dead issue in the world, but something that is growing and will continue to grow."

(Lt.-Gen. John C. H. Lee, United States commander in the Mediterranean theatre, told newspapermen yesterday the chief-of-staff had abandoned plans for visiting Austria and then Italy on his trip. The plans had called for Gen. Eisenhower to go to Vienna Oct. 15.)

Gen. Eisenhower said he had not definitely decided to cancel the proposed visits, but that "I doubt I'll be able to visit all the places I want to "because of prior commitments in Britain.

Speaking of the world situation, he said:

"After all, the world has just completed the greatest global war in history. Whole economies have been disrupted. People have been worried about the future, about their own personal futures. Possible only a few leaders in the world are thinking clearly.

"Yet I come back here and hear that the Allied Control Council is still meeting amicably. It is not in a tomcat and bulldog atmosphere, but is honestly trying to do a good job. That is a very encouraging sign, amid all this pessimistic talk.

"So I think we can look forward to the future with more optimism than is reflected in our more pessimistic statements at home.

"We should not despair. Every intelligent man in the world knows that civilization cannot stand another war. I personally think we are making progress in the other direction and that every fighting soldier feels that, by education, we are progressing toward a point where men of my profession will be permanently out of a job."

GENERAL STAFF, HIGH COMMAND ARE ACQUITTED

Germany's Generals Declared Disgrace to "Honorable Profession" of Soldiering

Nuernberg, Sept. 30 —(AP)—The International Military Tribunal today branded Germany's generals a disgrace to the "honorable profession" of soldiering but held that the general staff and high command were not criminal as units.

The tribunal convicted the Leadership Corps (the Nazi leadership system), the S. S. (Elite Guard), the S.D. (a spy department) and the Gestapo (secret police) but "declined" to rule on the general staff and high command, the Reich cabinet and the S. A. (Brownshirts) — in effect acquitting them.

The court emphasized, however that no individual involved in a crime regardless of the acquittal of his organization could escape punishment because of that acquittal.

The organizations found guilty represent perhaps 1,000,000 persons down to the Nazi block leader who terrorized his neighbors, the S.S. troops now behind barbed wire and the guards who performed hideous tasks at Hitler's slave camps.

Those members who knew what their organizations were doing, the court contended, were convicted automatically. Those who quit such organizations before the invasion of Poland also were acquitted.

SAVINGS BONDS TO RUN FOR 10 YEARS AT 2.75 PER CENT

Purchases of New Issue Will be Limited to $2,000

Ottawa, Sept. 30 — (CP) — Terms of the new Canada Savings Bonds which go on sale Oct. 15 were announced today by Finance Minister Ilsley, who disclosed the new issue will bear 2.75 per cent interest by annual coupon and run for a 10-year term.

Main purpose of the bonds—a peacetime version of the Victory Bonds — is to provide millions of Canadians who learned to save in war years with a convenient way to continue this kind of saving. A finance department survey has shown that 82 per cent of Canadians who bought bonds during the war want to keep on saving by a similar plan.

Since the accent is on individual saving, purchases are limited to $2,000 and the bonds will be registered, non-transferable and non-assignable. However, they may be cashed at any chartered bank at any time at their full face value plus the 2.75 per cent interest.

No Public Canvass

Adherents of the monthly savings plan and the payroll savinks plan followed in the purchase of Victory Bonds will be able to arrange their purchases in the same way. However, no salesmen will canvass the general public.

The bonds will be dated Nov. 1, 1946 and mature Nov. 1, 1956. Denominations will be $50, $100, $500 and $1,000, and they may be purchased from banks, authorized investment dealers, stock brokers, trust or loan companies, or thru employers on the payroll savings plan.

U. S. Naval Forces in Mediterranean To Help Carry Out Foreign Policy

—Forrestal.

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

Washington, Sept. 30 (AP) — Navy Secretary Forrestal declared today that United States naval forces are in the Mediterranean to help carry out American foreign policy.

And they will be there for some time to come, the cabinet officer made plain in an unusual policy statement.

Simultaneously, it was learned that when the aircraft carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt is withdrawn from the troubled sea it will be promptly replaced by another flat-top. Previous emphasis on the F.D.R.'s Mediterranean cruise has been on the "good will" theme.

Mr. Forrestal's policy declaration was released as the United States government (1) indicated full backing to Turkey in that country's resistance to Russian demands on the Dardanelles, (2) studied means to aid the present Greek government in its troubles with Russian-supported neighbors and (3) hoped uncertainty for a peaceful settlement with Yugoslavia over the disposition of Trieste.

Persons familiar with the reasons behind the statement said it was drafted about a week ago and hence was not inspired by the fresh Dardanelles conflict or other current controversies.

However, it gave foreign governments one of the simplest statements of the reasons and purposes underlying the presence of American warships in the Mediterranean to be made since the end of the war.

Hess Swaying From Side to Side Taken From Dock

Nuernberg, Sept. 30 (Reuters) —Rudolf Hess, Hitler's deputy who flew to Britain in 1941 to try to make peace, was removed from the Neurnberg dock shortly after the tribunal resumed its afternoon session. He was swaying from side to side and obviously was ill.

Goering, Hitler's Luftwaffe Chief and No. 1 on the list of indicted Nazis, was pale as he sat under the glare of arc lamps and watched through dark glasses as the judges read their statements.

Earlier Hess had sat glumly scratching what appeared to be notes on a slip of paper. He was the only one of the defendants not listening through headphones to the judges' statement.

Fritz Sauckel, Nazi Labor chief, fidgeted in his seat.

The prisoners talked animatedly after the lunch recess.

SETTLEMENT PLAN OF STEEL STRIKE BEING CONSIDERED

Union Officials Will Recommend Terms Agreed Upon By The Conference

Toronto, Sept. 30 (CP)—Results of balloting on proposals to end the 11-weeks-old basic steel strike will not be announced until all Locals concerned in Hamilton, Saut Ste. Marie, and Sydney, N.S., have voted, officials of the United Steelworkers of America (C.I.O.) said as 15,000 striking steelworkers prepared to consider the settlement plan.

"The terms will be recommended by the National Committee (of the union) and by myself and I have no doubt that they will be acceptable to the union," said its Director C. H. Millard. "But until they have been made known to the local union, they cannot be released."

Vote on Tuesday

Voting would not be completed until late Tuesday or Wednesday. The union struck July 15 for a 40-hour week and a minimum weekly wage of $33.60.

"There is always the danger that the results of a vote in one area would influence the voting in another area," Mr. Millard said when announcing the balloting plans.

F. B. Kilbourn, government steel controller, announced late Saturday that the National Negotiating Committee of the Union had accepted the latest proposed plan of settlement and had submitted it to striking locals for ratifications. He gave no details of its contents.

Alberta Govt's 'Bill of Rights' Tested in Court

Edmonton, Sept. 30. (CP)—The Alberta government's "Bill of Rights" went before the Appellate Division of the Province's Supreme Court today for its first test of validity.

The Bill, a measure by which the Social Credit government could legally license banks and credit institutions, issue Alberta credit certificates and pay to Albertans Social Security pensions, medical, educational and other benefits, is being heard by five judges, headed by Chief Justice Horace Harvey.

The measure, officially termed an act respecting the rights of Alberta citizens, was taken before the court by the Social Credit government itself to test its legality before making it law.

The Social Credit government promised to take this action when the Bill was passed at the last session of the legislature.

Should the bill be ruled ultra vires in its first test, Attorney General Lucien Maynard, who is handling the case for the province has said that successive appeals will be carried to the Supreme Court of Canada and to the Privy Council if necessary.

Submissions against the Bill's validity later are to be made by George Steer on behalf of the Dominion Government and E. J. Chambers, Calgary, who will represent the Canadian Bankers Association.

One of the main purposes of the Act is to provide a Social Security pension of not less than $600 a year for every unemployed citizens from 19 to 60 years of age and to those of 60 or more who have retired.

Nine Fatalities During Weekend

(By The Canadian Press)

Lowest weekend fatality toll—nine—in several months was shown in Eastern Canada today. Three died as a result of head injuries, two were killed in shooting accidents, two in highway mishaps, one electrocuted and one drowned.

At Windsor, Gilbert Cavanaugh, 58, died in hospital Saturday after he was found unconscious on a street corner. It was believed he was beaten and robbed. Christopher Gerber 42, was killed Saturday at Toronto when a construction shovel slipped from its crane and pinned his head against the tractor.

Donald Stevenson, 42, taken to hospital when members of his family were unable to awaken him, died without regaining consiousness. An autopsy revealed he had suffered a fractured skull.

The two persons killed in highway accidents were Roy Barrie, in an Orillia hospital from injuries suffered when the ambulance and Mrs. Catherine Mair, 73, struck by a street car in Toronto suburb.

Ronald Robertson, 17, of Toronto, died shortly after he was struck by a ricocheting bullet. He and two companions had been engaging in target practice. William Gulewich, 19, of Beamsville, was killed Saturday night while crawling under a chicken coop to shoot a skunk. His rifle discharged and he was struck in the heart by a bullet.

At Charlottetown, Gordon Poole, former police constable, was electrocuted when he stepped on a high tension wire during a $50,000 laundry fire.

The drowning victim was Richard Mansell, 23, of Toronto. He fell overboard in a sailboat four miles off shore.

Final Verdicts, Sentences Will Be Delivered Tuesday

By WES GALLAGHER

Nuernberg, Sept. 30 —(AP)— The International Military Tribunal ruled today for the first time in history that conspiracy to commit aggressive war "is a supreme crime," indicating imprisonment or the gallows for the 22 former leaders of Nazi Germany.

In a monumental verdict, the German General Staff and High Command and the Reich cabinet were acquitted of charges that they were criminal organizations. "Certain groups" of the Leadership Corps, the S.S. or Elite Guard, the S.D. (a department which operated a spy system) and the Gestapo were convicted.

The first part of the 100,000-word verdict by judges of Britain, the United States, Russia and France strongly indicated that Hermann Goering, Rudolf Hess, Joachim von Ribbentrop and the other defendants — politicians, diplomats, military leaders, financiers and party functionaries — would be convicted on one or more of the four counts in the indictment.

The court indicated, however, that some of the lesser defendants might not be sentenced on the part of the indictment charging a conspiracy to commit aggressive war.

"The tribunal has decided that certain of the defendants planned and waged war against 12 nations and were therefore guilty of this series of crimes," it said.

Evidence Overwhelming

All defendants are charged with two or more counts and most with three or four under the tribunal charter.

A 5,000-word summary of the judgment, rendered after 10 months of a trial such as the world had never seen before, indicated that smaller Nazi party functionaries who might not have been sufficiently important to participate in the main conspiracies would be caught in other counts of the indictment. The court said evidence was "overwhelming."

The demeanor of the men listening to their fate generally was grim. Goering and Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel both indicated they believed themselves doomed to death. Hjalmar Schacht, former wizard of German finance, sat aside from the other defendants with a pained expression on his face. Hess rolled back and forth in his seat with stomach cramps and had to be taken from the rigidly guarded courtroom.

Final verdicts and sentences will be delivered tomorrow when the tribunal concludes the reading of its judgment.

Ex-Soldier Cop Would-be Ruler Of Negroes is Hunted in Jamaica

Moore Town, Jamaica, Sept. 30 (CP Cable)—Up in the Blue Mountains of Eastern Jamaica police seek a bold ex-soldier-policeman who calls himself General Quacco.

The notorious Quacco, who set himself up as uncrowned ruler of about 1,000 Negroes living in the Maroon community of this town on the Rio Grande, has been the object of police search since he left last week when the Jamaican government sent police to remove him from his self-made office.

Since then this district has been in a turmoil, reeling from the effects of Quacco's radical changes.

All was quiet until he came to town several weeks ago and took over leadership of the Maroon colony, proceeding to set up drastic reforms. His first act was to abolish taxes being paid to the government. Instead every Maroon would pay one shilling per week towards the upkeep of General Quacco.

He also issued instructions that all products including foodstuffs, livestock and lumber be brought to him.

The Maroons, descendants of Spanish slaves who fled to the mountains when the British invaded Jamaica in the 17th century, apparently took a liking to their new king despite the fact he ruled with a will which was reminiscent of the stern kings of the middle ages.

He instituted his own court of justice, fined offenders and had some flogged.

It was when he started to seize lands in the adjoining district belongong to non-Maroons that the government's official ire was aroused.

Warrants were issued for the arrest of Quacco and his two leading henchmen.

But when police came to get the "General," the Maroons sounded a call to arms by blowing a squeaky trumpet call on a ram's horn. A force 500 strong was rapidly assembled and police were forced to a strategic retreat.

Quacco was indignant at the intrusion of police in his colony and promptly telegraphed the Governor of Jamaica asking for assistance to fight "rebels" who were attacking his domain.

The government struck again with a squad of 40 armed police and drove Quacco and his henchmen to the hills. One was caught later, but the others are still at large.

The Vermillion was built in Vancouver in 1942 and is operated by the Counties Ships Management Company, Limited, of London, for the Ministry of War Transport.

Duck Hunting Best Since Before the War

"This year," said the veteran hunter gazing appreciatively at a fine bag of blacks, "is the best hunting year since before the war."

"Not in six or seven years have the blacks and teal as well as other varieties been so numerous as they are at the present," he went on.

"The reason, in my opinion," he said, "is partly due to the absence of aicraft. Due to the war a number of bombing courses were laid out in various parts of the district and were more or less responsible for the scarcity of ducks. Now that they have gone, the ducks are coming back to their old haunts and feeding grounds."

"Then in addition," the hunter said, "the water this year is much lower and food is more or less plentiful."

He had been in several parts of the district hunting, and in each cese the story was the same. The ducks were more numerous and consequently bags will be much bigger this year.

Mr. Smith was born in "Chuckory Hill" well-known Prince Edward County landmark, 1 1-2 miles south of Picton while Mrs. Smith, the former Katherine Brown, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Brown first saw light of day on the Glenora Road, three and one-half miles south of the county town.

They were married in Kingston 67 years ago Tuesday and immediately took up residence in their native county.

Janet Fashion Shop Presents Latest Styles in Ultra Modern Setting

Striking a new and ultra-modern note in ladies' wear fashion shops in Belleville, the Janet Fashion Shop, 298 Front Street, which will have its official opening on Tuesday, will present to its prospective customers the very latest in well-appointed surroundings and in shopping convenience.

Especially striking will be the attractiveness of the recessed shop entrance which is altogether different from anything of its nature previously seen in the city.

To the right of the centre entrance of the shop is the attractively curved show window which sets off to fullest advantage the various models To the left of the entrance is a solid wall of plate glass mirror which gives an impressive suggestion of spaciousness. The entrance itself is panelled in armor plate glass with the door of the same material, thus affording an unobstructed view into the store. Indirect lighting and colored spot lights add to the effectiveness. The front itself, apart from the show window and mirrors is done in vitrolite.

In keeping with the general ultra modern scheme of the show window entrance, the inside of the store is fitted with modern show cases finished in natural wood. Here quality fashions are displayed to their fullest advantage in modern surroundings. The store is lighted with fluorescent lighting fixtures. Store personnel has been selected with a view toward courtesy.

The new store will be operated jointly by J. Salz, city, and Mike Coston, formerly of Montreal.

Combined Living Quarters, Stand And 'Gas' Station Destroyed by Fire

Fire of an undetermined origin early Sunday morning completely destroyed the combined living quarters, hot dog stand and Imperial gasoline service station operated by William A. Hall, Trent Road, one half mile west of the Ontario School for the Deaf.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall were away on a brief holdiay at the time the fire commenced, it was reported, the blaze not being discovered in the small one storey frame structure until it was impossible to save the building.

Members of the Belleville Fire Department under Fire Chief Lynch answered the alarm with the city pumper but in the words of the fire chief the building was a "roaring furnace" when the equipment arrived on the scene and efforts were concentrated on saving the near-by overnight cabins. These were pushed out of the way by willing volunteers.

Household equipment owned by the Hall family was a complete loss as result of the blaze, however, and for a time it was thought that gasoline left in the visual glass top type gasoline pumps might cause an explosion. Before the pumps got too hot the gasoline was drained into the underground tanks.

Canada's Lumber Needed in Canada

There will be general commendation of the city council committee's action on Thursday night approving a resolution by the Belleville Trades and Labor Council asking the federal government be petitioned to consider the percentage of lumber and other building materials being exported and if possible reduce this percentage.

With the dearth of lumber in Canada for housing projects it can be wondered that the government would permit any but a small amount being exported. Veterans who performed such a valiant part in the last war should be protected in every possible way in their desire to build new homes for themselves. They are the ones who should have the first priority on building supplies and there is no question but that thousands of them are living in crowded conditions or unsuitable places of residence.

First thought should be given to those who live in the country which produces the raw materials and lumber is one of our most plentiful assets of national wealth. There are, of course, other contributing factors to the lumber scarcity but exports should certainly be one of the least of these.

Canada Savings Bonds a Good Investment

The announcement by the Minister of Finance of the Canada Savings Bond Plan as a safe way for investing personal savings is one that deserves consideration by Canadians. The plan succeeds the War Savings Certificates method which has been in use almost since the last war began.

Millions of Canadians learned the savings habit by buying Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates and a recent survey showed that eighty-two per cent of them want to keep on saving by a similar plan. The new plan is a convenient way to continue this kind of saving and investment in peacetime, and at the same time provides the safest type of saving those extra dollars that can so easily slip away with little gained in return.

The Bonds can be purchased through banks and investment firms or by the relatively painless way of Payroll Savings Plan. The Bonds can be bought in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and $1,000.

The interest rate of 2¾% bears out the forecast made by the Minister of Finance last June that terms would be more favorable than those of other comparable investments at the time of issue. The fact that the Canada Savings Bond is backed by the resources of the Dominion of Canada makes it the safest of all investments, and comparison can only properly be made with other Dominion of Canada issues. A useful comparison in respect to yield is found in the 3% Dominion of Canada bonds maturing in 1959 and callable in 1956. The theoretical yield on these securities currently stands at approximately 2.43%. Thus the yield on Canada Savings Bonds of 2.75%, plus the feature of redemption on demand at any bank at 100%, makes the new security more attractive than any similar investment available today.

It is to be noted there will be no general canvass as there was for the several Victory Loan campaigns. For this reason Canadians, especially in outlying areas, will have to assume a new responsibility for their own purchase. In this sense, the launching campaign will be a measure of the willingness and ability of the Canadian people to act in their own interests.

Pillow Shams

Among the "refinements" of living in a past generation which have disappeared are pillow shams. At least, it is a long time since we have seen these stiffly starched superfluities.

Perhaps there are some young folk who do not even know what the term pillow sham means. For their edification, they were squares of linen which were laid over the pillows after a bed was made up for the day. Usually, they were embroidered, some rather elaborately. We have a vivid recollection of one pair which sought to teach a moral lesson says Windsor Star.

On one was embroidered the picture of a sleeping girl, doubtless supposed to be beautiful, and the message: "I slept and dreamt that life was beauty." The other showed the same young woman awake and looking out at a rising sun, and the rhyming second line of the instructive little couplet: "I woke and found that life was duty." How inspiring!

Pillow shams were always, to us, a mere annoyance, however. The problem was what to do with the things when one wanted to go to bed. The best solution we found was to stand them up against the will. This is no exaggeration, because they were always so stiffly starched that they would stand alone.

They must have been a sore trial to a housewife. They meant extra work every time the bed was made up, and the laundering problem was undoubtedly a heavy one. The things had be kept immaculate or they looked terrible.

They apparently have gone the way of all annoyances in the path of the simpler life. They have entered the limbo to which also has been relegated the "bolster," usually a length of stovepipe tastefully covered with satin, which had to be placed under the pillows to keep them decorously upright.

Thoughtless Filthy Language

In fining a man $550 on a second charge of drunkenness at Brantford the other day, the presiding magistrate expressed the wish that he could have a record of the accused's language during the time he was in custody so that he could play it back to him. "You have a very foul mouth and it might cure you," the magistrate commented.

Apparently the magistrate was of the opinion that the accused did not realize just what filth was rolling so readily from his mouth. So it would seem in the case of many people, mostly men. There are those who swear almost continuously. In many cases it is the result of an inadequent vocabulary. In others it is the result of an inferior complex, the cuss words being a sort of bravado to hide the feeling of inferiority. In a great many cases the perpetrator would be astonished if he were confronted with a word by word repeat of his abuses.

—Owen Sound Sun-Times.

PRIDE'S SECOND FALL

A child that's once burned will not go near the fire.
Prize fighters knocked out from the ring soon retire.
From one sad experience most people learn.
Where loss has been met, seldom one will return;
But I am the stubbornest mule among men,
And the barber from Bad Axe has trimmed me again!

My father once said, fearing wisdom I'd lack,
"If somebody beats you don't ever go back.
Remember my counsel, you'll find it is true:
Once taken by someone who's sharper than you,
Beware him thereafter!" Now, sadly I pen:
The barber from Bad Axe has clipped me again.

I saw, when we met, the old glint in his eye,
But somehow his challenge I couldn't pass by.
I felt, when I asked of his golf, 'twas a trick
When he said: "I've not played the game much. I've been sick."
So, forgetting my father, I took him on then;
And the barber from Bad Axe has singed me again.

I know if my father could learn what I've done,
He'd grieve to have fathered so foolish a son.
But I thought I could square what has been an old score,
So I covered his wager and played him once more.
He'd been sick all the year, but he took me for "ten."
Now the barber from Bad Axe has nicked me again.

Looking Ahead in Ottawa

(By the Ottawa Staff of the Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Sept. 30. (CP)— If plans now being studied are put into effect, Canadian servicemen who built associations in the United Kingdom during their long stay may be able to return there permanently and still receive their post-discharge benefits.

What's more, the same may hold true of thousands of British aircrews who were impressed by the Dominion during their training here and, before leaving made a mental note to return and settle here.

Tentative discussions as to how the exchange might be arranged cropped up in London recently when Walter S. Woods, Deputy Veterans' Affairs Minister, visited D.V.A.'s London office. A beginning on actual arrangements for such a program, however, awaits considerable further study.

Handling of gratuities might be worked out on an exchange basis, with Canada paying U.K. servicemen on the Canadian scale of gratuities and Britain paying Canadian servicemen on the British scale, which is somewhat less generous than Canada's and does not include any arrangemenst for a land grant under the Veterans' Land Act.

On the other hand, each country might arrange to take as many of the other's servicemen as wished to come, with a levelling of any difference in costs.

Trade Trends

Canada expects to move next Spring to the full realizaton of her position as a world trading nation when she concludes full-dress trade treaties with the 18 other countries invited to attend the World Trade Conference.

Since the days before the Statute of Westminster, when she adhered closely to British trade treaties with foreign lands, Canada has broadened out in her commercial relations with other lands. The treaties now in prospect will bring her to the peak of her trading position.

Appointments

Two appointments to the tariff board are expected in the coming months to have the board prepared to function along peacetime lines once the tariff picture has been clarified.

Before the war, the board investigated for the finance minister the requirements of any industry for tariff protection. It also decided on appeals against tariff rulings made by officials of national revenue.

M. J. Campbell and Col. Charles Hebert made up the board when the war started Mr. Campbell retired and Col. Hebert was transferred to Washington to serve with the Canadian Embassy. Hector B. McKinnon was named chairman and W. J. Callaghan, director of Tariff Investigation, was named a temporary member.

The board made no further investigations but has continued hearing appeals.

Mr. McKinnon likely will continue as board chairman and Mr. Callaghan who has been acting on the board, in addition to his other duties, and without salary, may be made a permanent member. In that case the third member likely will be a French speaking Canadian.

The chairman's salary is $12,000 a year and the other two members each $10,000.

Farmers to Meet To Consider Offer Of Government

Saskatoon, Sept. 30 —(CP)— Heads of the striking United Farmers' of Canada and Alberta Farmers' Union will meet today to consider an offer by the Dominion Government to place their views before the Federal Agricultural Prices and Support Board.

The U.F.C., whose estimated 30,000 members are confined to Saskatchewan, and the A.F.U. have been on a farm delivery strike for more than three weeks. The farmers demand establishment of a fact-finding board to look into parity prices for farm costs and returns.

Last Wednesday, Agricultural Minister James G. Gardiner invited the strikers to present their views to the existing Federal Board. Officials of the A.F.U. indicated in Edmonton during the weekend that if the composition of the present board were altered to include representatives of farmers, labor, business and government, it might be acceptable.

Meanwhile, picketing of grain elevators, dairies and other agricultural organizations continued. Royal Canadian Mounted Police said in Edmonton last night 11 persons had been arrested, 20 summoned to court and warrants issued for five others following a cattle-crossing incident at Beaver Crossing, 170 miles north-east of the Alberta capital. About 200 farmer-pickets were involved. One cattle-buyer was injured and more than 200 cattle stampeded.

Seven other arrests occurred at Rochfort Bridge, 73 miles west of Edmonton.

Holidaying at his Lemberg, Sask., farm home, Agriculture Minister Gardiner told The Canadian Press yesterday that a speaking engagement at Portage La Prairie, Man, where a by-election will be held Oct. 21, made it impossible for him to accept an invitation from the U.F.C. to attend the Saskatoon meetings.

Ontario Liberals To Choose Leader In Easter Week

London, Ont, Sept 30. (CP) —Ontario Liberals will choose a leader at a convention in Toronto next Easter week. The management committee of the Ontario Liberal Association reached this decision Saturday at a meeting attended by delegates from practically every city in the province.

Delegates said that they expected Farquhar Oliver, Acting House Leader for the Party in the Legislature and member for South Grey, would be a candidate.

They said others considered in the running were Col. H. S. Hamilton, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.; A. St. Clair Gordon, former Provincial Treasurer and Liquor Commissioner; W. M. Benedickson, Liberal Member of Parliament for Kenora-Rainy River; Col. Don Lewis, Brockville; Col. Don Williams, Brantford; and Maj. Walter Harris, Liberal member of parliament for Grey-Bruce.

Kalgoorlie Pipes Water 350 Miles

Kalgoorlie, Australia, (CP)— This West Australia city of 12,000 inhabitants, built around the richest goldfield in Australia, has its water supply pumped through a pipeline 350 miles long from the Mundaring Reservoir near Perth, west of Kalgoorlie.

The pipeline is the longest in Australia, and the scheme the most outstanding water conservation project in the Commonwealth.

The goldfields city is dependent entirely upon the pipeline for water. It is just on the fringe of the most arid desert areas in Australia, and natural water sources are negligible. Rainfall averages only ten inches a year, and there are no rivers from which the city could draw water.

The pipeline provides Kalgoorlie with 5,000,000 gallons of water a day, pumped through eight stations, and delivered at a level of 1,290 feet above the reservoir. It is a steel pipeline with a diameter of 30 inches. The project cost nearly $20,000,000 to build.

HOW TO KEEP THE BABY COMFORTABLE

Young mother living in a basement apartment (which, being human, she thinks will be "damp" this winter) asks whether the baby should sleep with her on cold winter nights, or whether it would be better for the baby to sleep in his own crib.

In the first place a basement is no damper than an upper floor —provided there is no actual flooding or backflow or seepage of water into the place. The lower floor just gets less sunlight than upper floors get, in city apartment buildings. The more sunlight, daylight, skyline, whether the sun shines brightly or only through cloud, fog, smoke, the better for baby and everybody else. But for the baby's sake and for grampa's forget the dampness notion.

There are three good reasons why the baby should not sleep in the same bed with mother or anyone else. (1) That way the baby almost inevitably catches whatever communicable disease mother happens to have. (2) The baby may be smothered by the mother accidentally rolling upon the baby in sleep. (3) Neither mother nor baby can sleep as restfully together as alone.

A baby or very young child normally or naturally generates more heat and has more heat to dissipate than an older child or an adult, in proportion with the area of body surface. It is therefore easier for a baby to keep comfortably warm when the weather or room atmosphere is cold and more comfortably cool when the weather is hot or when the room atmosphere is overheated or when the room is poorly ventilated or when the bed covers are too heavy or too thick or when the baby's clothing is excessive.

For every baby that is not kept warm enough in cold weather there are thousands who are kept too warm for comfort and health, day and night, winter and summer.

Ideal for sleeping, in the summer season everywhere and in most heated dwellings throughout the winter, is just diaper, no other garment, and a light fluffy blanket as emergency cover against the chill of early morning.

Incidentally, try to get this fact fixed in your mind if you have the care of a baby. Everyday "exposure", as to drafts, chilly breezes, dampness, insufficient clothing for comfort or in fact any such experience short of sunburn, sunstroke, frostbite or freezing, never makes a baby or anyone else ill.

Here is the best test of whether the baby is dressed, covered or protected enough, in any circumstances: Feel of the baby's feet. If they feel warm, the baby is plenty warm and to put on more cover or clothing or to apply more warmth or heat when the baby is already warm enough is to rob the baby of comfort, make the baby peevish, restless and cross.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Did the United States remit its entire share of the Boxer indemnity?

After suppressing the Boxer uprising in 1900 the great powers —Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, Japan and the United States — imposed upon China an indemnity of $337,500,000.

The share allotted to the United States, about 7.3 percent of the total, was $24,440,778.81 and China gave the United States a bond for that amount.

This exceeded actual losses sustained by American citizens and the cost of maintaining American troops in China in connection with the Boxer disturbances.

In 1906 Arthur H. Smith, a Congregationalist missionary to China, who had been in the British legation during the Boxer siege, suggested to President Theodore Roosevelt that part of the American indemnity be remitted and allocated for educating Chinese youth.

Two years later, as a gesture of good will, the United States limited the total bond to $13,655,492.69, plus interest, remitted to China the remaining $10,785,286 and returned to China $1,175,835.64 already paid. The Chinese government, not to be outdone in graciousness, expressed appreciation by setting the money aside for educating Chinese students in the United States.

It is a common mistake to suppose that the United States relinquished its entire share of the Boxer indemnity.

Under international law and the agreement with the powers China had to pay the whole amount. The United States got around this by accepting each full installment and immediately returning part of it.

In 1924 the United States remitted to China all further payments of the funds for scientific and educational purposes. Later $1,469,284.43 already paid was returned to China. Administration of the fund was entrusted to a foundation composed of ten Chinese and five Americans.

Hundreds of Chinese students supported by the Boxer fund have been educated in America, and numerous institutions in China have been aided with money from this fund to enable students to prepare themselves for work in American institutions. Owing to internal and external disturbances China has been granted several moratoriums on the Boxer indemnity.

British Proposals Answered By Egyptian Premier

Alexandria, Sept. 30. (Reuters) —Premier Ismail Sidky Pasha Saturday handed Egypt's reply to the latest British proposals for a revision of the 1936 Anglo-Egyptian treaty to Lord Stansgate, head of the British Treaty Revision delegation, and Sir Ronald Ian Campbell, British Ambassador.

Well-informed quarters in Cairo believe that the reply amounts to a rejection of British proposals.

After studying the Egyptian note the British delegation, now consisting solely of Lord Stansgate and Sir Ronald Campbell, is expected to fly to London for consultations with Foreign Secretary Bevin.

What was described as the text of the Egyptian note was published Saturday in the Egyptian newspaper "Akhbar Al Jom".

Its main points were:

1. Evacuation: The Egyptian delegation insists that this should be completed in one year (not three as Britain suggests).

2. The threat of war clause: Egypt does not accept inclusion of this clause in the new treaty.

3. The Sudan: The Egyptian delegation proposes a special protocol engaging the two parties to begin immediately to establish a Sudan government "taking into consideration the interests of the Sudanese people and on the basis of a united Nile Valley under the Egyptian crown."

JERSEY SHOPS THRIVING ON LUXURY TRADE

British Tourists Flock to Buy up Articles Seldom Seen on Home Market

By NORMAN CRIBBENS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Jersey, Channel Islands. (CP) —Every week thousands of British holiday-makers return to austerity loaded with luxuries manufactured in Britain but not for sale in British stores.

The Channel Islands, being on Britain's export list, receive many fancy lines denied to Britons—until they visit Jersey or Guernsey. Then, as the vacation draws to a close, they stock up for the return home.

Every ship and plane leaving the islands for Weymouth, Southampton and Croydon Airport sees holiday folk carrying tins of English cigarets wrapped in cellophane, bottles of cognac whisky, gin and sometimes champagne, and smaller bottles containing choice perfumes.

The women frequently wear shoes bought in Jersey or Guernsey stores, of better quality and value for money than they can find at home. Hats, stockings and other apparel also get by the British customs as "articles worn".

Holidayers returning to Britain are allowed to take with them, tax-free, 200 cigarets purchased at half the price they pay at home and a limited amount of wine, spirit and perfume. Many cheerfully pay customs tax on long-desired luxuries. Many also do a little smuggling.

These holiday "importers" have to thank Britain's export policy for their good fortune. For ever since they were liberated, little more than a year ago, Britain has been pouring export goods into Jersey and Guernsey, helping the islands to regain prosperity while at the same time augmenting her much-needed revenues.

The many new cars seen in the island roads are all British export models sold considerably cheaper than in Britain because over here they are free from purchase tax.

Island industries, too, are getting back on their feet with the return of hundreds of skilled workers who escaped the invasion.

A large building in Jersey that was used as a hospital by the Germans now is a brewery, producing hundreds of gallons weekly. There is no beer shortage and it is sold at half the price obtained in Britain.

Eggs and butter are plentiful. So are lamb chops, steaks and beef. The islands are able to produce enough of these things for visitors with enough left over for themselves—and there are no queues for anything except tickets to theatres and sporting events.

Cabbies Taught Tricks of Trade

London, Sept. 30. (CP)—London's shortage of 1,600 taxi-drivers is being eased by ex-servicemen studying at the British Legion's Taxi-drivers' School in southwest London.

Only one of its kind in the London area, the school's capacity is 125 students. Before they are licensed all taxi-drivers must pass police examinations in taxi-driving technique and geographical knowledge.

"Cabbies" must know all squares, clubs, hospitals, main buildings, hotels, theatres, embassies, railway and police stations. They must know the shortest route between any two places within six miles, of Charing Cross railway station, which is approximately the centre of London.

"Another side of the training is the psychological factor," said Capt. W. F. G. Reeland, school secretary. "That is within police jurisdiction. Students' behavior is watched to see what attitude they would take to varying types of customers.

"Their service and civilian records are also checked in case of criminal conviction. You have to be almost an angel to drive a taxi nowadays."

U.N. Spotlight

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Sept. 27 —(CP)— Out at Lake Success in nearby Long Island a group of delegates from 18 countries are laboring over the beginnings of a program generally conceded as likely to contribute more to world peace than any other organ of the United Nations.

This is the United Nations Economic and Social Council, provisions for which were written into the charter at the San Francisco conference a year ago last spring with a great deal of aid from the Canadian delegates who attended.

Objectives of the Council are to help the world family of nations to co-ordinate their efforts towards attaining a higher standard of living for all peoples, to remove artificial barriers to commerce and international relations, establish health improving methods, control narcotics, and, immediately, to aid in rehabilitation of a war-weary world.

In a nutshell the purposes of this council are to bring about as far as possible removal of the conditions which create world wars.

Stable-mate of the Economic and Social Council is the powerful Security Council devoted to preventing incipient quarrels breaking into open warfare and to applying sanctions, by force if necessary, if an aggressor arises and takes the field.

Unfortunately the same cleavage of opinion is present in the Economic and Social Council as that which has made the Security Council a fighting ground for the Soviet and Soviet-controlled delegates and the remainder.

"The United Nations will succeed, and retain all its original members," a prominent delegate, veteran of the League of Nations, said, however. "It may take 15 years to get us all in harmony, but we will get there," he said. "The differences and argument are not nearly so threatening as when we were creating the League of Nations."

Canada, which lost out to Australia in the election of non-permanent members of the Security Council, is a member of the Economic and Security Council for a three-year term. Canada's delegate is youthful Paul Martin, secretary of state. He is bilingual and had experience with the League of Nations in Geneva before entering the House of Commons. He was chairman of the sub-committee which prepared in 2½ days the draft constitution of a proposed international refugee organization to care for the almost 1,000,000 displaced persons still maintained in European camps.

ENGLISH CHILDREN OFF ON SWISS VACATION

Children from Birmingham and Coventry, England, who have more than their share of the ordeals of war smile again as they leave London for a vacation in Switzerland. The children, 130 of them, were housed overnight in an air raid shelter in London. This shelter has been converted into a hostel for "stayovers" in the capital. The vacation was arranged under an agreement between the children's welfare section of the Swiss Red Cross and the British Ministry of Education.

62-Year-Old Woman Builds Own House

Mt. Vernon, Ky., (CP)—Mrs. Lee M. Cooper, 62-year-old widow of Billows, Rockcastle County, whipped the housing shortage, largely with her own hands.

She decided on a stone house, and not a little one, at that. Lack of funds didn't hinder her, but inability to get labor did. So Mrs. Cooper picked up stones from adjoining fields and the bluffs surrounding her house site and hauled them to the location herself—200 wagon loads of field stone.

Today there stands her accomplishment—a sturdy 14-room stone home in the little valley on the Rockcastle River midway between Somerset and London, Ky.

"I needed a house," said Mrs. Cooper, "and I meant to have one if I had to build it myself."

She doesn't lay claim to doing all the work, though she also dug most of the basement. She hired workers to lay the stone for the walls, to put on the roof, and to do some heavy finishing work. She did the rest. Her total cash outlay was about $2,000 and some observers have estimated the house is easily worth five times that much.

The Minister of Finance announces

A NEW BOND ISSUE FOR PEACETIME SAVINGS

Canadians are thrifty people. Their record in war financing will stand for many years to come.

Through six years, millions saved and invested in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates in a way no one thought possible. Many thousands learned the convenience of regular, systematic saving, whether in small monthly amounts or by larger cash investment. As a result they have accumulated substantial personal reserves with all that means in increased future security and satisfaction.

Because suggestions and requests have come to me from all parts of the country that facilities for this kind of saving be continued in peacetime, the Canada Savings Bond has been created.

The issue of War Savings Certificates and Stamps to the general public will be discontinued on September 30th, and final instalments on the last Victory Bond issue will have been completed in the near future. Canada Savings Bonds, therefore, will provide an opportune means for citizens to carry on their regular savings habits without interruption.

The general public should note that this time there will be fewer salesmen than in the case of Victory Bonds. Although the new Canada Savings Bonds will be sold through banks, authorized investment dealers, stock brokers and trust or loan companies, these agencies will not be able to approach every individual Canadian. This means that for the most part it will be left to Canadians to assume the responsibility for their own purchases of Canada Savings Bonds. If they wish to grasp this opportunity, they should act for themselves without delay.

Canada Savings Bonds are designed to be the finest investment available to the public today. I recommend them to you as a safe, profitable and convenient investment for personal savings.

I now announce the terms of the new Canada Savings Bonds, which will be offered commencing October 15th.

MINISTER OF FINANCE

WEDDINGS

LOWERY—WESSELS

In the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, Dundas St., on the afternoon of Sept. 21, a very pretty marriage ceremony was quietly solemnized with Rev. J. S. A. Spearman officiating, when the bride, Almeda Marie Wessels, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wessels, 44 Ponton Street, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Mr. Horace Alfred Lowery, 15 Murney Street.

Given in marriage by her father, gowned in a floor length dress of white satin with lace yoke, long sleeves, with three-quarter veil falling from a Queen Anne headdress, and carrying a bouquet of red roses, the bride entered the church to the strains of the Bridal Chorus played by Mrs. Emily Veley. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Evelyn Wessels, in a floor length gown of blue sheer, and carried pink carnations.

The groom was ably supported by his cousin, Mr. Reginald Spragett; the ushers being Messrs. Melton and Clayton Phillips.

During the signing of the register, Mrs. Ruth Millard, Trent Road, sang "O Perfect Love".

After the ceremony thirty guests attended a reception at the home of the bride's parents, the rooms being made effective in a color scheme of pink and blue. For the buffet luncheon the serviteurs were Miss Ruth Ross, and Mrs. Jean Wessels, a sister-in-law of the bride.

Later in the day the happy couple left for a honeymoon to Toronto and Peterborough, the bride travelling in a suit of brown with matching hat and accessories. Upon their return they will reside in Belleville.

Out-of-town guests were from Peterborough and Batawa.

Mother Charged With Murder in Drowning Of Two Children

Cleveland, Tex., Sept. 30 — (AP) — A 30-year-old mother today was charged with murder in connection with the drownings of her two children but, county officials said, she seemed unaware of the tragedy. Mrs. A. H. Brent, wife of a Shell Oil Company employee now in Venezuela, was charged with two counts of murder after the children, Linda, 3, and James, 18-months-old, were found submerged in a bathtub. At the jail, county officials reported Mrs. Brent to be hysterical. Jeff Cochran, county attorney, said "she still doesn't know that her children are dead." They were found by neighbors who heard screams from the Brent home. She was found sitting on the floor of the bathroom.

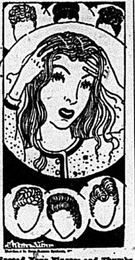
BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Beware of Dandruff It is a Menace

Like baldness, dandruff is a trouble of which the so-called stronger sex has almost a monopoly. The members of the universal sisterhood have enough beauty griefs without including those two afflictions. One doesn't have to look far to see the explanation. Women are better head-washers than men who frisk a bar of soap over their heads, stand under the shower, fancy that their hair is clean and well-rinsed. Women are more fastidious about keeping combs and brushes clean. At the first sign of epidermal debris, they get busy and clean up the premises. A fleck of dandruff on the glistening hairdo is a beauty danger, if not a crime.

Dandruff, a fungus growth, may not in itself cause falling hair. Nobody seems quite sure about that; some specialists say yes, some say no. But it is a perfect tenement for bacteria. It invites scalp infections, hence the need for overcoming it.



Spread Your Fingers and Thumbs Give Your Head a Rousing Massage

A simple routine treatment that can be given at home will often check this affliction. Twice a week, at night, apply hot mineral oil. Before doing this, give the hair a thorough brushing. Use a narrow brush, with firm bristles that do not buckle. Treat the hair a strand at a time, so the bristles will sweep over the scalp.

Vigorous brusring vitalizes the hair; the tugs of the brush have a stimulating effect upon the tiny blood streams in the papillae from which the hair shafts emerge. Brushing should be done daily, dandruff or no dandruff, because it removes surface dust, brings lustre to the growth.

To apply the oil evenly over the scalp surface, it is necessary to part the hair at various places, putting the oil along the partings. One can use a large medicine dropper, a small brush, or a pledget of cotton for the purpose. When the lubricant has been well-distributed, the scalp must be massaged to bring a glow. Spread out fingers and thumbs, give your head rousing massage. Move the flesh back and forth. Lift it and pinch it.

In the morning, have a thorough shampoo. Begin by rinsing with a strong current of fairly hot water, so as to remove as much of the oil as you can. You will need a bath spray for this purpose. The spray does better than the shower, being in close contact with the scalp. Apply melted soap three times, each soaping followed by a prolonged, warm rinsing. Few home-shampooers get the hair really clean.

TRIO AND TRUMPET THAT SURVIVED CRASH

THE NEW PRICE OF MILK

The new price increases announced by order No. 46-9 of the Ontario Milk Control Board, effective October 1st, 1946, were brought about due to the following circumstances:

1. Cancellation of the Federal Subsidy of approximately 1½c a quart to producers.
2. Approval by the Ontario Milk Control Board of an additional 1½c a quart to provide for increased costs, mainly production.

This increase in the retail price of milk to the consumer applies in all markets throughout Ontario, to all kinds of milk including special milk, chocolate milk, buttermilk, etc. Increases for the various units of milk will be at the rate of 3 cents per quart. Cream prices have been increased at the rate of approximately 2 cents per half pint.

Milk Tickets purchased at the price in effect prior to October 1st will have a value 3 cents less per quart than the October 1st price; cream tickets will have a value 2 cents less per half pint.

This means that it will be necessary for consumers using old tickets to pay an additional amount in cash along with each ticket, in order to bring the payment up to the new prices in effect on October 1st.

TRIBUNAL HOLDS

Reconciled as to Sentence

The reading of the judgment was 1½ hours under way, when Hermann Goering, once the No. 2 Nazi, virtually conceded that he was on the way to the gallows by telling defence lawyers:

"I did not expect that they would go through all this to kill us."

Most of the defendants appeared reconciled to the belief they would be condemned to death.

The tribunal rejected flatly the plea of some of the defendants that their acts had been committed under orders from Hitler.

"Hitler could not make aggressive war by himself; he had to have the co-operation of German military leaders, diplomats, and business," the judgment said. "With the knowledge of his aims, they gave their co-operation and made themselves party to the plan he had initiated. That they were assigned to their tasks by a dictator does not absolve them from their responsibility for their acts."

Hermann Goering and his 20 colleagues (Martin Bormann was tried in absentia) sat grim and silent as the court unfolded the long opinion, which is to be climaxed tomorrow by formal judgments against the surviving leaders of the Nazi regime and the sentencing.

Despite its acquittal of the 3 Nazi organizations, the tribunal warned that members of those groups still could be prosecuted for individual war crimes, and added that the evidence against some members of the high command and general staff was "clear and convincing."

Most of Them Smiled

Prosecution of the high command had been one of the most controversial points in the indictment.

A packed courtroom watched the defendants file in singly. Most of them were smiling when they entered, but soon lost their grins as Lord Justice Sir Geoffrey Lawrence of Great Britain, president of the tribunal, began reading the judgment.

Close to 100,000 words in the judgment was expected to occupy the court well into tomorrow, after which the defendants will be called in one by one to hear their fate.

All the defendants leaned forward listening intently, except Rudolf Hess, who sat without earphones and appeared to be writing something.

The justices, representing Britain, France, Russia and the United States, took turns reading the summary and reviewed the evidence presented during the long trial step by step.

"To initiate war is not only an international crime, it is the supreme crime," the court declared.

This was the basis of the court's findings, which included rulings that not one, but many conspiracies had been committed to wage war and that in waging war, crimes against humanity and war crimes had been committed.

Common To All

Of the four counts in the indictment only the first—that of having conspired in a common plan or conspiracy to commit the other three counts—is common to all the defendants. The other counts charged crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity.

In dealing with defence contentions by Goering and Grand Admiral Erich Raeder that they did not believe Hitler meant to resort to war, the tribunal said:

"But all that this means when examined is the belief that Germany's position would be so good and Germany's might so overwhelming that the territory desired could be obtained without fighting for it. . .if any doubts had existed in the minds of any of his hearers in November, 1937, after March, 1939, there could no longer be any question that Hitler was in deadly earnest in his decision to resort to war."

Dr. Alfred Thoma, defence council for Alfred Rosenberg, who was the Nazi Party's official philosopher, declared during a morning recess that he would appeal any sentence of his client to the Allied Control Council and added that if Rosenberg were sentenced to death he would ask that he be shot, instead of hanged or beheaded.

GENERAL STAFF

The verdict excludes Hitler's old Brownshirt S.A., which once had 4,000,000 members, from culpability. The tribunal held that the S.A. lost its significance after the purge of 1934 and became relatively unimportant.

Although it declined to hold guilty the notorious general staff, powerful in German politics since Bismarck's time, the court unleashed bitter criticism of the individual members, saying:

"They have been responsible in large measure for the miseries and suffering that have fallen on millions of men, women and children."

"They have been a disgrace to the honorable profession of arms," the ruling continued. "Without their military guidance, the aggressive ambitions of Hitler and his fellow Nazis would have been academic and sterile.

"Although they were not a group falling within the words of the charter, they were certainly a ruthless military caste. The contemporary German militarism flourished briefly with its recent ally, National Socialism, as well as or better than it had in the generations of the past."

Evidence of criminality against many members of the general staff and high command as individuals is clear and convincing," the verdict said, but the court was unable to find that the military as such came under the terms of the Charter setting up the trials.

A similar attitude was taken toward the Hitler Jugend (youth), which was not referred to in the verdict except to show the culpability of Baldur Von Schirach, who built it up.

In absolving the cabinet, the tribunal said that in the dictatorial Hitler set-up it was impotent after 1937.

The court stressed that nothing it said about the organizations absolved any individual members of liability to prosecution on their own account.

Responsible for Miseries

Some evidence of criminality against the general staff and high command is "clear and convincing," the court's summary said, adding in sharp language:

"They have been responsible in large measure for miseries and suffering that have fallen on millions. They have been a disgrace to the honorable profession of arms."

"The tribunal found certain groups of the leadership corps, the S. S. (Elite Guard), the S.D. (a department which operated a spy system) and the Gestapo to be criminal groups within the meaning of the charter."

Reds Ask Turkey For Discussions On Dardanelles

Moscow, Sept. 30 — (AP) — The foreign ministry disclosed today that Russia had asked Turkey to enter into direct unilateral discussions on the future control of the Dardanelles.

Under the Soviet proposal, such a two-power meeting would precede any formal conference involving nations signatory to the present nine-power Montreux convention under which the Straits are controlled.

Russia desires to share defence of the Straits with Turkey and to limit control of the Dardanelles to Black Sea powers only.

A demarche delivered in Ankara Tuesday and quoted in a Moscow office communique distributed in London today by Tass, Russia warned Turkey against 'taking military measures' in the Straits "jointly with some non Black Sea powers."

"This, of course, would run directly counter to the interest of the security of the Black Sea powers," the communique added.

SETTLEMENT PLAN

However, a Canadian Press Despatch from Ottawa reported a well-informed source as saying the steelworkers would be offered an increase of 10 cents an hour retroactive to April 1 and a further three cents an hour when work is resumed. It added that it was understood the Dominion subsidy to Dominion Steel and Coal Company at Sydney would be increased to meet the increase at the Cape Breton plant and that the five-cent differential between steel wages in Ontario and the Maritimes would b removed.

Some 3,050 striking steelworkers in Sault Ste. Marie meet tonight to decide whether to accept the new offer. Sydney strikers will meet tomorrow.

Sault and Sydney plants have been closed since the strike as have the Ontario Works and Canada works of the Steel Company of Canada in Hamilton. Stelco's main basic steel producer, Hamilton Works, remained in partial production with a working force estimated at 2,700 men who eat and sleep on plant property.

About 3,000 striking steelworkers in Hamilton are expected to meet tonight to hear a detained report on a strike settlement recommendations. They probably will vote tomorrow.

SHORTAGES DELAY GREAT BRITAIN'S HOUSING PROGRAM

More Than 1,000,000 Men at Work But Plans for 200,000 Homes in 1946 May Not be Fulfilled

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London —(CP)— Bunches of new homes are springing up like mushrooms all over Britain but the pace of construction is far too slow to satisfy the demands brought by six years of war.

Whole new communities of metal and concrete temporary houses have been set on bomb sites. Acres are covered by identical, flat-roofed dwellings that have a marked resemblance to oversize packing cases with doors and windows.

Elsewhere the traditional two-storey brick house is being built, principally by municipal authorities for cheap rental to families of modest income.

Since it took office a year ago the Labor government has faced a constant clamoring for a speed-up in the pace of building. Works Minister George Tomlinson has said 100,000 temporary and 100,000 permanent homes will be completed by the year-end, but the official housing figures suggest he will be disappointed.

Only 20,027 permanent dwellings were completed in England, Scotland and Wales between the end of the war and July 31 this year. The figure for temporaries is 40,425. In both categories the actual construcion is well below the pre-election promises of all major parties.

At the start delays were due primarily to shortage of labor in the construction industry. Now more than 1,000,000 men are at work at the beginning of the year.

Shortage of Materials

The problem now is a shortage of almost all building materials. The number employed in making materials such as bricks, electrical equipment and bathtubs is only about two-thirds the pre-war level while the number using the material is nearly up to 1939. Hundreds of houses could be finished and ready for occupancy if window frames drainpipes and other components were available.

Completion of temporary houses, made of prefabricated sections fastened together on top of concrete slabs, is taking about four months while permanent dwellings take anything up to eight months. While the pace of new buildings has been discouraging, much has been accomplished in the repair of homes damaged by German bombs and rockets. Up to July 31, 620,000 had been repaired.

For a government within 15 months of the end of a great war to be approaching the completion of 200,000 houses, in addition to having 159,000 building workers on war damage repairs, is a record this country has never before approached," said Health Minister Aneurin Bevan in defence of the Labor administration's housing progress.

The Conservative opposition takes the stand that private enterprise has not been given a fair chance and that Labor's planning has been poor.

Size of the housing problem is demonstrated by government figures that 200,000 houses were destroyed by enemy action and 250,000 more made uninhabitable while wartime marriages have increased the number of family units and only about 250,000 have been built since 1939 compared with a pre-war annual average of 300,000.

Refuse to Ship Wool to Spain

Auckland, N.Z., (CP)—The Auckland Trades Council has declared "black" a consignment of wool which was to have been loaded into the British ship Samlyth for shipment to Spain. The embargo has been supported by the Auckland Waterside Workers' Union.

A recommendation was passed by the Trades Council urging that unions throughout New Zealand refuse to handle produce for Spain.

"In 1937 we levied ourselves a dollar a head to fight Franco," said T. Hill, secretary of the New Zealand Waterside Workers' Union. "Today we still don't like Franco's Spain and we don't think there are many New Zealanders who do. The New Zealand labor government was acclaimed at Geneva for its refusal to recognize the Franco regime and it remains one of the few Governments which has not recognized Franco."

Brilliant Hurling Duels Feature Twin Bill Played At Batawa on Saturday

Niagara Falls Wins First Game 1-0 With Bata Shoemen Taking Second by 2-0

By G. H. C.

Brilliant hurling by four pitchers featured the doubleheader in Batawa on Saturday afternoon when the Niagara Falls Terminals and the Batawa Shoemen hooked up in a thrilling battle that left the teams on an even basis after the smoke of diamond conflict had cleared.

Behind the superb chucking of "Smoky" Smith for Batawa and Bullock of Niagara Falls the squads battled for seven innings with the Falls hurler edging the brilliant Batawa southpaw by a 1-0 score.

In the nine-inning nightcap Muffitt for Batawa and Johnson for the Falls staged another outstanding pitchers battle with the shoeman mates coming through in the ninth inning in a stirring Merriwell finish to smash out three hits, score a pair of runs and win the game.

Both games were in doubt from the time the pitchers hurled the first ball until the last man was out in each game. The fielding of both squads was excellent, only five errors being chalked up in both games.

Lost Heartbreaker

"Smoky" Smith lost a heartbreaker in the first tussle as he struckout twelve Niagara Falls batters and walked but one. Bullock fanned three Shoemen and issued but one free ticket. The game was nip-and-tuck all the way with the Falls infield playing sparkling defensive baseball behind their hurler. The only run of the game came in the fourth innings. Smith struck out Stephenson and forced Gregus to ground out. Rankin, Batawa third baseman committed a costly error putting Smith on first and he promptly stole second. He came in the winning marker when Meagher came through with a timely clout.

That ended the scoring and the teams battled away going down in order until the end of the game.

Score By Innings

Niagara Falls .. 000 100 0—1 5 2
Batawa ...... 000 000 0—0 6 1

Batteries—Bullock and Gregus, Smith and Aquino.

Umpires, Thomas and Townsend, Belleville.

Second Game

The second joust was a repetition of the first game with both pitchers going the route and the issue in doubt until the ninth innings. At that, the way the hurlers were throwing the ball and the fine defensive work afield on the part of both squads, it looked as though the large crowd was due for overtime.

Spencer, Batawa third baseman was the hero of the piece driving out a triple in the last half of the ninth that scored the only two runs of the pastime. Watson had poled a single out to left field and later scored on Smith's double. Spencer strode to the plate with two out and the right fielder drove a scorching hit to right field that scored Smith and drove home the second run.

Muffitt was practically invincible on the mound for the Shoemen. He struck out ten batters, walked one and held Niagara Falls batters to four scattered hits. He was only in danger once and that in the third when a walk and a hit put the enemy in scoring position but he settled down and retired the next man to ease the situation.

Johnson for Niagara Falls likewise turned in a masterful display on the mound. He struck out ten and walked only one but weakened in the ninth when the Batawa sluggers got to him for three of the ten hits allowed. They got two off him in the eighth, but the tall flinger got himself out of that hole.

Spencer paved the way for the Bata victory in the second game polling out three hits, one triple. Smith for Batawa and Smith for Niagara Falls each got a double.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Sept. 30 —(AP)— Exclusive, if true (and the guy from whom we got the story claims it is true, though he agrees all concerned will deny it.) . . . The story is that just after Bo McMillin's Indiana team won the Western Conference Football title last fall, he was approached by Kentucky, which was trying hard to inaugurate a comeback. . . . Bo met Kentucky officials at the home of his old friend baseball commissioner Happy Chandler and after considerable dickering, signed a $15,000 a year contract. It was contingent, of course, upon his getting a release from Indiana and Bo couldn't get it so the whole thing was dropped. . . . "I know the story is true," says the informant, "because the university was to pay $10,000 of Bo's salary and the Alumni were to make up the other $5,000. I was one of the Alumni putting the bee on the other guys for the $5,000."

Tough Game.

Fred Kammer, the golfer who was a better-than-fair baseball and hockey player in his college days at Princeton, tells about his trial as a hockey referee when his playing days ended. . . . "The first game I worked was between Williams and Army," Kammer says. "And when it was over the two coaches were more tired than the players from climbing over the boards to tell me what they thought of my decisions. . . . I'll never call a referee a name again — I heard them all."

'Mercy Killing' Contrary to Command of God

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Sept. 30 — (AP) — The American Council of Christian Churches declared in a resolution Saturday that "mercy killing" is contrary to the command of God. The resolution was adopted at the closing business session of the group following announcement that 54 prominent Protestant lergymen in New York had approved voluntary enthanasia (mercy killing) under careful safeguards.

TORONTO ARGOS DEFEAT OTTAWA TO LEAD FIELD

Joe Krol Outstanding With Touchdown and Two Singles in 12 to 6 Win

(By The Canadian Press)

Still cocks of the Dominion's football walk, the all-Canadian Toronto Argonauts and particularly big Joe Krol could be forgiven a strut or two today in their refurbished glory.

Argos, who stood pat on their Grey Cup lineup this year while others in the interprovincial rugby football union turned to south of the border for talent thrust back the challenging Ottawa Rough Riders with a 12-6 victory Saturday. The husky Krol, with a touchdown and two singles, was the white-haired boy.

The loss bounced Ottawa, who would have tied Argos for the big four lead with a win, all the way back to third place when Montreal Alouettes walloped Hamilton Tigers 21-6 in a Sunday clash to pass the Rough Riders by one point.

The venerable Ontario rugby football union has a big weekend with three scheduled games. Toronto Indians held first place by whipping the tail -end Ottawa Trojans 18-3; Hamilton Wildcats edged into a second place drubbing Toronto Balmy Beach 8-1 while Imperials nosed out Windsor Rockets 7-6.

Blue Bombers Win

In the west, Winnipeg Blue Bombers, outplayed in all departments in the first half, came back strongly in the third quarter to score a converted touchdown and hold Saskatchewan Roughriders the rest of the way in a 6-0 victory.

Toronto Varsity trounced Guelph O. A. C. Intermediate Aggies 48-11 in Toronto and at Kingston, Queen's University Seniors rollicked to a 35-11 victory over Montreal's Loyola College in exhibition matches.

The Argos-Ottawa game was the big clash of the weekend because this was the one the Toronto team was supposed to lose. Playing without quarterbacks Billy Myers and Fred Doty, now University of Toronto performers for the remainder of the Intercollegiate season, Argos had another blow almost on the day of the game when they learned Al Jacobs, another quarter had broken an arm.

Krol went around the end for a touchdown and then picked a neat convert to take the lead in the first quarter of the Lansdowne Park encounter. Ottawa opened its second half with a flashy aerial attack and won a converted touchdown in four plays. The second quarter went scoreless but the third saw Ottawa score on a touchdown by Rowell and a convert by Facciolla.

Early in the fourth, Krol kicked the ball behind the Rough Rider's deadline. Then an intercepted Ottawa pass assured Argos of victory.

Converted Three Touches

Accurate booting by Ches McCance gained yards for Alouettes time and again in their victory over Hamilton Tigers. In addition McCance converted all three touchdowns and found the upright in the final quarter for a field goal. Halfback Ross McKelvey and end Harry Booth of Toronto Indians suffered shoulder injuries in Saturday's Toronto game and joined teammate Bill Stukus on the sidelines. Stukus, first-string quarter, broke his arm last Wednesday in a game against Windsor Rockets.

Halfback Mike Meikle's last-minute placement kick gave Sarnia Imperials victory over Windsor Rockets. Sarnia scored a single in the first quarter and held their 1-0 lead until half-time. In the third quarter Rockets took over the lead after Meikle kicked a field goal for imperials. Meikle's game-winning hoist came after he tried one from the Rockets' 25-yard line.

Mickey Vernon Batting Leader American Loop

New York, Sept. 30 (AP) — Mickey Vernon, who led the American League in hitting virtually all season, won the circuit's batting title according to the final unofficial averages revealed yesterday.

Johnny Pesky of Boston took third place with .335 and was followed by George Kell, Detroit, .323; Barney McCosky, Philadelphia .318; Dom DiMaggio, Boston .316; Luke Appling, Chicago .359 and Vern Stephens, St. Louis .307.

Hank Greenberg of the Tigers captured the home run and runs-batted in title with 44 round trippers and 127 runs batted in. Williams was second in both departments with 38 four-baggers and 123 R.B.I.S. Hank Edwards of Cleveland hit the most triples, 16 and Stan Price smashed 49 two-baggers to beat out Vernon by one. Williams topped the circuit in runs scored with 142 to Pesky's 115.

George Case of Cleveland recaptured stolen base honors from New York's George Stirnweiss, Case stole 29 bases to Stirnweiss' 17.

Pitching honors went to Boston's Dave (Boo) Ferriss who won 25 games and lost six for a .806 percentage.

Bob Feller, Cleveland, pitched a 1-0 no-hit game over the Yankees April 30 and struck out 348 batters to shatter Rube Waddell's official mark of .343 established in 1904. The unofficial record is 349 which a recent check discovered to be Waddell's correct total for 1904.

Newhouser became the first American League pitcher since Lefty Grove of the Philadelphia Athletics to win 25 or more games for three straight seasons. Grove accomplished that feat in 1930-32.

EXILE OVER AS GREEK KING RESUMES THRONE

After five years in exile, King George II of Greece is shown bidding farewell to the Duchess of Kent, former Princess Marina of Greece, just before he left by plane from Heathrow airdrome, near London, to return to his throne. The Greek monarch, recalled to his throne by plebiscite, flew to Malta and boarded a Greek destroyer for the remainder of the journey to Athens. He returns to a troubled country where a small-scale civil war is raging in the north.

R.C.A.F. Surveys Uncharted Areas of North Country

Ottawa, Sept. 30 (CP) — The R.C.A.F., the instrument Canada uses to map out her uncharted empire, has photographed more than 370,000 square miles of Northern Canada this summer in continuation of a job that has gone on for 30 years and will continue for many more.

To the end of August air survey crews working out of suburban Rockcliffe air station but operating from sub-Arctic points photographed 202,000 square miles by what is known as the large-scale vertical method and another 170,000 square miles by the tri-camera method. The latter system takes in a greater area than the one-camera method of vertical photography but the air pictures do not possess the same fineness of detail.

Concentrating chiefly on communications and transport duties until its training program swings back into full operation next year, the air force is carrying on in its air survey a job that for two decades has seen it work in areas as widely separated as the Niagara Peninsula and the Arctic Circle, Vancouver Island and the Maritimes. Negatives for all pictures are kept in a huge vault at Rockcliffe.

The reasons for photographic survey are several. The need for accurate maps of new areas for settlement by veterans, the location of regions rich in minerals which can be determined from geological "faults" in the terrain, and the need for information about areas requiring control of flood conditions or the prevention of soil erosion are examples. Another is the need for better maps for purposes of national defence.

It occasionally illustrates the limited extent to which the Northland is known.

Corrects Old Maps.

For instance it was discovered by the R.C.A.F. twelve years ago that Akimiski Island in James Bay was practically upside down on all maps. Only this year another R.C.A.F. plane re-discovered the Spicer Islands in Foxe Basin at a point other than that shown on the map.

The force's work is handed to it by a government interdepartmental committee on air surveys.

Of the two types of photographic survey, the vertical air survey is a 20-year-old project and is the original method of aerial photography of this kind. It is used for mapping and for detailed exploration of such things as: Water power development; soil reclamation and irrigation projects and land development for soldier settlement; mineral exploration; hydrographic survey for inland waterways; forestry service and coverage of flooded areas for dyke projects.

Tri-camera photography is intended for basic exploration.

Its purposes are: Coverage of large areas where photographs are required immediately; coverage in cases where large-scale maps are not required; and general survey from which likely areas will be chosen for detailed survey.

In vertical photography only one camera is used. It takes a series of overlapping pictures of the ground. In theory the centre of each picture represents the ground directly below the aircraft at the time it was taken.

In tri-camera photography, besides a centrally positioned camera taking a vertical photograph, two oblique cameras at the same time take photos overlapping the central vertical photo and extending, one right and one left, to each horizon. They are taken usually from 20,000 feet above sea level, and have not nearly the detail that ordinary verticals have. But they can take a much greater area.

On a good photographic day 25,000 square miles of tri-camera photos can be taken, as compared with only 600 to 1,000 square miles by the vertical method. Canada could not be photographed completely for 50 or 60 years at the present rate if only verticals were used. But from tri-camera photos experts can select areas for further investigation, which will lead to the most economical use of the facilities available for vertical photography.

The detachments may be stationed in hotels, airport buildings or under canvas, depending upon their location. In camps in isolated localities as for example in the Northwest Territories living conditions are rigorous. Arms are carried and the men shoot most of their own requirements of fresh meat, or catch their own fish.

From an operational standpoint, the greatest handicap in the north is the short season. Photographs must be taken when there is no snow or ice on the ground.

Very often gaps appear in a photographic mosaic due to flying by faulty maps or to navigational errors, and until recently these would not be discovered until the photographs were plotted the following winter. But improvements in equipment and technique have resulted in great progress in this respect. At the present time, films are developed at Rockcliffe in most cases before the detachment has left the base, and any gaps which appear can be flown and photographed in a few days.

Politicians Joust Over Mt. B'Limit

Wellington, N.Z., (P)—Reference to one of the world's most curiously named mountains enlivened an earnest discussion of the New Zealand Geographic Board Bill by the House of Representatives.

This is a steep and difficult peak in the Southern Alps of New Zealand which is officially named Mount B'Limit.

"I would like to refere to the suggestive title of Mount B'Limit," declared Prof. R. M. Algie, an Opposition member in speaking to the bill. "The band of mountaineers who first scaled this peak must have been—"

"Australians," interjected P. G. Connolly.

"They were either so overcome with the scenic attractions that they called it Beauty Limit and then shortened it, or as Mr. Connolly suggests, they were Australians," added Prof. Algie.

Praying Mantis Beneficial Insect

(By The Canadian Press)

Toronto, Sept. 20 (CP) — A praying mantis, fearsome three-inch dinosaur of the insect world, recently alighted on the 11th. floor window of The Canadian Press. The curious office staff speculated whether it had dropped from a low-flying aircraft or had strayed to the unwonted height in a fruitless search for butterflies or other dainty morsels foreign to the downtown district.

The praying mantis comes by its name because its spiked forelegs appear to be folded in an attitude of prayer. Any insect will tell you this is sheer hypocrisy. The forelegs are used to grab the mantis a quick meal from the insect world.

Moreover, the female praying mantis has a habit of taking time out from prayer to devour her mate.

The mantis is a strange creature, suggesting a prehistoric monster in miniature with shiny, armored outer wings and grasshopper-like legs. The young insect is light in color, turning dark green or brown as it matures. Almost alone among the insects, it can rotate its head like the higher animals.

Five years ago the mantis was a rarity in Ontario but naturalist Stuart L. Thompson says it now is fairly common. It appears to thrive in captivity, eating anything from hamburger steak and corned beef to live crickets, grasshoppers, moths and flies.

When the mantis lays its eggs on some weed or flower it deposits them in a previously-prepared frothy egg case. During the two hours required to make the case and deposit the eggs, the insect works with its head pointing downward.

One of the most beautiful and desirable fishes of Canadian waters, the rainbow trout, has another claim to admiration. At least, the male of the species has. When he builds a nest of pebbles for his mate, the job is undertaken with care and skill.

A secluded spot in some lake is selected and suitable stones collected. He picks them up with his mouth and deposits them with an eye on order and convenience.

When a sufficient number of pebbles are not available nearby, or when they are the wrong size, the male rainbow trout will carry other small stones to the nesting site from considerable distances. Then the female deposits her eggs and the male spreads his milt over them.

An original set of Audubon's classic work, "The Birds of America," was sold at auction in London some months ago for £2,400 ($9,600). Almost the same figure, $11,700, was paid at a New York auction sale for another set.

More than 400 plates adorn these original sets, and the work has been described as "the most magnificent monument ever created by art to nature.

Expert Defends Maligned Birds

Anglers and commercial fishermen picture the big black water fowl as a sinister type that goes around grabbing fish away from their enticing hooks or robbing their nests. Yet naturalists declare that investigations invariably clear the bird of all charges and prove him to be a benefactor rather than a menace to man.

Latest group to campaign against the cormorant have been a group of fishermen in the Pointe au Baril area of Georgian Bay where the birds are relative newcomers, first being observed in 1939. In response to the fisherman's request, the Ontario lands and forests department sent J. L. Baillies Jr., ornithologist of the Royal Ontario Museum, to investigate.

Mr. Baillie spent three weeks poking about the big bare rocks on which the birds build their nests, shot some specimens and examined them. While official results of the expedition have not yet been made public, Mr. Baillie said he found no evidence that the birds had eaten commercially valuable fish but concentrated on such coarse varieties as suckers and rock bass, which prey on game fish themselves.

Investigation of a similar complaint by salmon fishermen in New Brunswick revealed that the cormorants were not only innocent of the charge of eating salmon but had a definite aversion to the fish and developed indigestion when fed salmon in captivity.

Although cormorants have an exotic appearance as they stand bolt upright on the bare rocks with their hooked beaks extended, they are native to Canada and can be seen anywhere from the Atlantic coast to the prairie lakes. There are a dozen colonies in Ontario alone.

In Peru where the birds are more plentiful, they are valued highly as a source of guana, a fertilizer with high nitrogen content which is marketed commercially. In China and Japan they are trained by fishermen to dive for fish and bring them to their boat, a tight bracelet around their necks prevent them from swallowing the catch.

Cable Mixup Starts Heavy Run on Hides

By J. C. GRAHAM
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Wellington, N.Z., (CP)—How a mutilated cable led to a speculative orgy of calfskin buying by Canada, Australia and other countries was told in the New Zealand House of Representatives by the Finance Minister Walter Nash. He was explaining restrictions which have been placed on the sale of hides, pelts and skins in New Zealand.

The flood of orders from abroad, Mr. Nash said, resulted in the selling forward of more than half New Zealand's output of calfskins for the present year in two days.

Mr. Nash said the Dominion's trade in calfskins was traditionally with the United States and Canada, with smaller quantities going to Europe, Australia and Britain.

When price controls were removed in the United States prices soared to a point where they became purely speculative and were unrelated to value. A cable was received from Britain asking for 350,000 calfskins from New Zealand in the present year. Unfortunately the cable was mutilated in transmission and the time required to refer it back to London resulted in news of the request reaching Canada, the United States and Australia before the matter was clarified.

The result was that orders to buy calfskins poured in from these countries at all sorts of prices up to 54 cents per pound. Orders were placed for 280,000 for Canada, 166,000 for Australia, 45,000 for Belgium, 6,000 for Holland, 2,800 for France, 20,000 for the United States and 20,000 for Britain.

This meant, Mr. Nash said, that insufficient calfskins were left to meet Britain's needs and New Zealand's own requirements. It had therefore been necessary for the government to impose restrictions on sales until a satisfactory allocation had been worked out.

A restriction was also placed on the price to be received by sellers in New Zealand. This was fixed at 43 cents per pound. The difference between this price and the speculative prices being offered would be paid into the Bobby Calf Pool, where it would be held for the benefit of producers.

Kiwanis Juniors Eliminated From O.B.A. Playdowns By Wrightvilles in Third Game

Played at Megaffin Stadium on Saturday and Score Was 2-1

(By C. D. T.)

Belleville Kiwanis Junior "A" entrants in the Provincial O.B.A. playdowns were eliminated from further competition at Megaffin Stadium, Kingston, Saturday afternoon, when they were defeated by Wrightvilles of Ottawa in the third and deciding game of the series by a score of 2-1. In being eliminated they were not disgraced and the teams are two of the best junior aggregations seen around these parts in some years. Leaving the first game out of consideration the two teams played two games even in runs but not in hits and therein lies the story of the game on Saturday.

Inability to hit in the clutches and failure to advance runners after they had got on is the story of the game. The locals opened the first frame with a run and had two distinct chances to win the contest but in the clutches they failed miserably with the willow. There was no preference in the fielding of the two clubs and certainly on the mound Bob Bunton hurled as good and probably a little better ball than his opponent Dick Dupere. A large number of fans accompanied the team from this city while an equally large number came up from Ottawa. The fans were also ready to back their favorites with cash of the realm and many sizeable bets were recorded.

Ideal Baseball Setting

The game was played in a perfect setting. The Megaffin Stadium is an ideal baseball field and the owner deserves a lot of credit for giving such a fine stadium to Kingston. The infield was a little slow but level but all this will be rectified next year as sodding operations will begin immediately and all the infield and outfield will have a new coat of grass next year. Everything was arranged for the comfort of the teams and Ken J. Colling, O.B.A. executive member handled the details to the satisfaction of everyone. Some argument was caused over the appointment of referees but "Squeak" Reason of Kingston and Eddie Schrieder of Belleville called almost perfect game and the players had no squawk from that angle.

Wrightville has a smooth working infield with every player possessing a good arm, while their outfield knows what it is all about. In Garneau at third and G. Cloutier at first they have two up and coming ball player. Their pitching staff has depth and they were able to use three pitchers against the Kiwanis in this series, two of which won. It was thought Wrightville would throw a lefthander back at the locals for the third game but they countered with Dupere and after a shaky first innings, proceeded to blank the losers with monotonous regularity. On the other hand Dick Fitzpatrick, playing his last season of junior ball, stood out for the Kiwanis team at short. He handled six hard chances without an error and hit the bingle that sent Vern Green home with the only run the team secured. Lockyer played a splendid game at first, two of his catches being of the sensational variety. Vern Green at second had two miscues but this was due to not taking the ball on the first hop instead of the second. The infield was rather soft and the ball died quickly after hitting the ground. At bat he was leading sticker with a double and single to his credit.

One Bad Throw

Bob Bunton was in trouble in only one frame and might have escaped with only one run against him but for the bad throw of Strachan in right field. He stuck out five and was going best from the fifth till the end. He walked but three. His fast ball had plenty of hop and if this boy stays to baseball he has a bright future. He was ably handled by Reeves. His opponent spaced four hits over the game, two of them being of the scratchy variety. Dupere whiffed nine and walked three and his support except for one error by the shortstop was marvellous at times. Belleville opened the proceedings with a rousing double by Vern Green and Bush struck out. Fitzpatrick singled to left and Green went home with the play going to third and then to second. Schrieder called Fitz out at second but when the baseman went to deliver the ball he dropped it but apparently Fitzpatrick did not hear Schrieder change his decision and he walked off the bag to be put out.

Had Chance to Win

The only other chance the Belleville team had of winning the game was in the fifth when after Semark had whiffed and Strachan had popped out to the catcher. Lockyer was given a life on his hit to short. Bunton scratched a hit and Vern Green walked to load the sacks. Bush was not equal to the occasion and struck out being fooled with a beautiful curve and change of pace ball. In the sixth B. Green was walked after one was out but was rubbed off in a double killing when Reeves grounded to second. Wrightville scored all their runs in the fifth when Dupere the first up walked and was sacrificed to second. Berniquez then whistled one to left field, Dupere scoring. Instead of holding the ball and throwing it into the infield, Strachan unloosed a wild throw and the ball went into the Belleville dugout, Berniquez taking second. Reeves then had a passed ball which advanced Berniquez to third and he rode home on G. Cloutier's clout to centre. Fortin then singled but the next two were easy outs.

Wrightville will now meet the winner of the Toronto Columbus and Kitchener series for the Provincial title and if the Kiwanis Club could not win they wish for the Wrightville crew every success in their quest for the championship.

BERMUDA SHORT OF MEAT

Hamilton, Bermuda, Sept. 28 (CP Cable)—With a scant 10 days supply of meat on hand, Bermuda today appealed to the United States, Canada and Argentina for increased shipments.

Meat packing house officials said yesterday that if the freighter, Alcoas Pegasus, due here about the middle of next week from Montreal, does not have meat aboard the colony's stocks will be exhausted before another Canadian ship arrives.

Bermuda has been receiving 60 per cent from Canada. Negotiations now are underway with Canada for extra shipments while London is being asked whether some Argentina meat shipments meant for Britain could be diverted to Bermuda.

National Loop Without Champ As Dodgers, Cardinals Tie To Climax a Turbulent Season

Both Leaders Defeated by Boston Braves and Chicago Cubs on Sunday

By JOE REICHLER
Associated Press Sport Writer

In a fitting climax to baseball's most turbulent year, the close of the regular season found the National League today without a champion as Brooklyn Dodgers and St. Louis Cardinals wound up in a dead heat for first place.

It is doubtful if so many hectic episodes ever were crowded into one season as in 1946. Outside of the raiding of the majors by George Pasquel's Mexican Baseball League; one Robert Murphy's endeavor to establish a baseball union; the narrowly averted Pittsburgh Pirates player strike; the resignation of six major league managers; the evacuation of the National League cellar by Philadelphia Phils; the presentation of automobiles by President Branch Rickey to 30 Brooklyn players; the sale of the pittsburgh and Cleveland clubs; Bob Feller's determined bid for a strikeout record; Boston Red Sox' first pennant in 28 years and a record 18,000 attendance mark for the majors, nothing much happened.

Something New in Baseball

The Cards-Dodgers deadlock presented something new to major league baseball. Never before had a regular campaign ended in a tie although Chicago Cubs and New York Giants were ordered to replay a tie game to determine the championship in 1908. The Cubs won that play-off and also the championship.

The Dodgers and Cards will engage in a best two-of-three game play-off to determine the championship as well as an opponent for the American League champion Red Sox. The first game is slated to be played in St. Louis tomorrow with the two teams coming to Brooklyn to play the second game Thursday and the third, if necessary, Friday. This necessitates the moving back of the start of the world series from Wednesday, Oct. 2 to Sunday, Oct. 6. Meantime, the Red Sox will prepare for their world series clash by meeting an all-star squad in several exhibition games.

Both Leaders Beaten

Yesterday the Brooks bowed to Mort Cooper and Boston Braves 4-0 while the Cards were beaten by Johnny Schmitz and Chicago Cubs 8-3.

Cooper held the Dodgers to four singles in registering his 13th victory. However, the triumph failed to gain the braves a tie for third place since the Cubs retained their one-game margin by beating the Cardinals.

Yet it was a personal triumph for Billy Southworth, finishing his first year at the helm of the Braves after six years with the Cards. It was the Braves initial first division finish since they wound up fourth in 1934.

The Cubs' failure to finish better than third was primarily due to the accumulation of injuries which struck every member of the team.

Philadelphia Phils, under the leadership of Ben Chapman, wound up fifth, their highest position since 1932.

Giants Disappoinment

The guild-minded Pirates just managed to escape the cellar after occupying it for most of the season. The biggest disappointment were New York Giants. Picked to finish in the first division because of the return of many of their pre-war stars they wound up in the basement.

The Red Sox copped their first flag since 1918 in easy style. Ferriss and Tex Hugson won 25 and 20 games, respectively, and Ted Williams, Johnny Pesky and Dom Dimaggio finished high among the batting leaders.

Detroit Tigers finished strong to take the runner-up spot.

Yankees Poor Third

Failure of Joe DiMaggio, Joe Gordon, Phil Rissuto and Tom Henrich to regain their pre-war form was a big blow to New York Yankees who could do no better than a poor third.

Washington could not no better than fourth principally because of the failure of its vaunted pitching staff to come through.

Chicago White Sox, after a change in managers from Jimmy Dykes to popular Ted Lyons, finished strong to move up from seventh to fifth place.

Although Bob Feller won 26 games and whiffed 348 batters to better Rube Waddell's official strikeout record of 343, (Unofficial mark is 349) Cleveland Indians ended sixth.

The poor seventh showing of St. Louis Browns caused Manager Luke Sewell to abdicate in favor of Herald (Muddy) Ruel while the Athletics, cellar occupants in five of the last six years, again wound up last.

Final results, besides the Cards and Dodgers, were as follows:

AMERICAN LEAGUE
New York 6-2, Philadelphia 0-1
St. Louis 8, Chicago 7.
Cleveland 4, Detroit 1.
Washington 7, Boston 0.

NATIONAL LEAGUE
Cincinnati 1-3, Pittsburgh 0-2.
New York 3, Philadelphia 1.

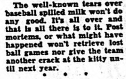
Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

Well, we've had it. A grand little junior team was edged out of the Ontario Baseball Association picture at Kingston on Saturday by a grander little squad that was just a shade better, perhaps in all departments. At that it was a nip and tuck affair but the Kiwanis kidsters just could not get that extra poke into the willow in time to nose out the tying and winning runs.

• • •

They had a grand chance to cop the nod in the eight innings when the sacks were fully populated only to have the reliable "Mouse" Bush whiff for the fourth time and end the rally. Again in the first the locals had a brilliant opportunity but they couldn't make the grade.



The well-known tears over baseball spilled milk won't do any good. It's all over and that is all there is to it. Post mortems, or what might have happened won't retrieve lost ball games nor give the team another crack at the kitty until next year.

• • •

The Kiwanis have nothing to be ashamed of. It is too bad they did not regain the batting eye which swept them through to victory over the Oshawa squad in Peterboro, but then again perhaps the starry hurling crops of the Ottawa Wrightvilles had something to do about that. The Ottawans are a team worthy of their victory and it is more than likely they will go through to the title but then again that may not happen. Two outstanding teams are battling for the other half. Toronto Columbus Grads and the smart Kitchener squad. Kitchener defeated Toronto in the first game on Saturday.

• • •

The Wrightvilles lived up to their reputation of being an outstanding junior squad in all three tilts with the Kiwanis. They know what to do with the ball and when to do it. They can hit and are one of the smartest defensive teams this desk has seen in some time. They have a pitching staff that is second to none, all four hurlers being pretty much alike as far as efficiency goes.

• • •

But win, lose or draw, the Kiwanis team has gone far this year, and taking up matters where they dropped them in 1945, have done much to bring back baseball to some semblance of its former popularity in this city. And a lot of credit for that goes to officials of the Kiwanis Service Club here.

The junior squad was wandering around at a lost end last Spring with Coach Speedy St. Louis near desperate wondering what was to become of his charges. He lacked a sponsor and finally the Kiwanians came to the rescue. Jack McVeigh was put in charge in a managerial administrative capacity and he did a swell job. So did other members of the club. The kids were given new uniforms and they took a new lease on life. They battled their way through the city league gaining much needed experience and were a credit to their sponsors, themselves and their home town in the OBA playdowns.

• • •

There must be a loser. Every team can't win, and it is unfortunate that we couldn't have that extra piece of zip that would have sent the youngsters into the finals. However, it's all over. The kids were defeated but not disgraced and Belleville's baseball fandom should be proud of the youngsters. After all there's another year coming.

• • •

Up in Batawa over eleven hundred fans thrilled to one of the finest exhibitions of hurling seen since the famous "Smoky" Smith-"Lefty" Garton fray of a year ago. Two Shoemen hurlers and two from Niagara Falls hooked up in two mound duels that had the big crowd on edge and the issue of both games in doubt until the last man was out.

• • •

"Smoky" Smith lost a heartbreaker in the first game losing by a single run, the only one scored in fact when a teammate committed a costly error. Came a timely clout and the damage was done. The southpaw struck out twelve and allowed only five clouts. The best his mates could do off Bullock, Niagara Falls hurler was six safe socks but he scattered them over as many innings.

• • •

Muffitt turned in a more or less sensational job on the mound in the nine-innings nightcap. He blanked the opposition with four hits and had them eating out of his hand practically the entire game. And his mates came through with a Merriwell in the last half of the ninth. The crowd had practically resigned itself to overtime when two hits bounced off the Bata war clubs to score one run. Then Spencer, who was the hitting here of the day, smashed out a triple that won the game and evened the series

• • •

The teams meet for the third and playoff game in Port Hope next Saturday at three o'clock, the various managements decided after Saturday's results. The game should be another thriller and with the series at stake, should develop into a classic. "Smoky" will likely essay the hero role while the Niagara Falls management did not state whom they would start next week. The squads are evenly matched and the game might hinge on a single play as did the first game of Saturday's twin bill.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitser

The experts profoundly advised it in terms that completely disguise it. But each bid of one needs seven tricks, son. It matters not which couple buys it.

A bid of one in bridge must take seven tricks. Five of them are promised by the player who opens with a bid of one. Therefore, he expects to find two tricks in the hand of his partner.

Of course, the opening one bidder premises other things; like high cards and sure tricks. But among such other things, he says his hand will produce not less than five tricks.

Think of bridge bidding in these terms and you will play with intelligent understanding. An opener shows at least five tricks; his partner is expected to have two. There is the basis.

Work from this basis as the responder when your partner starts with an opening one bid. He expects two tricks in your hand. If you have no more than two tricks, say so. There is a word for it.

What word do you use to tell your partner you have no more than two tricks? The word is pass. That is what the word pass means. It says: "Partner, I have no more than you expected."

Suppose you have more than the two tricks your partner expected. What do you do then? Simply bid something. Consequently, any bid in response says your hand contains more than two tricks.

Add one feature to this and you are in good shape. Among your tricks must be two high cards. A high card is a queen or king or ace. So, two of your tricks must be of the queen-king-ace variety.

Your partner opens with one heart when you have this hand:

♠A 9
♥J 7 5 3
♦K 8 6
♣7 5 4 3

With three tricks inclusive of two high cards, you must respond with a bid. Be careful how you make passes. Who do you think you are, hey. A Hollywood wolf?

Hollywood, Sept. 30.—(AP)—This week as MGM performed a huge production number around "Holiday For Strings", it seemed apparent that the novel composition will go on forever. Even its author, David Rose, is sometimes introduced at parties with merely, This is Holiday for Strings'."

By this time, Davie is numb to the piece and can't tell you whether he likes it or not. One thing is certain—he likes what it has done for him.

"Just by writing it, my career was advanced two years," he told me. Recent recordings of it include one by Alfred Wallenstein and the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra, and another by Spike Jones and his Melody Murderers. It has been made a saxophone exercise by Jimmy Dorsey, a vocal by the Modernaires, a ballet by MGM and heaven knows what next.

Dave said it all began as a piano exercise which he used as a gag for parties. "I was always being asked to play," he related, "and when I played this number they always let me stop."

One day he needed an original tune for a radio show so he orchestrated his piano exercise. This was done in about 40 minutes, and the finished product was dubbed "Monotony for Strings".

Re-taged "Holiday", the piece went on to gross an estimated $200,000, with more to come.

Musial also paced the circuit in runs scored, 121; doubles, 48 and triples. 19.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 30 (AP)—Tied at one game apiece, Louisville Colonels of the American Association and Montreal Royals of the International League will resume their battle for the 1946 Little World Series title tonight.

The Colonels' hopes for their second series title in a row surged yesterday as they blanked the Royals 3 to 0, with Harry Dorish pitching two-hit ball. The Royals took the first game Saturday 7-5.

Louisville defeated Newark for the crown last year.

Film "Jericho" Tribute to Maquis Of France and Royal Flying Corps

By ROSS MUNRO
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Brussels, Sept. 28 (CP)—In the re-establishment of the Continental Movie Industry, a few of the best films have been inspired by deeds of the resistance and the pick of them all is "Jericho", a tribute to the Maquis of France and the Royal Air Force.

The title is the codename for the actual attack by R.A.F. Mosquitos in June, 1944, on the prison at Amiens, where the Germans held 50 hostages who were going to be shot for attacking a train loaded with gasoline for the Caen front.

The film is directed by Henri Calef and adheres fairly well to fact. In many respects it is a documentary of the resistance, filled with suspense until the climax when R.A.F. planes blow down the walls of the prison to release scores of Maquis prisoners.

It was shown first in Paris where it was a hit for six months and where it still is seen in suburban theatres. It came to Brussels a month ago and was so popular it was shown in two downtown movies. In Holland, Switzerland and Scandinavia the film draws good houses.

Other good films are being produced now, but "Jericho" and another resistance movie, called "The Battle of the Rails" dealing with Maquis sabotage, showed the way to recovery for the movie industry in Europe.

"Jericho" opens with a scene in an unnamed town in northern France just before D-Day, with the Gestapo searching houses for spies and Allied airmen, hidden by the resisance. The stage is set with intrqgue and suspense from the start.

D-Day comes and the action concentrates skillfully on preparations for blowing up the gasoline train. The actual attack is a wild scene of shooting and German confusion.

In revenge the Nazis select hostage in Amiens prison. The hostages wait for the firing squad. On one violent scene they kill one of their members who turned out to be a stool pigeon for the Germans.

Then action switches to the airfield in England. There is briefing, the take off, and the diving attacks on the Amiens prison, which gave the hostages and other prisoners their freedom.

Montreal, Sept. 30 (CP) — Among the more useless pursuits for aspiring young hockey players these days seems to be that of trying to crack the thin red-white-and-blue line of Montreal Canadiens. In fact, it's just as tough as the opposition found it last season when they tried to solve the Habitants' ice combinations.

With guys like Durnan, Blake Lach, Richard and the rest around, about all a rookie can hope to get out of this year's Canadiens' School is a lot of good practice, and perhaps a berth on Montreal Royals Senior amateur squad.

With the exception of Veteran Toe Blake, the team is plenty young and full of beans. And even Toe, although crowding well up to the 40 mark, is "good for plenty of games yet," Coach Dick Irvin avers.

It's so tough to decide against any of last year's regulars that Dick won't commit himself as to whether such a whiz kid as Johnny Quilty promised to be will make the grade. Quilty copped the Calder rookie trophy in his first season six years ago and turned in a none-too-dull performance the next year before he went in the R.C.A.F.

Another veteran who has a tough job to crack the gates is big Jack Portland, who has been tossing his new streamlined figure around with great effect on defence. You could name more than one N.H.L. team that wouldn't mind having Jack behind the blueline—but with Canadiens he not only has to compete with the old guard but also a character like Roger Leger, the American Hockey League's top defenceman and a good bet to hang on.

But if those boys think they have the breaks against them—what about aspirants for the goalie's job? Bill Durnan isn't ready to retire for a long, long time yet.

Return of Bobby Bauer to the hockey wars means the famed Kitchener line will be riding the ice-lanes again for Boston Bruins. The little winger, who announced his retirement last season, couldn't resist the lure and in a last-minute decision left Kitchener to join centre Milt Schmidt in Boston. Third man of the line, Porky Dumart also left for the Hub this weekend.

In an exhibition game Saturday night Winnipeg's Amphitheatre rink, Cleveland Barons of the American Hockey League nosed out Minneapolis Millers of the United States League 6-5. The game cast the famous Cook brothers as opposing managers, Bill for Millers and Bun for Barons.

In Valleyfield, Que., Philadelphia Rockets of the American Hockey League defeated the local Braves of the Quebec Senior Hockey League 5-3.

Montreal Canadiens were flying their old Stanley Cup form as they frolicked to an 11-3 triumph over Buffalo Bisons American Hockey League champions, before 10,000 Montreal fans Saturday.

Bolstered by a liberal "loan" of player talent, Galt Red Wings of the Ontario Junior "A" Association upset their N.H.L. parent club at Detroit. The Juniors were helped to their 7-3 win by such Detroit first-stringers as Harry Lumley, Sid Abel, Pat Lundy, Fern Gauthier, Ted Lindsay and Hal Jackson.

President Bill Tobin of Chicago Black Hawks, who packed off the amateurs this weekend to let the Varsity get down to serious work, had high praise for two North Bay boys who couldn't make it but will be welcomed back for another try next season — Stan Maxwell and Vince Lecour.

Toronto Maple Leafs observed a Sunday holiday at their camp in St. Catharines but the 20 hopefuls still around will get the whip put to them today. Manager Conny Smythe and coach Hap Day hope to have their starting team selected by the end of the week.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

"Oh yes, Oh, they would have to be! But Avery would be back in the autumn, as possessive as ever; he had written her that as soon as he came back they were going to take the car and go to Mexico; wanted to cruise around there for a while. He had even added, "Yelta and Yeats and Edna could run the kids for four or five months, couldn't they?"

"My dear, they'll soon be big enough for boarding school, and no more fuss," Millie Tait said consolingly, when Isabel told her of her problem. "Of course Avery's jealous of them. They aren't his children, after all."

"He likes them," Isabel submitted, troubled.

"Of course he does But he adores you. And when he gets back he'll want you to himself."

"I hope, after the war, there will be another child in the family," Isabel said slowly.

"He'll go crazy over that one," Millie predicted comfortably. "Especially if it's a son. And if it isn't, you will simply have to go on."

"It all seems rather complicated." Pussy might take the advent of an heir in the Latimer family with her usual sunny eagerness; but Catherine was a strange little being.

"Catherine," Isabel said, "how would you like it if sometime—a long time from now—there was a dear little baby in the family?"

"Now?" Pussy asked with interest.

"Whose little baby?" Catherine asked dourly.

"Mine. Not now. No, but after a long time."

"A bottle baby?" Pussy demanded.

"Oh yes. A tiny, tiny one."

"I'd pull it off your lap," Catherine stated.

"You wouldn't love a nice little brother?"

"What would his name be?" Pussy wanted to know.

"Avery, I think."

"He's gone to the war. Don't bring that little baby here, Mummy," Pussy pleaded. "'Cause then we'd always have to be with Yelta."

Isabel sighed. She must somehow reconcile them to the idea of sharing her with a new baby, should that baby ever be in prospect. She saw little enough of them now! Wealth, she decided with a rueful smile, could be as troublesome to handle as poverty was.

She was planning the children's departure, and Yelta was sewing on buttons and overseeing every detail of their rather extensive wardrobes, when Avery came home. In half a dozen long hops he had half circled the world; he was here, in his uniform, pleased with himself, excited from his adventures. He had eight days, then he must be off again.

Home matters had but a secondary hold upon his interest, Isabel sensed instantly. He liked it all, the comfort of his big room, the admiration of his beautiful wife, complimentary dinners, bass fishing in Richardson's Bay. Isabel went with him to stay with friends at Pebble Beach; it meant being away from home on Catherine's birthday—it couldn't be helped.

"Saturday's the baby's birthday, Avery."

"That's so? Want me to get her something?"

"Well, you'd be a darling if you would. Try at the White House if you're anywhere near. But I was thinking, we promised the La Farges to go down Friday."

"To Pebble eBach? Sure thing. I'm talking all my clubs."

"But I was thinking, Avery. I'd love to be here on her birthday. You know, presents at breakfast, and some little girls in for ice cream and movies in the afternoon."

"Oh, great gosh, you can't do that! Forget it. Yelta'll do the honors. . . . Isabel, did you miss me?"

She had gone over to stand beside him, her face anxious as she discussed the birthday. Now he pulled her and her lacy dressing gown down to the bed, tubbed his chin against her cheek.

"I've told you a dozen times that I did."

"Yes, but I like to hear it. Like the old lady who hadn't been too discreet when she was seventeen—"

"I know all about that old lady."

He laughed his great sudden laugh.

"I'm lucky," he said.

"I think you are."

"No, but I mean—this flying around with Chapelle. We see everything and we don't get near any real trouble."

"And that's the way," Isabel said, marking his thick eyebrows with a firm brown finger, "you've done everything. You see everything, and you don't get anywhere near real trouble."

"You want me to get killed?" he said, enjoying her semiserious tone.

"No. But you never get into anything real, Avery."

"Good God, woman, I'm into this war, aren't I?"

"In a fashion you are."

"Listen," said Avery. "The plane goes back to Guadalcanal, it springs a leak, it comes down in a jungle, everyone dies of exhaustion and starvation except me and the colonel. We push on through the brush——"

"You carrying the colonel over your shoulders."

"Well—yes. We meet natives, I befriend 'em——"

"It seems to me the more important thing is, do they befriend you?"

"They do. They think I'm priceless. . . . You love me, don't you?"

"Avery, in my own bedroom, I rarely sit on any gent's bed unless I have a feeling of real esteem for him."

He laughed joyously again. It was almost noon on a still sweet morning. Avery liked to sleep late these days, and to have breakfast brought upstairs. Sometimes Isabel's children had had their lunches and were sound asleep for afternoon naps before she emerged from her room. Breakfast trays came up at about ten; they dawdled over them comfortably. If the morning was foggy and dark, they had Yeats come in to light a snapping wood fire.

This morning the soft sunlight was barred at the southern windows; Avery was still in bed, propped up on pillows with papers and letters strewn about him. Isabel had presided at the breakfast table close beside his bed; she had had her bath, her hair was crisply brushed, her mind was racing busily even though she seemed the incarnation of leisure and idleness.

They had a luncheon engagement for today; the Harrises wanted them to play bridge this afternoon. Neither she nor Avery wanted to go; Isabel because her bridge remained maddeningly poor, Avery because he didn't like the Harrises They were his friends, not hers, he had enthusiastically made the engagement the night before, when too well warmed with wine and food. But now, if she reminded him of it, it would spoil this pleasant lazy hour.

Then there was the matter of Catherine's birthday; Catherine's dear little third birthday. Isabel wondered if she could persuade her smallest daughter that celebrating it on Monday would be just as much fun.

"How many of these trips do you suppose you will make with Colonel Chapelle?"

"O, while the war lasts. He has a pip of a job. Loads of fun." Isabel felt a mild resentment that Avery could enjoy the war just as he did everything. How did it happen that some persons were simply born that way, able to ride roughshod over the usual rocks and stumbling blocks of life, skim the cream of everything?. . . .Isabel lost herself in metaphors.

"I'll be so glad when it's over."

"If you could see those kids out there in Burma you'd be glad when it's over."

"We've got to settle down, stop rushing about and changing everything. There's got to be a Latimer, Avery."

"So you say."

"So you say, too."

'Oh sure, sometime. But looky, you've got two, and all they do is get you excited and make a lot of trouble."

She was stricken to the heart, even though his tone had been good-naturedly indifferent.

"That isn't all they do, Avery." Isabel got up from the bed and went back to her seat at the table. She poured herself some cooling coffee with a trembling hand.

"No, of course not." He saw that she was hurt. "They're swell little kids," he said penitently. "I like 'em."

"Well, that's better," Isabel said not quite steadily.

"But here's the thing," Avery said. "After the war we want to do a lot of traveling, see?"

"I don't know where we can travel."

"You'll find out. Loads of places. I want to go to Canada, I've never been to Rio, I'll bet you that before you know it we'll be going to China again."

"Avery, the war against Japan may take years."

"You bet your life it may take years."

"And I feel—meanwhile, that in this quiet time it would be very nice to feel that there was a little fellow coming along to welcome Daddy home someday."

"No baby," Avery said definitely. "Someday, of course. But all he'll do now is throw the monkey wrench into everything."

"It makes me feel so useless," Isabel said lightly. But her heart was not light.

"Grand feeling," said Avery. "You're mine, and you're beautiful, and that's enough."

"It isn't really. After all, you and I didn't marry just to have fun. To race all around the world going to races and shooting ducks! I feel more like your mistress than your wife," Isabel said, going on from phrase to phrase reluctantly, feeling her way.

"They say that every man would like his wife to feel that way."

"What way?"

"Like a mistress. Having to be beautiful and sweet all the time, living just for him."

"Are mistresses that?"

"Well, they're a darn sight more anxious to please their men than wives are."

"Horrible," Isabel said under her breath.

"So you saw Dennis Hardisty, did you? You didn't have much to say about it yesterday," Avery said, throwing down his newspaper, stretching his coffee cup toward her in his finely groomed long-fingered hand.

"I couldn't very well. The girls were there. And then we were at Caroline's, and we didn't speak of it later."

"Fuss you much, running into him?"

"No-o-o. Yes, perhaps it did."

"How'd you happen to be there, just that day?"

"I'd taken the girls in to see their grandmother."

"You'd think she'd have given you hickey."

McGeer Says Labor Govt. Would Keep Senate Unchanged

By FRED MURPHY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, Sept. 30 — (CP) — Senator G. G. McGeer of Vancouver may agree with the contention of A. R. Mosher, president of the Canadian Congress of Labor, that the Canadian Senate "is the only place to get complete social service," but he also feels certain that if a labor government ever came into control it would keep the Dominion's Upper House as it is.

Commenting on a resolution, passed last week at the C. C. L. convention in Toronto, urging abolition of the Senate, Senator McGeer said "action of the Senate in the last session of parliament proved to be the only protection that democracy in Canada enjoyed."

"That was evident in action of thte Senate in completely revising the Foreign Exchange Control Board bill which, without the Senate's 67 amendments, would have put the whole people of Canada, and the tourist and international trade of the Dominion, in a straight jacket of permissive control, to be exercised by a group of civil servants appointed permanently by an act of parliament."

He said the issue of Senate reform was "as old as the Senate itself, but as Mark Twain said of the weather: 'Everybody talks about it, but no one does anything about it.' "

"The idea that the Senate should be appointed only on the approval of the legislatures of the provinces from which they come is another reform being suggested, but it likewise fails to gather much support."

Independent of House

He said the mover of the resolution at the C. C. L. convention was "not acquainted with the Senate" as it presently functions.

"The power of the Senate as it is presently formed is presumed to come from the fact that it is independent of the House of Commons, and also independent of the general electorate.

"Its powers of initiating legislation are very limited, but its powers to amend and veto legislation are almost unlimited. It can serve a very important purpose functioning as an arbitrator between the government at Ottawa and the governments of the various provinces.

"The Senate offers probably the only means of breaking the deadlock which now exists in the Dominion-Provincial conference.

"I am hoping that, at the next session of the Senate, the great issue of revising our Canadian constitution will be undertaken. I think if the Senate does that it will prove to be an institution of inestimable value to the Canadian people."

As for Mr. Mosher's suggestion, Senator McGeer conceded that "he would get almost any Senator to agree with him."

REJECT COMPANY OFFER

Toronto, Sept. 30 — (CP) — Nearly 500 striking employees of Anaconda American Brass Company Ltd., last night rejected an 11-cents-an-hour wage increase offer, included in strike settlement proposals recently made by L. W. Brockington, Dominion government conciliator. Ben Doherty, International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, said the union's negotiating committee was instructed by the membership last week not to accept less than a wage increase of 13½ cents an hour.

Iranian Federal Troops Battle South Tribesmen

Tehran, Sept. 30. (AP)—Iranian government troops today fought insurgent southern tribesmen along more than 100 miles of Persian Gulf Coast.

The Government forces were reported by the newspaper Etelaat to be holding out in house-to-house fighting against tribal fighters who already had seized half the port town of Bushire.

Etelaat said the government had ordered its men to use planes to blast rebel positions and had decided to mobilize three "cruisers of 320 tons each" to help coastal army garrisons.

Government garrisons were reported yesterday to have fought off tribesmen at Ardakan, 115 miles northeast of Bushire, killing many, and to have recaptured the norther hill of Kazerun, 55 miles west of Shiraz, capital of Fars Province, with the aid of bombing planes.

The tribes were in action from Bushire up to Bandar Mashur, 140 miles northwest.

The Tehran government said Premier Ahmed Qavam had given in partially to tribesmen's demands for more local autonomy, brought back from Shiraz by a commission that negotiated with Nasser Qashaqai, chief of the Qashsai tribe.

Man Sought On Housing Racket

A new racket which is possible only because of the extreme housing shortage is reported as having been worked on several occasions in Kingston with the person responsible believed to be heading west.

According to reports from Kingston a man between 28-30 years of age has been answering "accommodation wanted" ads in the newspaper and has been accepting down payments up to $20 on the pretense of having such accommodation available. Exact details of the racket were not learned. The man responsible is reported to be about 5 ft. 6 inches tall, with dark wavy hair.

Police Find Boy Of Three Who Won't Answer Questions

A certain three-year-old lad had no compunction about being brought to the local police station around ten o'clock Monday morning when officers found him trudging east on Bridge Street hauling his wagon behind him. The lad was picked up near the top of Bridge Street hill as he walked down the centre of the roadway.

The lad remained entirely uncommittal when brought to the police station and no amount of coaxing by officers could persuade him to talk. Two officers with the lad in tow made inquiries in the East Hill district but without results in finding the boy's parents.

Marmora

Fair Revived After Four Years And Large Crowd Greets New Edition; Fine Exhibits Shown

Marmora—One of the best crowds in the history of Marmora Agricultural Society, numbering approximately three thousand, patronized Marmora Fair on Friday, the fine weather attracting visitors from a wide area.

While exhibits in some classes were poor, there seemed to be a general feeling of pleasure that the event has been revived again, after a break of four years. The Society's executive has been appreciably strengthened by the inclusion of younger agriculturists, who compose Marmora Junior Farmers' Club and with their splendid cooperation in preparatory work and also in the routine of the Fair itself, arrangements were carried out harmoniously.

Fine Hog Showing

Due to the Marmora Boys' Swine Club holding its Achievement Day, the showing of hogs was the best seen in some years and won favorable comment. D. W. Heath of Stirling as an outside exhibitor, had a fine entry of swine as well as sheep. The exhibit of cattle was also good. Harry Neal of Marmora Township and Allan McComb of Bonarlaw had big entries of Holsteins and Garnett Kerr of Campbellford had an excellent herd of Jerseys.

The horse exhibit was also a credible one.

The poultry exhibit was poor. Among the entries were those of Fred Fry of Campbellford and Vincent Lynch and Norman Ellis of Marmora.

Vegetables, grains and seeds, fruits, dairy and apiary products were also down.

The Domestic Science classes had some good exhibits but they were not numerous.

Up To Standard

The children's work was up to a good standard and entries were as good as in former years.

Taken on the whole, the exhibits were of high standard.

The Fair was enlivened by Al Hewitt's Midway which included a ferris wheel and a merry mix-up.

Dr. G. Hammond of the Entomological Branch of the Department of Agriculture had an exhibit in the Exhibition Building; and Donald Prentice exhibited some of his model aeroplanes. Refreshment booths doing good business were operated by Marmora Women's Institute and Marmora Chapter I.O.D.E.

Vaudeville Program Given

A program of vaudeville was given in the afternoon by some juveniles from Belleville, chiefly featuring dancing acts.

There was one speeding event, the free-for-all, which resulted as follows:

Grattan Lee, H. Inglis, Brighton 1-1-1

Grey Worthy, H. Inglis, Brighton 3-2-2

Emdale, S. Garrison, Frankford 2-3-3

Nancy Grattan, H. Inglis, Brighton 4-4-4

Winning time 2:29, 2:25, 2:15.

In the drawing contest honors went to the team of L. Fry of Campbellford. Second place was obtained by John Doyle of Marmora Township with Tom Neal of Marmora township securing third prize.

Also in the special attractions was a softball tournament from which Deloro emerged as winners of the Hon. J. R. Cooke Softball Cup.

Defeated Eldorado

This team in the first round defeated Eldorado by 8 to 4 while in the same round Marmora defeated Bonarlaw by 17-4. In the final game which was closely contested Deloro defeated Marmora by the score of 7-6.

Eric MacInroy was the winning pitcher for Deloro in both games, pitching throughout without relief.

In the final the score by innings was:

Deloro	200 210 020—7
Marmora	001 211 010—6

A string of eight ponies and one donkey did a fair amount of business for their owners as children purchased rides around the park.

In the evening two showings of a movie were held in the Town Hall and a well-patronized dance took place in the Exhibition Building with the Aces Orchestra furnishing the music.

Debert Camp 'Going to Waste' Says Newspaper

Halifax, Sept. 28 — (CP) — The Halifax Herald said in a front page news story today that Debert military camp, situated 12 miles from Truro, N. S., and built at a cost of "millions of dollars to the people is going to waste."

"Worse still, building materials and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of scarce plumbing, heating, cooking, electrical and other equipment are prey to the weather or vandals who can loot at will," the story added.

Neither the buildings nor the fixtures have been turned over to War Assets Corporation, the story said.

The camp, one of the largest ever built in Canada, was once a training and transit centre but now is vacant except for a small detachment of men remaining to guard the ammunition dump and dismantle some of the explosives.

Admiral Called For New Quizzing Of Canal Projects

By WILLIAM T. PEACOCK

Washington, Sept 30. (AP)—With secrecy lifted from long-guarded records, the Senate War Investigating Committee turned its attention anew today to wartime efforts to develop an oil field in Northwestern Canada.

Admiral Ernest J. King, former chief of United States Naval operations, was asked to tell the committee why the joints chiefs-of-staff insisted on continuing the Canol project, as it was called after high civilian officials recommended that it be dropped.

The committee has gone into various phases of the project from time to time for years. In 1944 it was told that national security prevented an answer.

Last week files of the joint chiefs- of-staff concerning the Canol project were turned over to the Senators, but with a wartime secrecy label still attached. This meant the committee could make no public use of them.

Instead of going ahead behind closed doors, the committee asked that the secrecy be lifted.

Admiral William Leahy, presidential personal chief-of-staff replied Saturday that the President agreed.

In earlier hearings, the committee learned that at least $134,000,000 was put into the Canol project. Started in 1942, the plan called for sinking oil wells near Norman Wells, Y. T., and the laying of some 1,000 miles of pipelines. Oil was to be piped to refineries at White Horse, Yukon Territory

The idea was that gasoline would be supplied for the defence of Alaska and for vehicles using the projected road across Canada to Alaska.

Eight-Mile Tunnel For South Africa

Capetown, —(CP)—Work has begun on an eight-mile tunnel—one of the longest in the world—to improve the railway line between Capetown and Johannesburg. Excavations are under way in the Hex River Valley in the Cape Province where some of the most picturesque scenery in South Africa is to be found.

Three other tunnels are to be built and preliminary tunnellings have pierced the Bokkeveld series, in which the first fossils of South Africa geological formation were found. The engineers have already found some fossils which will be examined by experts.

The effect of the four new tunnels will be to straighten out one of the most tortuous lines in the Union. When the tunnels are complete the saving will be equivalent to 13 complete circles which trains at present have to negotiate on their way up and down the Hex River Mountains.

Tin Production Booms in Wales

Cardiff, Wales, — (CP) —Tinplate mills in South Wales are handicapped by labor and material shortages but now mills are coming into operation and production is increasing. Demand still far outstrips supply.

"We have reached a position where, although tinplate may be ordered only for packing foodstuffs, there is a grievous insufficiency even for that," said Sir Robert Barlow, chairman of one company manufacturing containers.

"As a result the canning industry at home, in the Empire and elsewhere is very far from working at normal capacity."

Latest development is a projected hot-strip mill at Port Talbot, to be built by several co-operating firms. Two more cold reduction mills also are planned.

Five mills have restarted at Cardiff and others will open soon.

Big Artesian Basins Boost Water Supply

Sydney, Australia, (CP)— Because rain and rivers are scarce in a large part of Australia, the country augments its water supply by means of nearly 9,000 artesian and sub-artesian bores which yield about 340,000,000 gallons of water a day.

This source of water is most important since two of Australia's largest industries, wool and wheat, depend heavily on water and can be crippled by drought.

Though the area of Australia is about 3,000,000 square miles, about two-thirds of the continent has an average yearly rainfall of less than 20 inches. Big inland lakes are few.

However, the area in which artesian wells are present extends over nearly one-third of the country and one section of it, known as the Great Australian Artesian Basin is said to be the largest discovered.

This big basin alone covers nearly one-fifth of the country extending from the northeast tip nearly 1,500 miles to the south The Northern Territory, and the States of Queensland, New South Wales and South Australia all have a share of it.

There is a second artesian basin covering parts of New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia and a few small ones in West Australia. Their water has been tapped from a depth of 10 feet to 7,000 feet and the flow is in varying quantities. Some yield as much as 1,000,000 gallons a day.

The water is used for domestic purposes, for gardens and stock watering and sometimes is chemically treated when the removal of harmful minerals is necessary.
